1238 Q. Now, in 1894, I understand you to say that there was a contract made; well, before—I will withdraw that question for the present. I will ask you if you know Mr. A. M. Finlay, that is to say, A. M. Finlay who was once vice-president of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Yes, I know him.

Q. Are you familiar with his signature?

A. Yes, I know his signature.

Q. I will ask you to examine this letter and examine particularly the signature, and the entire letter, and then I will ask you a further question. (Hands paper to witness).

A. That's his signature.

Q. I will ask you whose signature that is to that instrument.

A. That is Andrew M. Finlay's.

Q. Former vice-president of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you get this instrument, Mr. Clem?
A. Why, I got that from H. A. Dennett.
Q. Who was he?
A. He was at one time the cashier of the Waters Pierce Oil Company; in 1891 or '92.
Q. At what time?
A. 1891 or '92,—somewhere——
Q. Do you know whether or not Mr. Dennett was the cashier of the Waters Pierce Oil Company at Dallas at the time you engaged in business for yourself there?
A. I don't know whether he was at the time I engaged or not, but during the four years I was in business for myself, he was.
Q. Well, was he the cashier at the date of this letter,—April 28, 1901?
A. Yes, sir.

1239 Mr. BRADY: Well, we offer this letter.
Mr. ODELL: I would like to ask a preliminary question:

Q. You were asked a minute ago by Mr. Brady, if this man Dennett was cashier of the Waters Pierce Oil Company in 1901.

Mr. BRADY: I meant 1891.
Mr. ODELL: What you meant to say was 1891, not 1901?

A. That's the way I understood it, in 1891. I get those dates confused sometimes.

Mr. ODELL: We make the same general objection, Your Honor, that it relates to the Waters Pierce Oil Company in 1891, nine years prior to the organization of the present company, in the first place; in the second place, that the letter is wholly immaterial and irrelevant, and serves no useful purpose in the case, other than that of the possible prejudice to the defendant.
The COURT: The objection is overruled.
Mr. ODELL: We except.
Mr. BRADY (to the jury): Gentlemen, I will read this letter to you at this juncture. (Reads letter dated April 28, 1891, written by A. M. Finlay, Vice President, to H. A. Dennett, Cashier, subject, Eagle Refining Company, Dallas).
Mr. BRADY: There is a stamp here on the corner. (Reads stamped endorsement).

Q. Now, Mr. Clem, there was a contract entered into on the 5th day of October, 1894, between some parties in Ohio, yourself and the Waters Pierce Oil Company, for the purchase of the plant at Dallas, was there not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I notice a clause in there binding the Eagle Refining Company and all the other parties—persons—parties to the contract, prohibiting them, directly or indirectly, to "manufacture," etc.,
1240 down to and including "for a term of fifteen years," was read to the Jury.

Mr. ODELL: We object to the question and to the statement, because the contract is the best evidence of its contents.

The COURT: No question has been asked yet.

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Clem, whether or not that clause in the contract, as well as all other terms of the contract, have or have not been carried out?

Mr. ODELL: We object to his statement as to what is in the contract, for the purpose of predicating his statement, because the contract is the best evidence of its contents.

Mr. BRADY: I suggest that the contract has not only been read and admitted——

Judge PENN: We object to the question further, Your Honor, as leading, as calling for a conclusion or opinion of the witness. As to whether or not the contract has been carried out, depends upon the facts,—what was done under it; and we insist that the witness should be required to state the facts and not his conclusion.

Mr. BRADY: Well, I withdraw the question.

Q. Now, I will ask you Mr. Clem, what business, if any, the Eagle Refining Company did in Dallas and the surrounding territory, or in any of the territories or states, or the Republic of Mexico, during the time, fifteen years, beginning on the first day of October, 1894?

A. That is the old Eagle Refining Company that they bought out?

Q. Well, that included the Dallas plant?

A. They bought their Texas business.

Q. Now, I ask you what business that corporation did, or any of the individuals did, in that territory?

1241 A. Well, the Eagle Refining Company only lasted in business, I think, about six months, or a year after; I think they failed or went into the hands of a Receiver.

Q. That is, the Cleveland concern?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what did the Dallas Eagle Refining Company do, which was engaged in business and which you ran for four years; what business did that concern or any of the other individuals do in those States or in Texas, or in the Republic of Mexico, for fifteen years——?

Mr. ODELL: Now, we object to the question, because it calls for the conclusion and opinion of the witness, in the first place; and, in the second place, it is shown by the answer of the witness that this particular concern failed and went out of business some six or twelve months after the making of this contract, and if they failed it naturally follows that they could not do any business, because its corporate capacity ceased.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Mr. ODELL: We except.

Q. The Eagle Refining Company at Dallas?

A. Yes, sir, that was owned by the Waters Pierce Oil Company and managed by me. Is that the one you have reference to?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Well, that was continued up until December 31, 1903.
Q. December 31, 1903?
A. 1903, yes, sir.
Q. Now, I will ask you to state to the Jury whether or not that business was continued up to December 31, 1903, independent of, or as a part of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. Why, it was a part of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, as a matter of course,—they owned it.
1242 Q. Then, did it perform any business or engage in any business independent of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. What do you mean by "independent of"?
Q. I mean independent of. Did you, as an individual, do any business in this territory named in the contract, on your own account?
A. No, I didn't do any business.
Q. And the Eagle Refining Company at that time,—was it operated as part of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, not in name, but as a fact?
A. Yes, I understood; yes, sir.
Q. Was it operated as a part of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who paid the expenses of the management?
A. They paid the expenses.
Q. The Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who paid your salary?
A. The Waters Pierce Oil Company.
Q. Now, in what name did the Eagle Refining Company continue business until December 31, 1903, in the city of Dallas and surrounding territory?

Mr. ODELL: We object, Your Honor, to the question, for the reason that it assumes that the Eagle Refining Company continued in business, when the facts are shown to be that it was owned by the Waters Pierce Oil Company; they had bought it and this witness was an employé of the Waters Pierce Oil Company.
The COURT: The objection is overruled.
Mr. ODELL: We except.

Q. In what name? Now, answer so the Jury can understand you.
A. That business, you mean?
1243 Q. Yes, sir.
A. It ran in the name of the Eagle Refining Company, that is, all of our stationery and matter was of that nature.
Q. Well, how about the equipment, the warehouse and the tank wagons,—what name was on that?
A. Eagle Refining Company.
Q. Did you pay any taxes during that period of time,—up to December 31, 1903, for the Company?
A. Yes, I paid taxes.
Q. Do you know in whose name those taxes were paid up to and including 1903?

A. Why, the Eagle Refining Company.
Q. That is, upon the property of that company?
A. Yes.
Q. That was taken over by the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you make any reports to anybody in person, or any corporation after the Waters Pierce Oil Company took over your plant in Dallas?
A. After they taken over my plant in 1894?
Q. Yes, sir.
A. Yes, I made daily reports, and weekly reports, and monthly reports, and semi-annual reports, and all kinds of reports.
Q. Now, who did you make these reports to?
A. Well, my sales-report would go to J. P. Gruet, St. Louis.
Q. Now, the other reports?
A. My cash report would go to C. M. Adams, St. Louis; in fact, most of my reports went to J. P. Gruet.
Q. Well, who was J. P. Gruet, and who was C. M. Adams?
A. J. P. Gruet was at that time Secretary of the Waters Pierce Oil Company.
1244 Q. What connection, if any, did Mr. Adams have?
A. He was cashier.
Q. Have you any of those reports with you, or copies of them?
A. I have some copies of the last reports that I sent.
Q. Let me see them please.
A. It was unfinished business and I preserved those; they are the only ones I have, however.
Q. Were those reports for the period of time just before the close of your business, or not; you stated it was "unfinished business"?
A. It may be the last two or three days; it was the winding up; the round-up, you might say, of the Eagle Refining Company; the transfer to the Waters Pierce Oil Company, when they taken the business of the Eagle Refining Company over?
Q. There is one of December 29, 1903,—is that your signature there at the bottom, A. W. Clem?
A. Yes.
Q. There's one of the 31st?
A. That's the last day we did business.
Q. The last day of the company's business. There's one of December 31st——

Mr. ODELL: What year?
Mr. BRADY: All these are of the year 1903.

Q. There is one of December 31, 1903?
A. That is the last cash statement I made.
Q. There is a letter dated January 2nd. What year is that, Mr. Clem?
A. That is 1894.
Q. That is your remittance?
A. Well, yes, that was my remittance.

Q. Enclosing New York draft for the balance of account?
1245 A. Yes, my last remittance; we did no business after the 31st day of December.

Q. I will ask you to examine each of these and see if that is your signature at the bottom of each of those reports, or at the proper place?

A. Those are all my signatures.

Q. Are those correct impression copies of letters that you sent to those officers?

A. Yes, sir, statements—they are not letters.

Q. I mean documents?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You sent them to the officers to whom they are directed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you where you got these from?

A. Where I got the blank forms, you mean?

Q. Where did you get these, I mean. (Exhibiting copies).

A. I taken them out of a private letter-book I have at home.

Q. What did you keep these copies for?

A. Well, that was the wind-up of the business and the final reports of the business, and in order to kinder protect myself, I kept them.

Q. These are in the nature of receipts?

A. Yes, they are in the nature of receipts.

Q. I notice you addressed some of those "Home Office". Mr. Clem, what kind of stationery did you use in corresponding with the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Why, our stationery was all blank; of course, those were printed forms, but the "Home Office" is blank there, perhaps.

Q. Yes, I notice it just says "Home Office". Now, did you have any address stamped on the back of your envelopes, indi-1246 cating from whom this correspondence was coming, that you sent to St. Louis?

A. On the envelope?

Q. Yes.

A. No, I used plain envelopes all the time.

Q. What character of envelopes would they use from the Home Office in transacting business with you?

A. Plain.

Q. Now, I will ask you, Mr. Clem, what became of the equipment and the property of the Eagle Refining Company plant at Dallas after the 31st day of December, 1903, when it closed—when business was closed up, as far as you were concerned?

A. It was transferred to the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Q. What became of you in a business way?

A. Why, they were taking care of me.

Q. Well, where did they put you?

A. They gave me a position over in the office with them, as City Salesman, I believe. I didn't stay long enough to find out what my capacity was; I think, though, it was city salesman, but about the only thing I did was to do some collecting for them.

Q. How long did you stay in their employment?
A. Why, it taken me until the 5th of January to wind up the old Eagle business, and I went in and staid just about a month.
Q. What did you do?
A. What did I do?
Q. Yes, what did you do outside of that?
A. While I was in their employ?
Q. Yes.
A. Why, I didn't do much of anything; I was kinder laying around waiting for instructions.
Q. What finally came of your employment?
A. Why, I resigned,—sent in my resignation and quit.
1247 Q. I will ask you whether or not the drivers you had for your tank wagons went into the employ of the Waters Pierce Oil Company at Dallas?
A. Yes; there was only one driver at the time.
Q. Well, your warehouseman,—the man who was acting as both?
A. Well, at the time we closed, we had only one driver; he acted as both. He went in with them.
Q. What became of your bookkeeper?
A. Why, he was out of a position for two or three weeks, but they give him a position in the general office under Mr. Cahoon, as stock clerk, or something.
Q. Well, he went in the employ of this company on salary?
A. Yes. Now, I understand he went out at the time the Eagle went out, and they give him no employment right then, but they did take him in in about thirty days.
Q. Shortly afterwards?
A. Yes, sir; and the tank-wagon man went over there with me.
Q. How did the Eagle Refining Company come to close up at Dallas on December 31, 1903?
A. Well, Mr. Ackert and Mr. Pierce came through, I think in October; they came to Dallas, and——
Q. What Pierce do you refer to?
A. Well, that's the young Mr. Pierce.
Q. Arthur Clay Pierce?
A. Yes, Arthur Clay Pierce.
Q. And Mr. C. P. Ackert?
A. Yes, sir; and they phoned me to come up to the general office of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, and Mr. Ackert had a talk with me, and they told me they had decided to close up the Eagle Refining Company, because they were making no money, and decided to close up.
1248 Q. Did he give any other reason beside that?
A. I don't think he did. Said they were losing money, and I said I thought so myself; and they said they would give me a position in the office as city salesman, or something to that effect, and said, "You go ahead and wind up the business, preparatory to discontinuing on the first of January;" that was in October, I am pretty sure.

Q. Now, how were the wagons painted after that; do you know whether they were changed after that, or not?

A. Really, I don't know; I guess they was.

Q. Was the business run any more in the name of Eagle Refining Company after that?

A. No, sir.

Q. Any business done at all in that way?

A. None; no, sir.

Q. Mr. Clem, I will ask you how long that business had been a losing business at Dallas before they actually closed it down?

A. Well, as to being a losing business,—I didn't keep any tab on the profits and loss; that was kept in St. Louis.

Q. Well, you made daily reports by which they knew those facts?

A. Yes.

Q. I understood you a while ago to say that Mr. Ackert said to you they concluded to close this plant, because "It is losing money," and you said, "I think so too." On what did you base your statement?

A. Well, as to the amount of business they were doing, of course. We sold, may be, fourteen hundred dollars worth of oil a month, and we had an expense of some five hundred dollars a month; I couldn't see any profit in the business at that.

Q. How long had that condition lasted before Ackert concluded to close it down, and did close it down?

A. Well, it existed for some two or three years, anyway.

1249 Q. Had your expenses been about that ratio, or less or more, for those two or three years?

A. It had been about the same; may be, reduced some.

Q. I will ask you to state, Mr. Clem, whether or not in your reports to the Home Office at St. Louis, or any of the officers to whom you have made—you made reports of the loss of business, or the poor condition of business—what your reports were in that respect, and what reply you received from up there as to whether it was your business or their business.

A. Well, I would get to feeling awful blue, sitting around doing practically nothing, and I would kick, and I said I wanted to do a little more business, and they wrote back that as long as they were satisfied, I ought to be.

Q. Now, I will ask you what trades your business was peculiarly directing to securing during the time they operated the Eagle Refining Company after they purchased it; what trade you were directing your energies towards securing and holding?

A. Well, of course, at the time they bought the Eagle Refining Company out, I had quite a nice trade, and that trade I always tried to hold, but on account of competition and cut prices in the latter part of the year, why I lost a good deal of that trade.

Q. Now, I will ask you the question that I was particularly asking about,—without endeavoring to lead you,—was in reference to the Waters Pierce Oil Company trade and the trade you had previous to that change. Did you use the greater efforts to hold and secure their business, or the business you had had before you sold out?

A. Why, I didn't make any efforts to secure their business.

Q. That's the point I am getting at. You didn't make any efforts to secure their business, but hold your old trade?

A. Yes.

1250 Q. Do you remember when the Division Headquarters were established at Dallas?

A. Division headquarters?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I think they have had a division headquarters there since I have—that is, what they called the North Texas Division—since I have known them.

Q. What I want to get at, is whether Mr. Grice was the division manager at that time?

A. He was the division manager up until 1898.

Q. Mr. Cahoon succeeded him, didn't he?

A. Mr. Cahoon succeeded him.

Q. I will return to the question I was asking you a while ago, in reference to why you were directing your attention to the old trade and didn't attempt to secure any of the Waters Pierce Oil Company trade. I will ask you why that was; upon what you proceeded there?

Mr. ODELL: That calls for a conclusion and opinion, Your Honor, and we object to it for that reason. We ask that he be required to state the fact.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Mr. ODELL: We except.

Q. I will ask you upon what you proceeded in not attempting to get the Waters Pierce Oil Company's business?

A. Why, I assumed they were selling, and it was no use in my making an effort to sell them.

Q. Did you have any other reason?

A. Well, in fact, I was told—I was given to understand that wherever they were selling oil from their tank wagon, they would prefer for me not to.

Q. Now, by whom were you given to understand that as their wishes?

1251 A. By Mr. Pierce himself.

Q. Which Mr. Pierce?

A. Henry Clay Pierce. In our conversation at the time he bought us out, he told me, and also Mr. Finlay told me, wherever I was shipping oil out to points where they had an agent, or delivering oil, why for me to raise my prices, in order to cut me off, in order to save the local freight between those points. For instance, I had customers in Ada, New Mexico, at the time. It cost me six dollars a barrel. I say Ada, New Mexico; Pecos and all up there the rate would be high. Well, they had an agency at Pecos, a station there——

Q. A tank station?

A. Tank station, I presume, or nearby at least. Now, then, it is to their interest to have this agent at Pecos, or some nearby station, to sell this oil and save that local freight from Dallas out there, and I was instructed by Mr. Finlay to raise my prices or something like that, and try to drive this fellow off.

Q. Try to lose the trade you had out there?

A. Try to lose the trade; that's why.

Q. Now, did you carry out this policy in reference to holding the same old trade and not soliciting any of the Waters Pierce Oil Company's, up to the time the company went out of business in 1903?

A. Yes, sir, that was my policy.

Q. Continuously?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Clem, I will ask you to give the Jury your judgment about the percentage of business that the Waters Pierce Oil Company did before it acquired your property in 1894, and what percentage of business it did after it acquired your business, with reference to the total oil business it did in that territory.

1252 Judge PENN: We object to that, Your Honor, because the witness has heretofore stated that he was unable to give the percentage done in that territory before they bought out the business.

The COURT: My recollection is that he said it was three or four per cent.

A. That's what I said.

Judge PENN: I understood him——

A. The remainder was the Waters Pierce Oil Company's. That is the way I meant it.

Q. Now, take the total amount after they purchased your business, up to the time they sold the Eagle Refining Company out,—what was the percentage of total after they acquired your plant,—take the first two years.

Judge PENN: We would like to cross-examine the witness to ascertain whether or not he is competent to answer this question.

(Examination by Judge PENN:)

Q. Well, take it after the Waters Pierce Oil Company——

Mr. BRADY: We object to that, Your Honor, this witness has already testified that the business done by the Waters Pierce Oil Company was all but three or four per cent., and the last question I asked him relates to the time since 1894, and we object to his going back, when the witness has twice answered that he knew the percentage.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Q. Isn't it a mere impression on your part, Mr. Clem, that you are undertaking to give, without knowledge of the facts?

A. That the per cent. of business we did was about four, you mean?

Q. Yes, sir.

1253 A. Well, now, I have some reason to believe that our business was somewhere about three per cent. in the entire State up to the time that the Waters Pierce Oil Company bought the Eagle out.

Q. Now, confine it to after the Waters Pierce Oil Company bought the business of the Eagle Refining Company—do you know what amount of oil was sold in Dallas?

A. No, I don't know.

Q. Have you any approximate idea of it?
A. No, sir; I didn't keep statistics.
Q. In Lancaster?
A. No.
Q. Terrell?
A. No.
Q. Do you know anything about the amount of oil sold in any town around Dallas?
A. No, I don't know anything about the number of gallons.
Q. Were you in any of the towns around there?
A. Was I?
Q. Yes, sir.
A. You mean my business?
Q. Yes, sir; outside of Dallas.
A. Yes, we did business in most all of the towns outside of Dallas.
Q. Were you there personally?
A. Why, I made trips on the road.
Q. Was that done occasionally or frequently?
A. Why, I wasn't on the road all the time.
Q. Do you know anything personally about what amount of oil came into Dallas and surrounding towns in carload shipments at that time, of your own knowledge?
A. Percentage, you mean?
Q. Carloads, shipped in by others than the Waters Pierce Oil Company and the Eagle Refining Company?
1254 A. No, I don't know how many carloads they shipped in. I knew we were taking about forty or fifty thousand gallons——
Q. Isn't it a fact, that you know nothing about what amount of oil was sold in that territory outside of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. I know that there was no other company doing any business to amount to anything; may be sometimes a stray barrel from Houston——
Q. Do you know anything about the carload shipments that came to Dallas and the other territory?
A. There was no carloads coming in about that time.
Q. How do you know?
A. Why, I kept a pretty good tab on the trade, that is, my immediate territory. The fact is, I was doing no carload shipments close around at that time; I had three carloads going to Ardmore, Indian Territory.

Judge PENN: We object, Your Honor; the witness is not shown to have had a sufficient knowledge of the facts to have a——
The COURT: Mr. Clem, you answered a while ago that at the time the Waters Pierce Oil Company bought out the Eagle Refining Company, the Eagle Refining Company was doing three or four per cent. of the business in the Territory named, and the Waters Pierce Oil Company the balance. How did you know those facts?
A. Well, now, as to its being a fact, I couldn't say; I don't know that I stated it to be a fact. It was my opinion, though, that we were doing four per cent. of the business.

The COURT: On what do you base that opinion?

A. On the amount of business that we done.

The COURT: On the amount of the business the Eagle Refining Company did?

A. Yes, sir, at the time that they bought it out.

1255 The COURT: What basis have you for making the comparison between what the Eagle Refining Company did, and what the Waters Pierce Oil Company did; in other words, what information have you as to what the Waters Pierce Oil Company did?

A. I can tell you about what I base my opinion on, if you want to know,—upon what Mr. Pierce told me himself in St. Louis, how much oil I had sold in the State of Texas?

Q. How much oil who had sold?

A. The Eagle Refining Company.

The COURT: Did he tell you how much the Eagle Refining Company sold?

A. He was talking about the business at the time the trade was made. "Now", he says, "you have sold a good deal of oil down there, compared to other companies"; and he went ahead and told me more about my business than I knew myself. He says, "You have sold 2-6/10 per cent. of all the oil sold in Texas in the last two years", or whatever it might be.

Mr. BRADY: What did he say with reference to George Rice, of Ohio?

A. I think he said George Rice, of Ohio, had sold 60/100 per cent., or something like that.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Judge PENN: Defendant excepts.

(Mr. BRADY resumes examination:)

Q. Where did he call for that, in St. Louis?

A. That was in St. Louis the time the trade was made.

Q. He called for a tabulation of the data?

A. He wanted to know how much I had done and was doing now. "To prove this to you", he said, "I will show it to you", and he punched a bell and a boy came in, and he told the boy to get him the tabulations, and the boy brought in the tabulations, and he showed it to me. He had it figured out to a gnat's heel.

1256 Q. What Pierce was that?

A. Mr. H. C. Pierce himself.

Q. Mr. Henry Clay Pierce?

A. Yes, sir. Now, right there upon that statement from him, is what I based my three per cent. business in Dallas on.

Q. From 1894 to 1903 you were in the employ of the Waters Pierce Oil Company during all that time at Dallas, were you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you familiar with the business of the Waters Pierce Oil Company as a competitor, not then as a competitor, but as a former competitor, in a general way?

A. Well, yes. I did my correspondence, however, with the Home Office, but I had no business relations with the local company.

Q. Well, you were an active oil business man at that time, in the employ of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, we don't ask you for accurate figures, Mr. Clem, but state whether or not you have a general knowledge of the conditions in Texas after 1894, and up to 1903, with reference to the oil business, the amount of competition going on, and the approximate amount of business done by the Waters Pierce Oil Company for the entire State.

A. You mean up to date, right up to date?

Q. Up to 1903,—during those nine years; if it varied any, why state it, if you know.

A. Well, after they bought the Eagle Refining Company out in 1904, in 1894, that cleaned up all the competition, you might say, in North Texas.

Q. For about what period of time?

A. Well, one year after that, or about that time, the Wyse Oil Company sprang up at Greenville,—an independent concern.

Q. Yes.

1257 A. And shortly after they had run at Greenville a while, they put in storage tanks at Dallas; then they scattered out pretty much over the State; at Austin, I believe; Ardmore, Indian Territory, and a lot of other towns,—that is, the Wyse Oil Company. I think it was about 1900 that the Southwestern Oil Company came into the field; may be, a little earlier; the Southwestern Oil Company,—they became quite active competitors of the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Q. The Southwestern Oil Company?

A. Yes, sir. They erected storage tanks in almost every town of any size in the State.

Q. Do you have any information as to who the Southwestern was owned by?

A. Well, I can't say that I do. Their home office was in Houston, and they were quite active competitors of the Waters Pierce Oil Company for the last three years I was in business.

Q. That is, from 1900 to 1903?

A. Yes, sir; from 1900 to 1903.

Q. Now, what other competition was there—What other competition was there, Mr. Clem?

A. Well, the Richardson-Gay Oil Company sprang up,—a refinery at Corsicana. I believe that was about the first of 1893, they began business.

Q. 1903?

A. 1903,—a year before we quit business, perhaps.

Q. Where are they located,—at Corsicana?

A. Yes, sir, at Corsicana.

Q. Do they have any refinery of their own?

A. They don't own a refinery; they have it leased, but are operating a refinery, however, and are doing quite a nice business.

Q. I will ask you with reference to the Southwestern Oil 1258 Company; are they doing any business?

A. No, sir; they quit.

Q. Recently sold out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know to whom they sold out?

A. I don't know they sold out to anybody; they just dismantled, that is, their property.

Q. How about their storage tanks in Dallas and other equipment there?

A. That has been standing idle for three or four months, but they sold it out about a month ago.

Q. But for several months they did no business?

A. Yes, they did no business.

Q. And how about the Ira O. Wyse Oil Company; are they any factors in the oil business?

A. None, practically; they have gone into the paint business.

Q. How about the Richardson-Gay; what is their experience, do you know?

A. Why, I don't know that I do; they seem to be doing business.

Q. Well, how much have they done recently?

A. I couldn't tell you how much; but they are doing quite a business.

Q. Now, take all the competition that you have mentioned during the nine years,—state to the Jury what percentage of the business the Waters Pierce Oil Company was doing in Texas during that time.

Judge PENN: I object, Your Honor, that the witness is not qualified to express an opinion on that; he certainly would not be able to express an opinion without he knew the total amount of oil sold in Texas and the amount sold by others than the Waters Pierce Oil Company; that would be necessary for him to arrive at a percentage, and he shows no such knowledge.

1259 The COURT: The objection is sustained.

Q. Well, I will ask you this about the Dallas and the North Texas business; You were in the employ of that company during those nine years. I will ask you if there was any decrease in their business?

A. North Texas and what?

Q. North Texas and around Dallas. You were in the employ of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, or the Central Texas Division, the division in which Dallas is located. I will ask you whether or not there was any decrease in the business, from your knowledge of the affairs of the business?

Judge PENN: We object to that, because the witness has testified that he was not in the general office of the Waters Pierce Oil Company there, and he is not shown to know what amount of business was done by the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

The COURT (to the witness): If you don't know, state you don't know.

A. Why, I don't know, of course.

Q. You remember the reorganization, Mr. Clem, of the Waters Pierce Oil Company in the year 1900?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you to state to the Jury whether or not—what change in the manner of doing business there was, if any, on your part, conducting the Eagle Refining Company after the reorganization of the new company?

A. There was no change at all.

Q. How about the salary that you received, any change in that?

A. None at all.

Q. How about the character of stationery that you used, corresponding to and the correspondence from the St. Louis office?

A. Why, it was the same. Now, I don't know; there may have been some blank reports sent out or something, about re-incorporating or something, but I don't think there was any change in it.

Q. Did you receive any information or instructions from St. Louis in reference to the reorganization, any information about that?

A. No, sir. Well, now I got a little alarmed at the decision in the Supreme Court——

Mr. ODELL: We object to any alarm he had.

The WITNESS: Anyway, I didn't open my door. I talked to my lawyer and he said, better not; and I wired to St. Louis to know what to do and I had a telegram from Mr. Johnson to go ahead.

Q. Which Johnson was that?

A. Mr. Johnson, Judge Johnson.

Q. John D. Johnson?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wired you to go ahead?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, was there any change in the character of business that was done in reference to the trade, after 1900? I asked you the first general question if there was any change in the manner of doing business and you said there was no change. Then I asked you about your stationery, and now I ask you about the trade?

A. Why, there was none; in fact, I received no instructions.

Q. Was there any change in the method of doing business?

A. I didn't see any.

Q. Did you make the same old reports to the company at St. Louis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, where did you get your supplies of oil before they bought you out? I believe you answered that?

A. Yes, sir, I answered that.

Q. Now, after they bought you out——?

1261

A. Well, my oil would come from St. Louis, that is, I would make requisition on Mr. A. M. Finlay, of St. Louis.

Q. Well, how would it come?

A. He would ship it to me in tank cars.
Q. Whose tank cars, what character of cars?
A. The International Tank Cars from St. Louis.
Q. Any others?
A. I don't remember any others.
Q. Did you ever receive any W. P. O. tank cars?
A. I don't think I ever received one.
Q. You know what character of tank cars the Waters Pierce Oil Company was getting at Dallas, the company that was running in that name there?
A. They were getting W. P. O. cars, and Union Tank Line, too, I think.
Q. You know your source of supply with reference to the refinery; you know where it came from, the oil?
A. It was billed out from St. Louis.
Q. How about any change in your source of supply with reference to any refinery in Texas?
A. After the Corsicana refinery finally got in operation, we received our oil from Corsicana.
Q. About when was that, the year, you remember?
A. Really I don't remember right now; I can't tell; somewhere in '96 or '97.
Q. Something like two or three years after they bought you out?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know who the manager of that business was at Corsicana, who the person was?
A. We would get our bills of lading from A. Angus; he 1262 was agent of the Waters Pierce Oil Company.
Q. He was agent at Corsicana?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you get your entire supply from the Corsicana refinery?
A. I think so, after that; I don't remember ever getting a tank car from anywhere else.
Q. What kind of tank cars was it shipped in?
A. U. T. L. tank cars.
Q. What do you mean by U. T. L.?
A. Union Tank Line.
Q. Union Tank Line cars?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You have been in business for the last couple of years for yourself, haven't you?
A. Last three years.
Q. Mr. Clem, I will ask you to state to the jury whether or not in your oil experience, operating the Eagle Refining Company for them previous to their purchase or since you have been in the business yourself, alone or for yourself, you have met in competition the Security Oil Company or the Corsicana Oil Refining Company, in dealing with the trade?
A. I never met with them at all. Now, in reference to the Security Oil Company, I might say that they have quoted me prices that I asked for.

Q. Well, to whom did you send the request for prices?

A. Which request for prices—why, I wrote to the Security Company to quote me prices on oil. Of course, I didn't expect any favorable answer much.

Q. Well, when was that?

A. That was in '94.

Q. '94?

1263 A. 1904.

Q. That was after the Eagle Refining Company had gone out of business?

A. Yes, sir; I wrote the Security Oil Company, and they wrote me back that they didn't have any tank car equipments and couldn't wuote us prices. I wrote them I would furnish our own tank cars, and they didn't answer that letter. And last year I wrote them for prices on naphtha, and they quoted me about market price I was selling in Dallas.

Q. When was that?

A. Last year.

Q. You remember whether that was before this suit was filed or after this suit was filed?

A. I don't remember, no sir.

Q. You remember what price they quoted you with reference to the prevailing price at Dallas?

Judge PENN: We object to that as irrelevant and immaterial, the act of a third party not a party to this suit and not a party that this defendant is shown to have any connection with.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Judge PENN: We except.

Q. (Question read). On naphtha?

A. Well, they quoted me two cents above other refineries.

Q. Above the Corsicana refinery?

A. No, sir, at two cents above the Gulf Refinery, from whom I had been getting our naphtha.

Q. Did you buy any oil or naphtha or lubricating oils from the Security Oil Company?

A. No, sir, they were two cents above the market.

1264 Q. Mr. Clem, what knowledge have you in reference to the number of refineries doing business in Texas and the extent of the product that they turn out at their refineries?

A. I have no knowledge of the extent of their product.

Q. What is the capacity of these refineries that are operating in Texas, do you know?

A. I don't know the capacity of them.

Q. Do you know the comparative amount of oil that they turn out and the nature of refined oils in Texas outside of the Security and Corsicana refineries, their production and their capacity, compared to the capacity of the others?

A. No, sir, I couldn't answer that correctly.

Q. You have no information in the course of your business that you could give an answer fairly accurate on that?

A. No, sir, I don't think I have.

Mr. BRADY: Gentlemen, we offer in evidence all of these copies of letters and reports. (Hands counsel for defendant tissue paper press copies of letters and reports.

Judge PENN: If the Court please, we object to these reports, statements, etc., that are offered here, on the ground that they are irrelevant and immaterial and uselessly encumber the record in this case, the witness having testified that during this time he was in the employ of the Waters Pierce Oil Company he made reports to them of the business transacted by him, as an agent ordinarily would do, and these reports I can't see shed any light on any subject under investigation in this case. We think that the whole matter shown by these reports has been briefly stated by the witness, a shorthand rendition of the facts with reference to them, and we think this will unnecessarily encumber the record to that extent. It is rather a large record anyway.

1265 Mr. BRADY: We don't regard them, in view of Mr. Clem's testimony identifying them, and the statement of counsel that they have sent these reports to St. Louis, that there is any special importance to them, and we will, in the interest of economy and time, with-draw them ourselves.

Cross-examination.

(By Mr. ODELL:)

Q. Where was the home office of the Eagle Refining Company, Mr. Clem? At the date of the execution of this contract about which you have testified?

A. Cleveland, Ohio.

Q. You know when that company was organized?

A. No, sir, I don't.

Q. Well, how long had you been connected with them?

A. Well, I had been connected with them five years, four or five.

Q. Were you an officer of the company?

A. No, sir, I was no way connected with them; I mean connected; I was connected with them in a business way.

Q. In other words, you were an agent for them in the State of Texas?

A. Well, an agent you might say; I was really buying my oil from them and selling it, but running it in their name.

Q. That is to say, you were a marketing agent for them?

A. Yes, sir, I was a marketing agent for them.

Q. You did business in their name in Texas and bought all of your oil from them?

A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Q. Now, in '94 you sold your marketing agency to the Waters Pierce Oil Company, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And went out of business?

A. Went out of business?

1266 Q. Yes.

A. Well, I continued business, you know.

Q. I understand.

A. Of course, I went out of business and went on a salary; I went out of my own business.

Q. After the execution of this contract you ceased to do business on your own account and entered the service of the Waters Pierce Oil Company on a salary, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And sold oil for the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You received your oil from them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And under instructions from them you sold the oil?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As I understand your testimony, the name of the concern was continued; in other words, it was used for the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Yes, sir, it was continued,—the name was, and the business.

Q. And instead of getting oil from Cleveland, Ohio, or sending requisitions there for oil, you made requisition direct on the Waters Pierce Oil Company, at St. Louis?

A. Yes, on Mr. A. M. Finlay.

Q. On Mr. A. M. Finlay; well, he was with the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They filled the requisition?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understand from your testimony that you didn't undertake to secure the trade of those people who were dealing with the Waters Pierce Oil Company's agency in Dallas?

1267 A. No, sir, I made no effort to secure that at all.

Q. You made an effort to hold the trade of your old customers?

A. Yes, sir, I tried to hold them.

Q. And you continued that for several years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in 1903, I believe you say Mr. Ackert came down to see you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And suggested to you the business wasn't profitable?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And arranged to close it out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You proceeded to do so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Ackert told you that when the business was closed he would give you employment as city salesman?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he did so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they pay you from '94 to 1903, Mr. Clem?

A. '94?

Q. From 1894 up to 1903, what was your salary?

A. Why, I had an original contract with them for three years at $250.00 a month: when that contract expired, I wrote to them voluntarily reducing my salary $500.00 a year. They wrote me back that they hadn't been thinking of closing the business, or something, but they had been thinking of reducing the expenses, and they, of course, accepted my reduction of $500.00 a year, and said they would just go ahead that way until they otherwise advised or something. I remained there on a salary of $2500.00 up until the 31st of December '93.

Q. 1903, you mean?

1268 A. Yes, sir, I get those mixed. They cut it down $500.00 as salesman.

Q. Now, under your original contract, made in 1894, you received $3000.00 a year for three years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. After that you received $2500.00 a year until the 31st of December, 1903?

A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Q. And when you accepted employment as city salesman, they reduced that to $2000.00 a year?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You remained with them about a month?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And left the service of the company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you remember the suit against the Waters Pierce Oil Company in '97?

A. At Waco?

Q. Waco and Austin.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You remember that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you testify at Austin?

A. When?

Q. In 1897.

A. No, I didn't come to Austin in '97.

Q. You- deposition was taken?

A. Well, my deposition, I think so, taken probably in Dallas.

Q. Well, I know, but it was taken for this case at Austin?

A. Yes, sir, I think so.

Q. You testified at Waco in 1896, didn't you, Mr. Clem, or '95?

1269 A. 1906, I think.

Q. Oh, you mean 1896, don't you?

A. I remember that time, yes, sir; I testified there.

Q. Very well, you testified fully about the Eagle Refining Company, didn't you?

A. Why, I think I answered such questions as were asked me; I don't think I went into details.

Q. You testified to your contract, didn't you?

A. I think so, yes, sir.

Q. Then, there has been no concealment of the relations between the Waters Pierce Oil Company and the Eagle Refining Company, as evidenced in this contract, since your testimony at Waco in the Hathaway case, has there?

A. I don't think there has, no, sir.

Q. Of course, that was known; it was published in the newspapers?

A. Of course, and at the same time there are a great many people that don't read the newspapers, and I didn't make it my duty to go out and tell them of this.

Q. Well, everybody that did read the newspapers and wanted to know who owned your business there, they knew it, didn't they?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who you were carrying on that business for?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Long prior to the organization of this present company?

A. Organization of 1900, you refer to?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, sir; that was in 1896, I think.

Q. Four years before the organization of this company; and now, how long did you say that it was your opinion that your business at Dallas was being conducted at a loss?

A. That my business was being conducted at a loss?

1270 Q. Yes, business that you were conducting there?

A. Really, now, as to the business being conducted at a loss, I would assume that it was; I didn't know that the business was conducted at a loss. I had no way of telling what their oils cost them. I knew what the expenses there was. It may be that they could have sold 10,000 gallons of oil and made something, and, of course, I kept no record of profit and loss of the business.

Q. Then, as a matter of fact, you don't undertake to say the business was conducted at a loss, do you?

A. I wouldn't say it was; I didn't know.

Q. Now, you spoke of selling a carload of oil at Lancaster shortly before this contract was made, before you sold out to the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. That was three years before I sold; that was in '90, '91, may be, '90 or '91.

Q. Who did you sell to?

A. Sold that to a merchant by the name of Johnson, M. B. Johnson.

Q. You entered into a contract with M. B. Johnson, by which he would take a carload of oil and you wouldn't sell to any one else at Lancaster?

A. Well, that was his request; it wasn't a contract, don't know as it was a contract.

Q. Well, you acceded to it, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir; I went in there, and Mr. Johnson says——

Q. I don't want to argue the question with you, just answer the question.

Mr. BRADY: We submit the witness has a right to explain it now at this time; he was starting to give an explanation.

The COURT: Just answer the questions. Any explanations you desire to make, counsel can call for it.

1271 A. Well, there are only two or three merchants in the town, and he asked me not to sell to anybody else there.

Q. And you didn't do it?

A. No, sir; I just taken his order and went on to Waxahachie.

Q. Now, the Waters Pierce Oil Company they came in and sold to the other merchants that you wouldn't sell to; that is what you stated, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir, I suppose they did.

Q. Well, didn't you state so?

A. I know they did.

Q. You testified you knew they did?

A. Yes, sir, they sold it.

Q. Well, they couldn't get oil from you, could they?

A. They couldn't get oil at the price they were selling it for.

Q. Couldn't get it from you at all?

A. No, sir, because I didn't have a storage in Dallas.

Q. Well, you had an agreement with Mr. Johnson not to sell to anybody else there, didn't you?

A. I would have sold to other people in town, if I had a storage at Dallas.

Q. Well, you agreed not to do it?

A. Well, that was the understanding between Mr. Johnson and I, that he would take a carload of the oil.

Q. Then the other merchants couldn't get any unless they bought it from the Waters Pierce Oil Company, could they?

A. Well, I don't know where they could have bought it from, unless they bought it from Johnson.

Q. Yes, they either had to buy it from Johnson, or the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. They might have bought it from Johnson, because that was Johnson's idea in buying it, so he told me, that he was buy-

1272 ing it to supply the rest of them.

Q. He was buying it from you and going into the wholesale business to supply the other fellow, but in the meantime the Waters Pierce Oil Company they came in and they sold to the other people?

A. Well, they were selling them anyway, had been selling them all the time.

Q. I understand. Now, I want to go back to the Eagle Refining Company a minute. When this contract was made for the sale of your business to the Waters Pierce Oil Company, the Eagle Refining Company went out of business in about six months, didn't it?

A. I don't remember the time exactly; I know it went out of business; I think though in about six months, may be in the spring or summer of '95.

Q. They failed in business?

A. I understood that they failed.

Q. And the corporation ceased to exist?

A. Yes.

Q. And there was no such thing then in fact as the Eagle Refining Company after 1895, was there?

A. No, sir.

Q. You just simply retained the name of the Eagle Refining Company as a marketing agent for the Waters Pierce Oil Company, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, this cashier that you testified about this morning, what was his name?

A. Dennett.

Q. Where does he live?

A. Lived in Dallas; I don't know where he lives now. He was in Houston last I heard from him.

Q. When did you hear from him last?

A. Been a couple of months ago, I suppose, about that; I 1273 met him in Dallas, and he told me he was working in Houston,—was going to Houston that night.

Q. When did you get this letter from him?

A. I got that letter some time last winter, I think.

Q. Where was he at the time?

A. He first showed me that letter in my office.

Q. Last winter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was his business at that time?

A. He was kinder of a car clerk at the T. & P.—at the M. K. & T.; he wasn't car clerk, but he was—anyway, some position, he walks on the track and takes the numbers of the cars.

Q. Call him "number grabber", don't they?

A. Number tramp or something, and my office is right on the M. K. & T., and he come up the track one cold morning and showed me that letter.

Q. What was he showing you the letter for?

A. Well, he thought it might interest me, and it would, because I could get up quite a collection of those, if I had kept things of that kind, and I don't know but what I might want to write a book some day.

Q. Did you ever write one?

A. No, sir; I am no author at all.

Q. Not trying to be a Lawson in the book business, are you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is that the only letter he showed you?

A. He told me he had some other good ones, but I didn't insist on them. He give me that to frame, he said.

Q. And he had some others?

A. Yes, sir, he had others.

Q. He told you that he stole them from the company?
1274 A. He didn't tell me how he got them.

Q. You knew he stole them from his employer?

A. It is addressed to him, I think, personally,—Mr. H. A. Dennett; I think it is a personal letter to Mr. Dennett; that is the way I construed it.

Q. Didn't you construe it to be in the course of his employment?
A. Yes, sir, that is the meaning of it.
Q. Did he want you to pay him something for the letter?
A. Yes, sir; I gave him $2.50, I think, for the letter.
Q. Two dollars and a half?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, what was the rate of the others that he had?
A. Well, he said that he had some other good ones.
Q. Have any price on them?
A. No, sir.
Q. He just wanted $2.50 for this?
A. Two and a half or five dollars; I don't remember what the price was.
Q. Two and a half or five dollars, you say?
A. Yes, sir, one or the other.
Q. Wasn't it five dollars.
A. I don't know if you aren't about right; believe it was five dollars I paid him for it.
Q. Five dollars instead or two and a half?
A. I wanted it for my files.
Q. He didn't name any price for the others?
A. Oh, I don't know about that.
Q. Well now, Mr. Clem, didn't he put a price on the others?
A. No, he told me he had a lot of other letters.
Q. Would like to sell them?
A. Said he had some other good ones or something; I never told him I wanted to look over them at all.
1275 Q. And he never brought them to you?
A. No, sir.
Q. Never did show you a one of them?
A. I don't think he ever did, no, sir; he walked by my office every morning taking his car numbers and he happened to have the letter in his pocket; in fact, I overtaken him on the road and he pulled this letter out and says, "Here's a rich thing; you ought to have this to frame"; and I didn't pay much attention to it, but a day or two afterwards he dropped in, and I asked him for the letter, and he says, "It is worth money to you", and finally I bought it from him. I think he owed me something anyway; I think he owed me $2.50 borrowed money, and I gave him $2.50 in cash.
Q. And canceled the debt?
A. Yes, sir, and he owes me something yet; I guess I will take the rest of the letters.
Q. Take the rest of the debt out in letters?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You say he dropped into your office on a cold morning?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Didn't you state a minute ago that you caught up with him out grabbing the numbers?
A. Well, I did overtake him on the road and he showed me this letter; I don't think he dropped in that day, but he would drop in every morning and get warm; we would have a good fire in my office by his trail, and he would drop in, and I believe about the second morning after he showed me this letter he dropped in again, and there was someone in the office, and I asked him, I says, "Let's see that letter".

Q. Did you read it when he showed it to you?

A. I think so, yes, sir.

Q. Out on the track?

A. I think I read it.

1276 Q. Did you suppose he was carrying it around in his pocket when you asked him to let you see it again when he dropped in?

A. Well, he had it in his pocket.

Q. Did he tell you he had it, or did you just suppose he had it?

A. Well, he dropped in to get warm, and there was another man interested with me in the business and I said, "Dennett, have you got that letter with you," I says, "here is another man wants to read it."

Q. Who was the other man interested?

A. His name was Brown.

Q. Interested in what business?

A. Interested in my business, Clem Oil Company. And he showed Mr. Brown and I the letter, but I had seen the letter the morning—a day or two or week before in Dennett's hands when I was walking with him up the track.

Q. Who did you show the letter to first?

A. I don't know; I taken it home and put it in a little tin box there where I keep a lot of important letters, etc.; don't know as I showed it to anyone.

Q. Well, did you ever show it to any one?

A. Yes, sir, I have shown it.

Q. Well, who to first?

A. I don't know who first; one or two of my oil friends, Oriental Oil Company, have read it, that is, Smith; I remember showing it to him?

Q. Anyone else?

A. I may have shown it to a dozen people; I don't think, though, I have.

Q. When did you come to town, Mr. Clem,—Austin?

A. I dropped in here this morning about eight o'clock, I think.

Q. First time you have been here during the trial of this case?

1277 A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who requested you to come?

A. Mr. Lightfoot; Mr. Lightfoot requested me, that is, he asked me if I would come without being brought down here.

Q. You knew you couldn't be brought here in a civil case, didn't you?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. You didn't know that?

A. No, that is news to me. I thought I would have to come if they summoned me.

Q. And you live in Dallas?

A. Yes, sir. I don't know much about the law and lawyers, but he asked me if I would come.

Q. How much you being paid?

A. Me?

Q. Yes, you.

A. I haven't got nothing yet.

Q. How much you going to get?

A. I think he ought to give me my car fare.

Q. That all?

A. Well, I believe I get a dollar a day here as a witness.

Q. That is all you are going to get?

A. Yes, sir, that is all; I ain't going to get another penny, and I don't know whether I will get that or not.

Q. Now, in carrying on the business of this company at Dallas you had letter impression books, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You kept in those books your requisitions that you sent to the company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you tear these leaves out of that book for 1278 when you left the service of this company; they had paid you everything they owed you, hadn't they?

A. Well, I will tell you; I didn't tear them out of their book. If you will look at that, that is the reports that the Eagle Refining Company made to the home office. For instance, on December 31st, there is a transfer of the iron barrels. I was responsible for them, and we were bound by it and I kept those copies in case of anything that might come up afterwards.

Q. You had a receipt for what property you turned over, didn't you?

A. Receipts may have come later; I don't know about that; I don't remember.

Q. Didn't you check the property over to the man who received them?

A. Well, I checked it, but there is the inventory of the iron barrels.

Q. Didn't you get a receipt for that property when you turned it over?

A. I may, but I don't know whether I have or not; if I have, it isn't itemized like this is.

Q. Now, you tore those pages out of that copy book, didn't you?

A. I cut these out of the book Sunday morning; I have got that book at home. It is a personal book of my own, you might say.

Q. You say that it is a personal book of yours?

A. There is some of the company business in it, but half of it is personal letters of my own.

Q. Why, the company bought the book, didn't they?

A. I don't know about that.

Q. Don't you know you charged it up to them?

A. No, I don't think that I did; I think that is a book of my own.

Q. Why didn't you copy those reports in the book that you ordinarily copied them in?

A. Because I wanted to keep all these reports, because the 1279 last reports that I made acted as a voucher and receipt against anything that might come up.

Q. When you left the service of this company you deliberately kept this book for the purpose of some future use, isn't that the truth?

A. No, sir, it is not, except as stated,—to protect me against anything that might come up.

Q. What were you expecting to come up?

A. Well, if you will notice on that, you will notice about two or three hundred iron barrels that I am responsible for; that is itemized; it gives the number of the barrel, the date it went, who owned it at that time; now, something might come up in future years about that, maybe two or three years. Now, turn here, this barrel, No. 202, I have my records here and can tell who had that barrel.

Q. You can tell what became of iron barrel No. 202, which you have a receipt for?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you still say that this book was a book in which you recorded your personal business as distinguished from the company's?

A. Yes, sir, part of it is, and in fact, half of it or more.

Q. There isn't a letter in the book that you didn't write to the company, is there?

A. Not a letter in that book?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, sir; there is only one or two letters in there to the company.

Q. You didn't have any other business except the company's business, did you?

A. I had some personal letters; I correspond with other people sometime outside of the company.

Q. And keep copies of your letters?

A. Yes, sir.

1280 Q. Put them in the same book with the company's letters?

A. I had put these in my book, not the company's book; put them in my book; I consider that personal business, those last reports, because when the Eagle Refining Company taken its flight all business relations or correspondence ceased between the home office and the A. W. Clem Company. Now, I preserved those there in case the auditor should come around and say that here is seven or eight hundred dollars which you ought to have on June 30th; what have you done with it. I have got those to show I sent it in. It is the only pay records that I kept there because I was responsible to the company for everything, and in that, if you will examine it, you will find it is a general inventory of everything turned over, and I kept it to protect myself.

Q. Well, if you kept it for that purpose, what did you cut it out and bring it down here for?

A. Well, I knew I would be questioned about the character of reports I made up there and the question has been asked me what character of reports we made to St. Louis.

Q. You knew what was going to be asked you?

A. Well, I supposed it would be; it has been asked me.

Q. Why didn't you bring the book and not mutilate it?

A. The book is too large to carry in my pocket, and I didn't think it amounted to much, and in fact as evidence it hasn't, as far as that is concerned. That is why, and now if you want to know the character of reports that we made to the home office, there they are right there, every one of them.

Q. Well, you just made reports of the business, did you?

A. Cash sales and cash sales reports.

Q. I understood you to say this morning that you were entitled to a profit of three cents a gallon on your oil?

A. Entitled to it?

Q. Yes, that is the very language you used.

1281 A. I may have said that a man can't market oil for less than three cents unless he does an enormous business.

Q. Didn't you say you were entitled to a profit of three cents a gallon?

A. Yes, I think I did. I ought to have that.

Q. And you got mad at the Waters Pierce Oil Company because you were not getting it, didn't you?

A. Because I wasn't doing what?

Q. Not getting three cents a gallon profit.

A. You mean originally, way back yonder?

Q. Yes, that is what you first got mad about?

A. No, I didn't get mad at them about that; of course, their manner of competition made me hot, or whatever you want to call it; don't know that I got mad.

Q. Just got hot?

A. Well, whenever you go into a town and sell a carload of oil at their prices and come back and find the merchants all kicking at the price and backing out, and they are retailing five cents less than you are selling it, it is enough to make a man feel hot.

Q. Well, you did have that kind of feeling toward them?

A. I guess I did, of course, in those days.

Q. You have sorter kept it up, haven't you?

A. I don't know; I left the Waters Pierce Oil Company with a kind feeling toward them, when I quit them; I sent my resignation to them and left them with the intention of being good.

Q. Being good?

A. And I have been pretty good to them.

Q. You still have a kind feeling toward them, have you?

A. Kind feeling toward them?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't know about that. I sympathize with them when they get into trouble, of course.

1282 Q. You went around helping work this case up, didn't you?

A. This case here?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't think I did.

Q. You went to see a lawyer in Dallas, didn't you, Etheridge?

A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't go to see him?
A. No, sir.
Q. Certain of that?
A. No, sir, I didn't.
Q. Who was it, then, that you went to see, which lawyer?
A. I didn't go to see any lawyer about working up this suit against the Waters Pierce Oil Company. When I resigned my position with the Waters Pierce Oil Company and left there, I left with a kind feeling towards all of them.
Q. Didn't you go to see Etheridge and tell him what you knew about this case?
A. You are thinking about the Bailey business.
Q. I am asking about what you told him about this Waters Pierce Oil Company business?
A. Well, Etheridge told them about me in a speech over there at Waxahachie, that is all; only he didn't know what he was talking about, because he used my name in a way that there was evidently a mistake.
Q. Well, you talked to him?
A. Well, he came to see me and had an interview with me.
Q. Did you show him any letter?
A. I was just thinking; I don't remember showing him any letters. Now, let's see——
Q. Did you show him this Dennett letter?
A. No, I didn't show him the Dennett letter; I don't think I did; there was some newspaper clippings I showed Etheridge.
1283 Q. You told us why you made a copy of these reports. Now, what did you bring that letter along for?
A. Why, Mr. Lightfoot had that letter for some time.
Q. When did you give it to him?
A. I think I mailed it to him some time ago.
Q. About how long ago?
A. Why, some two or three months ago.
Q. What did you mail it to him for?
A. Why, Mr. Lightfoot was up there to see me and he asked me for information, and I gave him what I knew.
Q. I thought you said you hadn't had any interest in this case, but had a very kind feeling toward the company and sympathized with it.
A. I said I left them with a kind feeling.
Q. Didn't you say you still had it and sympathized with it? Well, now the truth of the matter is, you gave him that letter, hoping it would have some effect in this case, didn't you?
A. Well, I guess I did, yes.
Q. All right; how many oil companies you say are doing business in Dallas now?
A. Why, there is about four or five.
Q. What are they?
A. Independent Oil Company.
Q. How long has it been there?

A. About a month, I think; that is lubricating business only. Ira O. Wyse Oil Company.

Q. How long has it been in business there?

A. For seven or eight years, may be ten years; ten years, I guess. They are not doing much in their refined or lubricating oils; they sell paint mostly.

Q. What other company?

A. Oriental Oil Company.

Q. How long have they been in business there?

1284 A. They have been in business about five years.

Q. They are lubricating and refined oils?

A. They don't do much refined oil business in the city.

Q. They lubricate a good deal?

A. They lubricate a good deal, yes; they do a good lubricating business, and refined oils, they are doing quite a refined oil business outside of the city, but they run no wagons.

Q. Now, the next company?

A. Let's see; why the Clem Oil Company you know; they are doing some business there yet.

Q. How long have you been in business there?

A. In February, 1894, I believe we went in business,—1904, I mean; I get those things mixed, confused.

Q. Now, let's see, there is the Ira O. Wyse Oil Company, Independent Oil Company; the Clem Oil Company, and the Oriental Oil Company; four companies that have been operating in Dallas independently of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, and most of them for several years?

Mr. ALLEN: We object to that; he hasn't said they operate independently of the Waters Pierce Oil Company. No witness has testified they are operating independently of the Waters Pierce Oil Company. They may run under an alias, just like these others.

The COURT: The attorney may ask the question.

Q. They are operating independently, aren't they?

A. Of course, I only have an opinion.

Q. Well, that is your opinion?

Mr. BRADY: We object to his stating his opinion.

A. So far as I am concerned, I know I am independent; but the others,—they would have to speak for themselves.

Q. Most of your testimony has been an opinion, hasn't it?

A. Well, I think most of my opinions have been ruled out.

1285 Q. Well, who is president of the Oriental Oil Company?

A. Man by the name of Coppish.

Q. He lives in Dallas?

A. Yes, sir, in the drug business there.

Q. Richardson & Gay, don't they do business in Dallas?

A. We buy quite a lot of oil from Richardson & Gay in tank cars; they are doing no business in Dallas; they do some business there, some lubricating business.

Q. The Gulf Refining Company, they do business there, don't they?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Haven't they a plant there?
A. They have no plant in Dallas.
Q. The Richardson-Gay people have?
A. No, sir; not in Dallas.
Q. How many of those companies have plants there?
A. All of those that I have mentioned have warehouses and storage tanks; that is what you have reference to when you say plants?
Q. Yes; have tank wagons?
A. We are the only ones that are operating tank wagons.
Q. How many tank wagons have you?
A. We have two and sometimes three; sometimes run three.
Q. The Southwestern Oil Company operated there for a long time didn't it?
A. Yes, sir, they operated there up until about the first of the year, that is, they closed down about the first.
Q. Well, they operated there for several years in Dallas, didn't they?
A. Yes, sir, they operated there for several years.
Q. Where was your office in Dallas from 1900 up until December, 1903, Mr. Clem?
A. From 1900?
Q. Yes, sir.
A. To 1903?
Q. Yes.
1286 A. Why, I was in the south part of town, South Dallas.
Q. Have any sign?
A. Yes, we had a sign.
Q. What was it?
A. Part of the time,—well all of the time.
Q. What was it?
A. "A. W. Clem, Agent of the Waters Pierce Oil Company."

Redirect examination.

(By Mr. BRADY:)

Q. You say you had a sign, Mr. Clem?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Just tell the Jury how big that sign was?
A. Why, it was about six by thirty, I guess; two and a half long, about that long (indicating), six inches wide, six or eight inches.
Q. And two and a half or three feet long?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where did you hang that sign?
A. Well, that was put——
Q. Where was it hung with reference to the creek?
A. That was first put on the back of the office and somebody knocked it down or it got tore away some way another, and then it was put up back of the warehouse.
Q. Now, back of the office where it was first hung, was there any public street running along there?

A. No, there was no public street there; I believe there was a railroad.

Q. Railroad track?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was over in South Dallas?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Near that creek that you spoke about this morning?

A. Yes, sir.

1287 Q. On your direct examination; now, in that isolated place; don't the back of the warehouse and office front on that creek?

A. The back of it backs down into a hollow, yes.

Q. And you hung that sign back there after it was knocked down from the front office, you hung it back there on the creek?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Two and a half inches wide and two and a half feet long or three feet long?

A. Yes, sir. There is a street car there that this sign could have been read from.

Q. How far is that?

A. About a block.

Q. How large are those letters on that sign; can you designate on that paper about the size of them? Fold it so as to make it about the size. (Handing witness blank sheet of paper, which witness folds.)

A. The "A. W. Clem" was in two inch letters, I should guess.

Q. How large was the "Agent W. P. O."?

A. That was about one inch letters.

Q. Very nicely ornamented?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The "A. W. Clem" was in two inch letters and the "Agent Waters Pierce Oil Company" about an inch?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that street car ran a block off?

A. It was hardly a block; half a block, may be three fourths of a block; they could see the "A. W. Clem" I think, from the car all right; I don't know about the other.

Q. You were asked the question, Mr. Clem, whether you helped get up this case. I will ask you whether or not you testified with reference to this contract with the Waters Pierce Oil Company in '97, nine years before this suit was filed?

1288 A. Yes, sir, I testified; I know they swore me all the way from Austin to Washington. I hope they will get through with it.

Q. You talked to Mr. Lightfoot when he came to Dallas to see you about this matter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you whether you hunted Mr. Lightfoot up, or he hunted you up, about this matter?

A. He hunted me up.

Q. You were question- about your expenses down here and about what interest you had in this case. You stated you hoped to get your traveling expenses back. I will ask you in addition to that, to state whether or not you have been promised anything, directly or indirectly in connection with this case?

A. No, sir; nothing whatever.

Q. In the result of this suit you have any direct or indirect interest in a money way?

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Now, you stated there were one or two company letters in that copy book that you have there at home, letters of the Waters Pierce Oil Company. Have you ever used that book in connection with this case at all, except to bring those copies down here?

A. No, sir; I have not.

Recross examination.

(By Mr. ODELL:)

Q. This sign you spoke of, Mr. Clem, who did you get instructions from about that sign?

A. That was sent me by instructions from St. Louis. Mr. H. C. Pierce sent it; wrote me a letter himself.

Q. You remember the date of the letter?

A. I do not, no, sir; I turned over all my letters and everything to the company when I quit business.

Q. Wrote you a letter to put the sign up?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did it?

A. Yes, sir.

1289 C. W. CAHOON, a witness for the State, testified as follows:

Examination by Mr. BRADY:

Q. Your name is C. W. Cahoon?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Cahoon?

A. Dallas, Texas.

Q. What position, if any, do you occupy with the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Manager of the Central Texas Division.

Q. How long have you been employed by the Company in that capacity?

A. Since January 1, 1903, I think.

Q. January 1, 1903?

A. In that capacity, yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been with the company altogether?

A. About nineteen years.

Q. Previous to 1903, what positions did you occupy, and where?

A. I entered the service of the company in 1888 as a stenographer, at Galveston, and remained there a year; and then spent four years in Houston as agent. From there I was transferred to Dallas and held the position of chief clerk, traveling salesman, assistant manager, and manager.

Q. And since 1903 you have been occupying the position of manager of the Division?

A. That is my recollection, yes sir.

Q. How long have you been at the Dallas office?

A. Since April '93, as I recollect it.

Q. April, 1893?

A. Yes sir.

Q. What territory does the Central Texas Division extend through?

A. North, Central and a great part of West Texas.

1290 Q. No regular uniform line dividing that Division from the others?

A. Hardly, no sir; it would be rather difficult to——

Q. Well, what other Divisions are there in Texas?

A. South Texas Division, headquarters at Houston.

Q. There are now only two Divisions in the State?

A. Yes sir.

Q. The Central and South Texas Divisions?

A. Yes, sir. I would state that there is a small part of East Texas that is handled through Shreveport.

Q. That is known as the Louisiana and East Texas Division, isn't it?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Mr. Littlefield the manager?

A. He was, yes sir.

Q. Is he now?

A. No sir.

Q. How long since he ceased to be manager of the Louisiana and East Texas Division?

A. I don't know the date.

Q. He is present in the city now, isn't he?

A. Yes sir.

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Clem, to what extent you gather statistics of information for the home office in St. Louis, of your own and competitors' business?

A. I don't understand what you mean.

Q. I say to what extent do you gather statistics of the business of your own company and competing companies for the use of the St. Louis office?

A. I keep an absolutely correct record of our own sales, and as much information as our agents and salesmen provide me with in regard to the others.

1291 Q. How often do you report and in what manner do you report your own business to the St. Louis office?

A. We report daily.

Q. Daily sales?

A. No, we report our sales monthly.

Q. Well, what character of daily reports do you make to the St. Louis office?

A. At the present time, a daily cash report; there are some other minor reports that I don't recall.

Q. Now, to what extent do your agents and employés, subordinates, I think you use the term, furnish you with information of competitive companies, competitive shipments or competitive receipts, in your territory?

A. They furnish me with all the information they gather as they cover their territory.

Q. Is that a frequent matter or infrequent, daily or otherwise?

A. Receive daily reports from all of them.

Q. In reference to competitive shipments?

A. Not necessarily; principally in regard to their own sales.

Q. Well, I mean with reference to competitive shipments, how often do you receive information in regard to competitive sales?

A. The information in regard to competitive sales are mailed inside of their reports; that is a secondary matter, however.

Q. Well, whatever information you require, is acquired by them; as they acquire it, then send it or report it to you?

A. Yes, sir; they report it on their daily reports as they acquire it.

Q. How often do you send in a report to the Company of the competitive sales, shipments, and conditions over your territory with reference to competition?

1292 A. We send a monthly report.

Q. To whom do you send that?

A. C. P. Ackert, General Manager.

Q. How often does he reply to them, to your report and suggestions made in that report?

A. Sometimes he does, and sometimes not.

Q. Do you recall any instances since 1903 where you have made a monthly report, competitive report, and have not received any advice or answer from the St. Louis office?

A. Yes sir.

Q. How often?

A. Two thirds of the reports are not replied to.

Q. Where do you copy those reports, copies of them, or do you keep copies?

A. In my books.

Q. Are the originals returned to you or left at the St. Louis office, do you know?

A. They are not returned to me.

Q. Mr. Cahoon, what is the source of the supply principally of the Waters Pierce Oil Company in its North Texas Division?

A. In Central Texas Division?

Q. Yes, I mean Central Texas Division; I call it North Texas.

A. Corsicana, at the present time.

Q. How long has Corsicana been your principal supply-center?

A. Well, up to within two months ago, Corsicana was not our principal supply.

Q. Well, previous to two months ago, where was your principal supply?

A. Neodesha.

Q. Where is that?

A. Kansas.

1293 Q. Neodesha, Kansas?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Do you know what company or concern owns the Neodesha refinery?

A. No sir.

Q. What is your information in the course of your dealings, your business at Dallas, Texas?

A. I have no information in regard to it.

Q. You mean to say that in the conduct of your business at Dallas, you don't know who is the owner?

A. I know absolutely nothing about it.

Q. From your correspondence and the details of your business, you have not gathered any information as to who owns the Neodesha, Kansas, refinery?

A. I never passed a letter with the Neodesha refinery.

Q. Well, how do you come to be getting your shipments from Neodesha instead of some other point in the United States?

A. I presume because the orders are placed there.

Q. Where do you place your requisitions for oil?

A. The St. Louis office.

Q. Upon whom are the requisitions made?

A. Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Q. What officer?

A. They are forwarded to A. M. Finlay, Vice President.

Q. Who advises you, that is to say, what officer advises you of the source of supply on your orders and the routing of the shipments?

A. Why, I don't know that I get any advice as to the routing until the shipment is made.

Q. Well, I mean after it is made,—what officer of the Company advises you of the routing of the shipments?

1294 A. I don't recall; I haven't seen any of those advice cards in so long, I don't remember who they come from now.

Q. What other sources of supply do you have besides Neodesha, or did you have previous to two months ago?

A. Chaison, Texas.

Q. That is the Security Oil Company's refinery?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. From which of the two refineries, Neodesha and the Security Oil Company, do you receive, did you receive the greater amount of oils?

A. I say Security; we received possibly as much from the Gulf Refining Company as we did from the Security Oil Company at Beaumont.

Q. How?

A. I say we received probably as much or more supply from the Gulf Refining Company than we did from the Security Company.

Q. When is the last oil you received from the Gulf Refining Company in your division?

A. I don't recall.

Q. Well, about how long ago?

A. I wouldn't know; the shipments are made by a local representative, and I don't know.

Q. Upon requisitions to St. Louis?
A. Yes sir.
Q. Well, did you make your requisitions direct to St. Louis for oil that came from the Security Oil Company?
A. Yes sir.
Q. And likewise the Neodesha refinery?
A. Yes sir.

Q. You can't give us approximately the last date when you 1295 received any oil for use in your Division from the Gulf Refining Company?

A. I wouldn't know the date; I wouldn't know who they came from, because the shipments are made by a local representative of the company.
Q. Well, I understand you to say that a few months ago you got as much oil perhaps from the Gulf Refining Company as you did from the Security Oil Company?
A. That is my understanding, sir.
Q. Well, at what time do you refer to?
A. The present time.
Q. Up to within a couple of months ago?
A. Well up to the present time.

Thereupon Court adjourned until 2.30 p. m.

Court opened at 2.30 p. m.

A. W. CAHOON on the witness-stand.

Direct Examination resumed.

By Mr. BRADY:

Q. Mr. Cahoon, what position did you say you occupied just previous to becoming Division Manager?
A. Assistant Manager.
Q. How long had you been Assistant Manager.
A. Why, I should say two years.
Q. About two years?

A. Two or three years; as a matter of fact, I was assistant 1296 to the Manager from the time I went to Dallas.

Q. Then your title was either Assistant Manager or Division Manager during all of the time since the reorganization of the Company?
A. Well, I rather think I was given the title of Assistant Manager in 1901.
Q. 1901?
A. I would not be sure about that, however; prior to that I was Assistant, without a title.
Q. You were in effect Assistant to the Manager?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, Mr. Cahoon, do you know the parties in charge of and managing the Corsicana refinery?
A. Yes sir.

Q. How long has that refinery been there in Corsicana, do you know?

A. I could not say; I think probably six years or seven years—six or seven years.

Q. Well, it was about 1901 when it was established, wasn't it?

A. That's my recollection; I am not sure about it, however.

Q. Who is the superintendent and active manager of the concern?

A. Mr. Brown.

Q. Mr. Brown?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Who is the—what position or employment has Mr. Angus with that company?

A. He is not connected with that company.

Q. Mr. A. Angus, I refer to.

A. He is not connected with the refinery.

Q. Is he the local agent of the Waters Pierce Oil Company at Corsicana?

A. Yes sir.

1297 Q. And he is in no wise connected with the refinery, so far as you know?

A. No sir, I know he isn't.

Q. Has he ever been connected with the Corsicana refinery that you know of?

A. Not to my knowledge, no sir.

Q. Is there another Mr. Angus at Corsicana that you know of?

A. No sir, not that I know of.

Q. How often do you have occasion, or have you had occasion, to visit Corsicana on business with the local agent and the Corsicana refinery, or either, since the reorganization of the Company?

A. Why, an average of once every sixty or ninety days.

Q. Upon what business would you go there, as nearly as you can state it?

A. With who?

Q. With the local agent and also with the Corsicana refinery people?

A. With the local agent I would go over the situation generally. With the refinery company I have had very little occasion to take up matters. I have called on them a few times with reference to the grades of oil they were giving us, and so forth.

Q. Now, I will ask you whether or not you have taken a greater amount of oil from the Corsicana refinery within the last year than you have in previous years since the reorganization of the company?

A. We have not; no, sir.

Q. About the same percentage?

A. No, we haven't taken as much during the past year as we have previous years.

Q. You have not?

1298 A. No sir.

Q. To what is that fact due, Mr. Cahoon?

A. Inability to give us the quantity.

Q. It's on account of the fact that they have not had the output?

A. Of the grade that we wanted.

Q. Now, during all that time I wish you would state to the jury what percentage of the output and production of the Corsicana refinery has the Waters Pierce Oil Company taken?

A. I don't know.

Q. Taken it all, hasn't it?

A. I don't know that.

Q. Well, what is your judgment, from the amount of oil that you handle in your Division and the amount of oil that is taken from that refinery by the South Texas Division, of the production of the refinery as known to you?—what do you think is the amount produced?

Mr. ODELL: We object, because it calls for a conclusion of the witness about it, Your Honor. Of course, if he has facts within his knowledge with reference to it, or if he knows what the output was, he may say. It is just a straight opinion and conclusion that is sought from the witness.

The COURT: The objection that it calls for the opinion of the witness is sustained.

Q. Mr. Cahoon, what knowledge have you had, or occasion to find out and inform yourself about the production of the Corsicana refinery since you have been Assistant Manager and Manager?

A. Only so far as one grade is concerned, I have kept myself posted as to what they were able to give us.

Q. What grade is that?

A. That's high grade oil.

Q. Well, in the market as Eupion?

A. Yes, sir.

1299 Q. What is that called at the Corsicana refinery?

A. Well, it is billed to us as Eupion.

Q. Well, don't you know what it is called as their product?

A. It is called Water White Oil.

Q. Water White?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is P. W. Oil?

A. Prime White.

Q. Is that an inferior or high grade?

A. It's a low grade oil.

Q. Have you had occasion to investigate and inform yourself about their production of P. W. Oil—Prime White?

A. Well, to a more or less extent, yes sir: not as far as my territory is concerned, though, because I don't sell it.

Q. Well, with regard to the other Divisions?

A. I have discussed it with them; yes, sir.

Q. Now, do they put out any other grades?

A. They put out what they call Standard White.

Q. That is known as S. W.?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what is that?

A. That's a still lower grade than Prime White.

Q. Have you had occasion to investigate the output as to that oil?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know to what extent they make that oil?
A. No, sir, I don't; they have some considerable stock of it, however.
Q. Now, from the information that you have, can you give us an approximate estimate of the production of the Corsicana refinery for the last five or six years of P. W. and W. W.?
1300 A. I could not give you even an approximate idea.
Q. Haven't you had occasion to investigate that in the last six months?
A. Not the total output; no, sir.
Q. You have not had any occasion, then, to inform the St. Louis office about what the probable output was?
A. Of Eupion, I have; yes, sir.
Q. Well, what is that?
A. Well, I don't recall—I should say from a thousand to fifteen hundred barrels a week.
Q. Well, has that been about the average or not, at least that, during the existence of the refinery?
A. That is a very low average; yes, sir.
Q. Well, you said a while ago it had gotten less on account of the output, but that is the least average?
A. Yes, sir
Q. What proportion, or about to what extent do you make purchases through the requisitions on St. Louis or otherwise, make purchases from the Corsicana refinery of that grade of oil—about how many barrels a week?
A. Why, I couldn't say: I don't know; I can give you an approximate idea.
Q. Well, give us approximately.
A. Eight hundred to a thousand barrels.
Q. Eight hundred to a thousand barrels a week?
A. I should judge so; yes, sir.
Q. Out of the production of twelve thousand or fifteen thousand?
A. Hundred.
Q. Oh! twelve hundred?
A. Yes, sir.
1301 Q. Well, I will ask you if it is or is not a fact that the Waters Pierce Oil Company, either the Central Texas Division or the South Texas Division, or both, have taken the entire output of the Corsicana refinery in high grade oil?
A. I don't know whether they have or not.
Q. Well, what is your information on that subject from your dealings with it and handling it?

Mr. ODELL: We object to his information, because it is hearsay, Your Honor.
The COURT: The objection is sustained. He may have information that is not hearsay, but the question is not limited to that.

Q. Well, I will ask you, Mr. Cahoon, what information you have in the course of your dealings, course of your business at Dallas, handling one of the Divisions in Texas for this company, as to whether or not you handle in Texas the entire output, practically the entire output, of the Corsicana refinery on high grade oil?

Mr. ODELL: We renew the objection, Your Honor, that that calls for hearsay testimony, and that any information that he may have had is necessarily hearsay as to the company, unless it was communicated to them. Declarations that might have been made or statements that might have been made do not necessarily put the company on notice, especially if it is not shown that it was communicated to the company.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Mr. ODELL: We except.

Q. I am asking you what information you got in the conduct of your business.

A. Well, I should say that we have handled a very large percentage of the output.

1302 Q. Well, are you willing to state anything further than that? I am speaking now of its best grade of oil.

A. Well, I don't know whether we have handled the entire output or not; I don't know what disposition those people are making of it.

Q. Well, you think you have handled the greater part of it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I will ask you if it is a fact that South Texas has called on the Corsicana refinery for the larger part of their production?

A. No, sir; only in a limited way.

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Cahoon, if it is not a fact that you have endeavored to take the entire output of the Corsicana refinery in the last year?

A. So far as high grade is concerned, yes.

Q. As far as high grade oil?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That's the oil you market as Eupion?

A. Principally; yes, sir.

Q. Under whose direction, or did you have any direction, with reference to taking as much of the output of that refinery as you could?

A. Why, in a general way I was supposed to take—to use that oil to as great an extent as I could, yes, sir.

Q. Well, in a specific way, have you had instructions from the St. Louis office in that respect?

A. I have not consulted on the placing of those orders.

Q. You have not been written to in reference to placing it?

A. The home office placed orders wherever they saw fit. I might have suggested to them shipping from Corsicana, but—— 1303 Q. Do you know approximately what you marketed in Central Texas Division in January a year ago?

A. No, sir; I don't remember. January, 1906?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I don't remember; no sir.

Q. Well, can you approximate it?
A. Possibly fifteen thousand barrels.
Q. Fifteen thousand barrels a week?
A. No, a month—in the month of January.
Q. That's what you marketed?
A. Oil and gasoline together—I should judge so, yes, sir.
Q. Fifteen thousand barrels?
A. I don't recall—don't remember what we did, but I should say possibly that's about it.
Q. Well, how many gallons would that make?
A. Between seven hundred and seven hundred and fifty thousand.
Q. Do you know what the production of the Corsicana refinery was, or approximately, in that month of both S.W., W.W., and P.W., all three grades?
A. No, sir, I don't remember; possibly I knew at that time, but I don't recall it now.
Q. I wish you would examine this letter here, Mr. Cahoon (handing witness paper).
A. I think these figures in the letter are wrong. This letter refers to fifty-two thousand barrels. I should say that should have read fifty-two hundred barrels. I don't recall writing this letter, however.
Q. It estimates it in gallons, however. Well, look through the several grades of oil there.
A. I have no recollection of writing the letter at all.
1304 Q. Well, I wish you would read the last paragraph.

Mr. ODELL: It is not the original, Your Honor; it is a copy. The witness does not have any distinct recollection of writing it, and we object, from an unidentified, purported copy——
The COURT: Do you object to his reading it?
Mr. ODELL: Yes, sir; to reading it aloud.
Mr. BRADY: I didn't mean to read it aloud.
Mr. ODELL: Oh, well, that's my mistake.

A. I don't recall getting any of that information, it is so far back; I probably did, however.
Q. That letter is dated January 13, 1906. I will ask you if you recall my being in Dallas some time last month to make an investigation at your office?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I will ask you whether or not you furnished me copies of a number of letters and documents at my request?
A. I did.
Q. I will ask you whether or not they were prepared by the stenographer in the office?
A. They were.
Q. For which courtesy I was very thankful to you. You furnished copies of those likewise to counsel for defendant in this case?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, after reading this letter or independent of this letter, can you recall the statement, Mr. Cahoon, that your Division contemplated taking only one grade of oil from the Corsicana refinery?

A. Low grades of oil referred to there are not handled to any extent in my territory.

Q. Well, you know these several grades are referred to?

A. Yes, sir.

1305 Q. I will ask you if this copy of letter refreshes your memory as to the output of the Corsicana refinery, or approximately, at that time, January a year ago?

A. Why, I presume the figures given in there are approximately correct.

Q. Well, you sent that information to the home office, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That includes three different grades of oil?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That estimate was about eight hundred thousand gallons, approximately?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you say you presume that is approximately correct?

A. At that time, I suppose it was.

Q. Now, that was only about two hundred thousand more gallons than you were using in your Division—only fifty thousand more than you have estimated?

A. Yes, sir, taking all the grades together.

Q. You have no recollection of writing that letter?

A. I don't remember it, no sir. I would state, however, that I probably wrote the letter.

Q. Well, I will ask you to state whether or not it is a fact that at that time you, together with the South Texas Division, were taking practically the entire output of the Corsicana refinery of all grades, including the South Texas Division, now, taking its entire output?

A. No, sir, the two Divisions were not taking it, by any means.

Q. Well, how about the East Texas Division then?

A. They took some of it.

Q. They took some also?

A. Yes, sir.

1306 Q. Now, Mr. Cahoon, I will ask you, since you have no independent recollection of this matter, if this is a copy of a letter from your office purporting to have been written by you and taken from your records, if that is an exact copy, then will you or not state whether the figures stated in here are approximately correct, and the statement here that it was probable that the entire stock of all grades of refined oils in Corsicana will be exhausted in February?

A. Yes, sir, I think so.

Q. That was your judgment when you wrote it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. While we are on this subject, I will ask you to examine each of these letters. I wish you would examine each and all of those letters, please, sir, and see if you have any independent recollection of them?

Judge PENN: I would suggest, to save taking up time—these letters you are offering are the ones you got in Dallas?

Mr. BRADY: Yes, sir.

Judge PENN: Well, just submit them to us, and if they are the same as we have we will admit them.

Mr. BRADY: All right. Do you wish to make that comparison now?

Judge PENN: Well, I don't suppose Mr. Cahoon will be able to identify your copy.

(Counsel for defendant inspected the copies.)

Judge PENN: We admit that these are copies made from the originals on file in Mr. Cahoon's office.

Q. Now, Mr. Cahoon, I will ask you if letters on file in your office from which these copies are made—it is admitted they are copies—
1307 where they purport to be from A. M. Finlay, Vice President, or C. P. Ackert, General Manager, or any of the officers in St. Louis, were received by you in due course of business and were on file there in that way?

A. I should say they were, yes, sir.

Q. And the copies of letters, impression copies or other character of copies, on file in your office from which these copies were made, they purport to have been sent by you to St. Louis and were made by you in due course of business and sent to them?

A. I should say so, yes, sir.

Q. Now, when you wrote these letters of which these are copies, you gave the facts at that time as you understood them, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were true and correct, as you understood it then?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRADY: If the Court please, we offer these letters that have just been examined by counsel.

Mr ODELL: We object, if the Court please, to the letters offered, as follows: Letter of December 4, 1905, addressed to Charles P. Ackert, General Manager, and signed blank, Manager; January 13, 1906, letter to C. P. Ackert, General Manager, signed by blank Manager; letter of October 30, 1906, addressed to C. W. Cahoon, Manager, Dallas, Texas, and signed by A. M. Finlay; letter of January 10, 1906, addressed to C. P. Ackert, General Manager, and signed blank Manager; February 15, 1906, addressed to C. P. Ackert, General Manager, St. Louis, signed Manager blank; February 17, 1906, addressed to Ackert, General Manager, and signed in blank; a letter of date February 17, 1902, addressed to C. P. Ackert, General 1308 Manager, St. Louis, signed by blank—for the reason that they are immaterial and irrelevant; they throw no light on any issue in this case and are only indicative of the company's method of doing business; it is private correspondence of the company, and it does not illustrate or tend to illustrate any legitimate issue in this case. For that reason they are immaterial and irrelevant and will unnecessarily incumber the record; and in the next place, there is no suggestion in the letters of a violation of any law, and if they serve any purpose at all it could only be the possible one of prejudicing the jury by some method of the company in doing its business, as outlined in the correspondence.

(The papers were handed to the Court for inspection.)

The COURT: What is the purpose of these letters?

Mr. BRADY: They are offered to show the extent to which the Waters Pierce Oil Company obtained its supply from the Corsicana Refining Company. There is some testimony introduced in the case—I don't recall by whom—in reference to the ownership of this Corsicana refinery, tending to show that it is the property of the Standard Oil Company system and one of their refineries in Texas, and we have an allegation in the petition that that is a fact. We have an allegation in the petition that they are not engaged in the retail business or marketing of oils in the State except by sale from the refinery itself—substantially that allegation—and we offer the circumstances in connection with the allegation in the petition about the ownership of this refinery.

The COURT: Let me see the letters again.

(The letters were again handed to the Court.)

1309 The COURT: The objection to the letter of date February 17, 1906, addressed to Mr. C. P. Ackert, General Manager, and to the letter of December 4, 1905, addressed to Mr. Charles P. Ackert, General Manager, is sustained; otherwise, the objection is overruled.

Mr. ODELL: We except, Your Honor.

Judge PENN: If the Court please, there are two of February 17th; did you specify which?

The COURT: The one on the bottom.

Mr. BATTS: Will the Court permit me to suggest that this particular one was in the batch, but I think that this is admissible upon yet another ground. The letter of December 4, 1905, excluded by Your Honor. If you will see what it is, I will discuss the proposition. (Hands letter to the Court).

Mr. BATTS: The suggestion made in the petition, and which we have undertaken to establish, is that among the—that the Waters Pierce Oil Company undertakes by unfair methods and underhand schemes to absolutely destroy all character of competition, and this letter shows that—— Judge PENN: Now, if the Court please, we object to Mr. Batts' undertaking to discuss in the presence of the Jury what the letter says.

The COURT: The Court has passed on the objection that the letter is immaterial and irrelevant upon the question of the output of the oil of the Corsicana Refinery. Counsel for the State says it is admissible on another theory——

Judge PENN: But we say that they can't do that without expressing what is in the letter——

The COURT: The Court was about to remark, when interrupted, that the Sheriff could withdraw the Jury. Retire the Jury, Mr. Sheriff.

(Thereupon the Sheriff retires the Jury.)

1310 Mr. BATTS: Now, Your Honor, the evidence already introduced is to the effect that the business—to follow out the line of argument already started, that was to the effect that the Waters Pierce Oil Company, by its underhand method of doing business, of taking advantage everywhere by misleading people and for the purpose of absolutely destroying competition of every character,—we made allegations covering that idea and we have introduced some evidence on that subject. We have also established by this witness that its highest grade of oil is Eupion Oil, and the evidence all along has indicated that this was one of the bases of the business of the Waters Pierce Oil Company. For instance, in the testimony of Mr. Pierce, he lays great stress upon the circumstance of the fine quality of this Eupion Oil, and the circumstance that he gets business by virtue of that Eupion Oil. This high grade, now, we want to show, and this letter will show, with a number of others, that wherever it could be done, that an inferior quality of oil was put in and sold as Eupion Oil; and especially where they were compelled, by reason of competition, to reduce the price of oil, that they immediately sold an inferior grade of oil as Eupion Oil. Now, of course, I would not make the proposition that this should,—oh, I don't know what you call it exactly; I would hate to designate it as swindling, but it is certainly very sharp practice; and that this sharp practice is a part of the general business of destroying competition, we will also show that there is a very great deal of difference in the cost of this Corsicana S. W. 112 and Corsicana W. W. 150, or whatever it is that constitutes Eupion Oil, and by using inferior grades and paying a great deal less for it and putting it off on the people and dealers as a high grade oil, that they are able to absolutely destroy competition, because nobody can meet them on that basis. It is 1311 just one of those circumstances that go to make up their business,—all of their business being directed to the absolute destruction of competition.

The COURT: The letter simply contains a question as to whether he would be allowed to sell an inferior grade as Eupion Oil. Does it go to show that it was consented to, or that he was permitted to sell it as Eupion Oil.

Mr. BATTS: Yes, sir. The Manager at Dallas is now asking for authority to do this, and it will be shown that ordinarily whatever recommendations are made by the Manager at Dallas, are acquiesced in by the Manager at St. Louis. Now, whether this letter shows that, I can't recall, but that was the course of business, and I introduce this letter as indicating that course of business in regard to that particular matter.

The COURT: Gentlemen, I think the letter is more calculated to arouse the prejudice of the Jury on an immaterial matter, than on the question as to whether or not the anti-trust law has been violated. The objection is sustained.

Mr. BATTS: We except. Of course, this will cover a great many letters of the same kind.

(Jury returns.)

Mr. BRADY (to the Jury): Gentlemen, I will read you these letters introduced in evidence. (Reads following letters:)

Letter dated January 10, 1906, addressed to Mr. C. P. Ackert, General Manager, St. Louis, Missouri; signed "Yours truly, blank Manager."

These letters are admitted to be copies taken from the Dallas office of this Company; they are copies taken by me some two or three weeks ago.

1312 The next letter is January 13, 1906, relating to subject, Corsicana oil. "Mr. C. P. Ackert, General Manager, St. Louis, Mo."

The next letter is February 15, 1906, relates to Orders Nos. 294 and 304.

Letter of February 17, 1906; estimated output of refinery.

Letter of October 30, 1906, to C. W. Cahoon, signed A. M. Finlay.

Letter of December 18, 1905. (This was not read.)

Mr. BRADY: If the Court please, I was a little uncertain whether this letter was included with the, or not.

Judge PENN: No sir, it was not. Do you offer this, Mr. Brady?

Mr. BRADY: No, we haven't offered it yet.

The COURT: The objection will be sustained.

Mr. BRADY (to the Stenographer): Will you please take this down: Letter of December 18, 1905, to C. P. Ackert, excluded, and ruling excepted to by State.

Q. Now, Mr. Cahoon, I notice certain figures after these grades of oil. I wish you would explain what they mean. W. W. 120; that 120, what does that refer to?

A. That is a refinery term for fire test. It does not necessarily mean that the oil is 120 Fire Test; it is simply approximately that.

Q. They classify it as that test——

A. It might be 130 or 135, but it is referred to as 120.

Q. Well, P. W., Prime White 150,—that also refers to the fire test as classified by the refinery?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And 112, also refers to the classification?

A. Yes, sir.

1313 Q. Now, I will ask you, Mr. Cahoon, whether or not you have in the course of your business in Dallas, as Manager of the Division there, placed any orders directly with the Corsicana refinery?

A. No, sir; never.

Q. Don't recall having placed any orders direct?

A. To the best of my recollection, no.

Q. Where are all your orders on that refinery placed?

A. All of our orders are placed with our St. Louis office.

Q. Whose business is it in your Divison to gather statistics, if it is the business of any one, in reference to the percentage of business that your Company is doing in that territory, and your competitors are doing in that territory?

A. It is the duty of the agents and salesmen; all of them.

Q. Well, whose duty is it to furnish that information to the Missouri office?

A. I do it personally.

Q. It goes through the Division office, and through you personally, and the Central Texas Division?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you been familiar with those details, and with the particular work, as part of your duties, since you were Assistant Manager and also while Division Manager?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have a more or less, or fairly accurate knowledge of the percentage of business your Company has been doing since 1900?

A. Reasonably so, yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would state what percentage of the business your Company has done since 1900 to the time of the filing of this suit.

A. I could not give you anything but an approximate idea.

Q. Well, give us the best idea you can.

1314 A. I should say possibly eighty per cent.

Q. Possibly eighty per cent. Do you mean possibly as low as eighty or as high as eighty?

A. Within five per cent. either way; it is merely an estimate.

Q. Well, are you trying to average it during those years?

A. Why, I am basing my estimate on the past year. I don't recall the conditions prior to that.

Q. Well, your competition has been a little more active last year than previously?

A. No; not any more than the year before.

Q. Well, within the last two or three years your competition has been more active than previously?

A. Yes, sir; I expect it has.

Q. From 1900, say, until 1903, when you became the Division Manager, are you willing to state that your percentage was as low as eighty per cent., or will you place it higher?

A. I don't know; I don't recall what it was at that time.

Q. Your Division, of course, is the Central Texas Division. I will ask you, as a matter of refreshing your memory, whether or not, in the year 1903 your percentage of the business in refined oils was not eighty-eight per cent., or approximately that?

A. I do not know; I have no recollection of the matter.

Q. Well, will you say it was not as great as eighty-eight per cent.?

A. I do not know; I have no idea what it was.

Q. In the year 1904, I will ask you if your percentage of refined oil was not eighty-two per cent.?

A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Well, will you say it was not as great as eighty-two per cent.?

A. I have no recellection of it.

Q. Well, coming to gasoline, in the Central Texas Division for 1903, was not your percentage in gasoline over ninety-five per cent.?

1315 A. Where?

Q. In the Central Texas Division, entire Division for the year 1903,—didn't you do ninety-five per cent. of the business on gasoline?

A. I don't know.

Q. On the two,—gasoline and refined oils,—did you not do eighty-nine per cent. of the total business, according to your statistics furnished by you?

A. I don't know; I do not remember.

Q. Well, will you say that that is not approximately correct,—eighty-nine per cent. of the total gasoline and refined oils for 1903?

A. I would not think it was as large as that; as high a percentage as that.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Cahoon, whether anybody else has been furnishing the St. Louis office with statistics and data about that?

A. I think not.

Q. You have never heard of any one else?

A. No, sir, unless——

Q. Have you any information as to the extent of business in the South Texas and Louisiana Division?

A. No, sir. Do you mean do I know anything about the business down there?

Q. Yes.

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, through talking with the agent, Louis Fries, of the South Texas Division,—do you know anything about that?

A. No, sir; don't recall of his ever having mentioned how much business he was doing.

Q. Understand you to say, Mr. Cahoon, that you will not deny that the percentage of the business done by your Company for the last five or six years has not been in the neighborhood of eighty or ninety per cent.

1316 A. I have no recollection as to what the percentage was over a year back. I should say it was approximately eighty per cent. during the past twelve months.

Q. And your competition has been greater during the past two years than previously?

A. Yes, sir, somewhat greater.

Q. Whose business was it in the Central Texas Division to look after competition, and to meet the competition, and keep up your end of the business to the best advantage for the company, generally, over the entire territory?

A. Every employee connected with the company.

Q. Under whose supervision and whose direct attention was given to this matter; who was held responsible in Texas for those matters?

A. I am, in my territory.

Q. Well, that's what I am speaking of,—the Central Texas Division. You are held responsible for taking care of that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understand you to say that your agents were required to give you information as often as required and as often as they got it, concerning competitive shipments and receipts.

A. In a general way, yes, sir. They keep us posted, or are expected to keep us posted, not only on the business that we are doing, but in the business that they are losing.

Q. In other words, the business that your competitors are getting; isn't that a fact?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How about the prices that your competitors are obtaining in the territory they are doing business in? Are you informed on that subject?

A. Yes, sir, reasonably well.

1317 Q. Well, as frequently as the agents could get the information to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you transmit that information to the St. Louis office?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The prevailing business that your competitors were getting and the prices they were selling?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did you make that in a general way, or did you make specific reports concerning merchants in any town?

A. I rarely ever mentioned any particular merchant; just mentioned conditions as a whole.

Q. You say it was unusual to furnish information of that character to the St. Louis office and the conditions with reference to certain particular merchants and dealers?

A. Why, I expect I referred to some merchants quite frequently, but taking the business as a whole, or the correspondence as a whole, very little reference was made to the individual merchant.

Q. You mean compared with the volume of correspondence?

A. I mean to say that my letters had reference to conditions as a whole, generally.

Q. But you did frequently write them with reference to individual merchants, respecting prices made to them?

A. I did at times, yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you what method the Company pursued in meeting competition throughout your Division since you have been Assistant and Division Manager?

A. Well, we don't make a practice to meet the competitors' prices as a rule.

Q. Well, in what way would you get rid of the competition, or try to get hold of the business?

1318 A. We would depend on good service and a high grade of goods to regain and hold the trade.

Q. Now, was that all you depended on?

A. As a general proposition, yes, sir; occasionally we had to meet the competitors' prices.

Q. Made it a special proposition. Wasn't it a frequent thing for you to reduce your prices to meet competition?

A. Why, no, sir; I would say that at very few of the points the competitors' prices were below ours.

Q. That your competitors' prices were below yours?

A. Were below, and are to-day, yes, sir.

Q. Were they furnishing the same grade of oil?

A. I do not know.

Q. Wasn't it a frequent thing for you to reduce the price of your oils to meet competition?

A. Not a frequent thing; we did it at times.

Q. Did you give rebates or discounts to special merchants?
A. In a very limited way we have done such things, yes, sir.
Q. About how many letters are there in your office referring to special rates and discounts during the last few years?
A. I have no idea.
Q. There are hundreds of such letters, aren't there?
A. In the last three or four years?
Q. Yes, sir.
A. There may be; I haven't any idea.
Q. What two grades of oil did you market, or what different grades of refined oils did you market, Mr. Cahoon, and are you now marketing?
A. Under what brands?
Q. Yes, sir, I mean the brands.
A. Eupion and Brilliant.
1319 Q. What difference in the selling price is there of these oils?
A. Approximately three cents.
Q. That's the retail business or wholesale?
A. Wholesale.
Q. What difference is usually made with the retail trade?
A. I don't know; I should say five cents, though, on an average.
Q. What difference in the cost at the refinery, or as purchased from the refinery?
A. I do not know.
Q. You don't know the difference in the cost to the company?
A. No, sir.
Q. But about three cents wholesale and five cents retail, approximately?
A. I should say so, yes, sir.
Q. Now, you say that you market a high-grade oil. From the Corsicana refinery you handle the Water White as your Eupion brand?
A. That is the refinery term for the oil they furnish us.
Q. I believe your answer to me in the beginning of your examination was that you market Water White 112, wasn't that correct?
A. The refinery term of 120.
Q. 120 instead of 112 as the Eupion Oil that you were marketing?
A. As a general proposition, yes, sir.
Q. You say that you were handling a high grade oil. Isn't it true that you used considerable of the P.W. and S.W. oil, and marketed it as Eupion?
A. Now——

Mr. ODELL: I object, because it is not a violation of law, and can only be used for the purpose of basing inflammatory arguments.
The COURT: The objection is overruled.
Mr. ODELL: We except.

1320 Q. Isn't it a fact that you used considerable P.W. and some S.W., that is Prime White and Standard White, production of the Corsicana refinery, under the name of Eupion oil, and marketed it in Texas?

A. At the present time?
Q. No, during the last seven years,—since 1900.

Mr. ODELL: We renew the same objection.
The COURT: The objection is overruled.
Mr. ODELL: We except.

A. To the best of my recollection, that was never done, except possibly for sixty days.
Q. When was that sixty days?
A. As near as I can remember, the first of last year.
Q. Why did you do it?
A. Because we couldn't get a supply of the other oil.
Q. Where did you do it?
A. I presume at a dozen or two places, possibly twenty.
Q. You sold it at Stephenville, didn't you.
A. I don't remember.
Q. Then it was on account of the fact that you couldn't get the higher grade of oil, that you marketed it as Eupion; that you used that oil for sixty days.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Competition had nothing to do with it?
A. No, sir.
Q. Positive of that?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You are positive that in no instance you marketed Prime White or Standard White, as Eupion, to meet competition?
A. Not to my knowledge.
Q. I will ask you if you ever found the condition such as to ask authority from the St. Louis office?
1321 A. On account of competition?
Q. Yes, sir.
A. I don't recall ever doing it; I might possibly have made reference to it in regard to some competitive proposition, but I don't recall it.
Q. Mr. Cahoon, you were with the company, of course, in 1900, as Assistant Manager, that is to say, that you were actually performing the duties of Assistant Manager, although not having received the title?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I will ask you what change, if any, was made in the Company's method of doing business, and what change occurred in its business in any way, that you can recall after the dissolution in 1900, and the reorganization?

Mr. ODELL: We object to that, if the Court please, for the reason that it is immaterial and irrelevant, as to whether this company did business as the former company had been doing business. The issue in the case is as to whether this company had been doing business in violation of law, and not as to whether it was pursuing its business along the same lines some company theretofore had been carrying on its business.
The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Mr. ODELL: We except.

A. I don't remember any material change in the manner of doing business.

Q. How about the office force and employees?

A. I don't recall any changes.

Q. Recall any changes?

A. None that I remember of, no, sir.

Q. Any change in the property of the company?

1322 A. The property was transferred to the new company.

Q. To the new company. Do you remember some property out at Oak Cliff that stood in the name of John D. Johnson?

A. I have heard of it.

Q. Any change made in that after the new company was organized?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. Do you or not render that property for taxes at Dallas?

A. I think our local man at Dallas does.

Q. I will ask you if that property stood in the name before and stood in the name of John D. Johnson after the reorganization of the company?

A. I have no knowledge.

Q. Your local agent made the tax rendition?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you if you know of any change in the status of the title of that property at Dallas?

A. I don't recall any, but I would not have known it had there been a change.

Q. I will ask you if there isn't some correspondence in your office relating to that very matter, reminding you that that property was in Mr. Johnson's name and would so remain after the company was re-incorporated?

A. I don't remember such a letter.

Q. Do you deny that there is such a letter?

A. I do not know; I do not know anything about it.

Q. Well, in any other respects, has there been a change or any change in the company or in the methods of the company after the reorganization of the company, than what existed before?

A. Well, our general method is somewhat different at the present time than it formerly was; our system of deliveries are more elaborate.

Q. Getting more active?

1323 A. Working the trade closer than we ever did, yes, sir.

Q. Was there any change in the stationery of the company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the difference?

A. The present stationery shows the date of the incorporation of the new company.

Q. Well, I mean at the time the company was reorganized? What kind of stationery did you have? Did you have a rubber stamp?

A. I don't remember.

Q. You afterwards got a supply with it printed there?

A. Possibly so; I don't remember.

Q. Well, how about your books? Did you open up a new system of books?

A. I think not, no, sir.

Q. How about your customers' accounts,—did you close them out just at the time of the dissolution and open up new accounts with the customers?

A. I don't know how that was handled.

Q. What is your best recollection?

A. I have absolutely no knowledge as to what was done: I was on the road when the change was made.

Q. Well, did you stay on the road while the company was going out and coming back in again?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Well, did they call you in, or did you keep a-traveling?

A. I don't remember; it——

Q. Well, what is your recollection about it,—whether it suspended your business operations until the change in this company on the 29th day of May, in Missouri, and then the re-introduction into Texas two days afterwards; did it suspend you in any wise at all?

A. So far as I recall, I continued to work as hard afterwards as before.

1324 Q. Did you know that the change took place?

A. Yes, sir; I was advised.

Q. Did you know when Mr. Johnson and Mr. Pierce left St. Louis and came to Austin?

A. Not that I remember of.

Q. Well, did you know when the company was actually reincorporated? Were you advised at all after it happened?

A. I don't recall when I was advised.

Q. When you got back to Dallas, did you find it out then, or on the road?

A. The probabilities are I was advised by the gentleman who was Manager at that time.

Q. And Mr. Grice was?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what change was there is your salary? Did you get a larger or a smaller, or the same salary?

A. The same salary.

Q. Any changes in the other employees' salaries?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. I asked you a while ago if it interfered with your traveling at all. Do you recall any notice of being fired, while on the road?

A. I recall receiving such a notice.

Q. Did you get it while traveling or after you got back to Dallas?

A. I don't remember when.

Q. To refresh your memory, I will ask you if you didn't open your mail and find one letter showing your discharge and another showing your re-appointment?

A. I don't remember. My recollection is that I received the notice of discharge prior to receiving the notice of re-appointment.

1325 Q. How long prior?

A. I don't recall it.

Q. Did you take the matter up with the Division Manager, to find out about it, and didn't you want to know why you were fired?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Did you have any conversation about what you would do about a new job?

A. It is possible, but I don't remember it.

Q. Well, isn't it a fact that when you left on the trip, you knew about the company being dissolved and you were not afraid about your job, and didn't pay any attention to the matter?

A. I didn't worry much; I was in hopes the company would stay in business.

Q. Are you familiar with the contracts, Mr. Cahoon, that you had; forms in your office there? Look at that Form G-707. Is that a form that you used in the office at Dallas?

A. It appears to be, yes, sir.

Q. Was that used throughout your Division?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you still use that form, do you know?

A. I am not sure about that; I don't pay much attention to the contract forms. They are handled by another man in my office, and I wouldn't be positive.

Q. I wish you would look at this and see if you remember the occasion of my taking that, as a copy of your agreement?

A. I recall your taking a copy, yes, sir.

Q. It was furnished by your stenographer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether that is the copy or not?

A. I don't know, but it appears to be.

Q. You are familiar with Form G-710? Did you have a form of that kind?

1326 A. I don't know; don't remember what it deals with. Is it a contract form?

Q. Yes, sir; to refresh your memory, I will show you a clause taken from it. (Shows to witness.)

A. Yes, sir, that's a railroad contract.

Q. You recognize that form, G-710?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall, Mr. Cahoon, whether or not you have a large number of contracts on file in your office that were made during the years 1903, 1904 and 1905, on Form G-707, that contract similar to the one I had there of the Greenville Water Company?

A. We have a large number of contracts on file in the office, but as to the form, I am not certain.

Q. Do you recall submitting to me while inspecting the books and records, a large number of contracts during those years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't know how many contracts you had in force in 1903, 1904, and 1905, similar to the Greenville contract, on Form G-707?

A. No, sir, I haven't any idea.

Q. I will ask you to state whether or not the contracts you showed me while I was there and inspected by me, were regular contracts made by your company in the course of its business, and kept there as part of its records?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I presume you have no independent recollection or memory of about how many contracts on the various forms you have on file in your office in Dallas?

A. No, I have no idea.

Q. I will ask you whether the forms you use were prepared by yourself or sent from St. Louis?

A. They were sent from St. Louis.

1327 Q. They were received by you, as Manager, from St. Louis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do those forms,—have you any recollection of any particular clause in them, Mr. Cahoon?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, to refresh your memory, and to impress upon you what I mean, I will call your attention to this clause: "The second party——

Judge PENN: If the Court please, we ask the Counsel just to hand that to the witness. This paper is not in evidence.

Mr. BRADY: All right. (Hands paper to witness.)

Q. You have read that clause?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the last clause of that contract, is it not, on Form 707-G? That is the last clause of the contract, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you to state whether or not in the conduct of your business, of the North Texas Division, you made numerous contracts containing that clause, in the Central Texas Division?

A. I presume we did, yes, sir.

Q. As often as you could get contracts of that kind?

A. We got all the contracts we could, yes, sir.

Q. You recognize the pertinence of that clause, don't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you get as many of that kind as you could?

A. I presume we did. As I stated before, I am not familiar with the form numbers; I could not say positively that that contract is in use.

Q. Just leave out the printed designation of the form, and take the substance of it,—that particular clause in that contract: did you or not, in the course of your business, get as many contracts of this kind as you could?

1328 A. I presume we did, yes, sir.

Q. Well, didn't you get them?

A. Did you ask a question?

Q. Well, did you get a great many of them?

A. Yes, sir, I should suppose so. I haven't looked at the contracts myself for some time and do not know how many we have.

Q. I believe you stated that this was one of the forms in use in your office during those years.

A. That form has been used in our office.

Q. Well, I will show you again that contract with the Greenville Water Company.

A. Yes, sir, that's the contract.

Q. That contract is commonly in use in your office?

A. Yes, sir; I presume so. I don't know——

Q. (Hands witness paper.) I will ask you to examine the contract with reference to the amount of purchase there. (Witness examines paper.) Now, I will ask you this question with reference to the contracts of this kind generally,—how did you figure out the amount of goods that these people would take and how did you fix the amount of the contract?

A. Those estimates are made by the customers themselves.

Q. Made by them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Intended to cover about what, Mr. Cahoon, if you know?

A. To cover their requirements for the period covered by the contract.

Q. In other words, their estimated consumption for the year?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. These contracts were all executed yearly, just annual contracts?

A. Most of them; yes, sir.

Q. Well, you recall anywhere they lasted more than one year?

A. Not many; we have had a few.

1329 Q. I wish you would examine this letter, Mr. Cahoon. (Hands letter to witness.) Do you have any independent recollection of that letter, Mr. Cahoon?

A. No, sir; it is probably a letter I wrote all right.

Q. You know whether that is a copy of a letter I got out of your office in Dallas, that you had prepared by your stenographer?

A. I presume it is.

Q. Is that the original letter or your stenographer's memorandum?

A. That refers to my initials, my dictation, and the number of the stenographer.

Mr. BRADY: I submit that letter to you as one of the letters.

(Hands letter to counsel for defendant.)

Judge PENN: We object to the introduction in evidence of this letter, first, because it is irrelevant and immaterial, and, second, because it appears that the letter embodies a proposition or suggestion from the Manager of the Waters Pierce Oil Company at Dallas, to its General Manager at St. Louis, and there isn't anything to show that his proposition or suggestion was accepted or adopted by the Manager at St. Louis. (Hands letter to the Court.)

The COURT: What is the purpose of the letter?

Mr. BATTS: The purpose is to show—we undertake to show that the entire purpose of this proposed change in price is to get competition out of particular territory in order that the price might be advanced. We will undertake to show by the General Manager that this was acted upon.

The COURT: You expect to show that the suggestion contained in that letter was adopted and authorized by the General Manager?

Mr. BATTS: I don't know what we can show; I believe that is the case, and the General Manager will be put on the stand for the purpose of showing it.

1330 Judge STEDMAN: We submit that that fact should be shown; the General Manager is present and doubtless will be introduced. That fact should be shown first; our case might be prejudiced before the jury by the suggestion that wouldn't amount to anything otherwise).

Mr. BATTS: In any event, it indicates the purpose of the Texas Manager, and why he is making the recommendations for this change.

The COURT: The letter isn't admissible in evidence against the defendant unless the State connects it as it states that it proposes to do. In view of the testimony of this witness that the defendant's success in doing business, was by reason of its superior line of goods and not by reason of any other inducement, it is admissible so far as the weight to be given his testimony. The objection is overruled.

Judge STEDMAN: We except.

Mr. ODELL: In view of the Court's ground, with reference to the ground on which this letter might be admissible, we desire to call attention to the fact that the witness is a witness for the State in this case and the State has shown no surprise at the witness' testimony, and no reluctance on his part to furnish them information. It affirmatively appears that they called on him at Dallas and obtained such information as they desired, and upon that particular suggestion of the Court as to the relevancy of the testimony, we make that suggestion.

The COURT: I don't care to comment on the testimony of the witness at all, but I understand it is proper in that character of testimony.

Mr. ODELL: We except.

Mr. BRADY: This letter is dated February 10, 1906, addressed to Mr. C. P. Ackert, General Manager, St. Louis, Mo., relating

1331 to Walker Smith's Grocery Company at Brownwood. (Counsel reads letter to Jury.)

Mr. BRADY: I handed you a letter just now, did you examine that?

Mr. ODELL: Yes, sir. (Hands letter back to State's counsel).

Mr. BRADY: We offer this letter of March 7th.

Judge STEDMAN: We object to the letter of March 7th, on exactly the same grounds we objected to the letter of February 10th. I would like for Your Honor to inspect that. (Hands letter to the Court).

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Judge STEDMAN: We except.

Mr. BRADY: Letter dated March 7, 1906, relating to stove and gasoline, addressed to Mr. C. P. Ackert, General Manager, St. Louis, Missouri. (Reads letter to Jury.)

Mr. BRADY: We offer the letter of March 7th, relating to gasoline prices.

Judge STEDMAN: We object to this letter on the ground of irrelevancy and immateriality. (Hands letter to the Court.)

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Judge STEDMAN: To which we except.

Mr. BRADY: Letter dated March 7, 1907, relating to gasoline prices, addressed to C. P. Ackert, General Manager, St. Louis, Mo. (Reads letter to Jury.)

Mr. BRADY: We now offer this letter also, of March 7th, Rotan Grocery Company letter.

Judge STEDMAN: We object to that letter, first, because it is immaterial and irrelevant, and, second, because the letter contains a proposition or suggestion made by the Manager of the Waters Pierce Oil Company in Dallas, to its General Manager at St. Louis, and there isn't anything shown to the effect that the General Manager at 1332 St. Louis accepted the proposition or adopted the suggestion. (Letter is handed to the Court.)

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Judge STEDMAN: To which we except.

Mr. BRADY: This letter is also dated March 7, 1905, I think it is; you make that five or six? (Hands letter to Judge Penn.)

Judge PENN: I don't know.

Mr. BRADY: Well, it is either five or six.

Mr. JOHNSON: All of those are 1906.

Mr. BRADY: Well, we will make it 1906 then,—March 7, 1905 or 6, discount Rotan Grocery Company, Waco, addressed to C. P. Ackert, General Manager, St. Louis. (Reads letter to Jury.)

Mr. BRADY: We next offer in evidence this letter in reference to the Dallas merchants,—December 9th.

Mr. BRADY: We offer the Morris letter.

(No objection from counsel for defendant.)

Mr. BRADY: March 2, 1906, discount B. L. Morris, Fort Worth, addressed to C. P. Ackert, General Manager, St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. BRADY: We offer letter of March 23, 1906.

Mr. ODELL: We have the same general objection to that one, that it is irrelevant and immaterial; that is the letter dated March 23, 1906,—"Discounts Snider Brokerage & Storage Co., San Angelo."

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Mr. ODELL: Defendant excepts.

(Mr. BRADY reads letter to Jury.)

Q. Now Mr. Cahoon, I will ask you to state whether or not it is a fact that prices on your oils at points where there is no competition are less than those points where there is competition in your Division?

Mr. ODELL: We object to that for the reason that it is 1333 wholly irrelevant and immaterial, the comparative prices asked for at competitive and non-competitive points, and is calculated to prejudice our case, and it is not in violation of the law to meet competition, even to the extent of reducing prices.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.
Mr. ODELL: We except.

Q. (Question read by Stenographer.)
A. In some cases there are and others there are not.
Q. Well, isn't it a general rule that where the railroad rate is the same, that the prices are lower where there is competition than where there is no competition?
A. We have competition at practically every agency in my territory.
Q. Well, then, I will ask you if it isn't a fact that the prices are less at those points where you have active and vigorous competition than they are where your competition is not active and aggressive?
A. I will answer that as I did the other; at some places they are and others not.
Q. Then I will ask you to state where you meet aggressive competition, what points in your territory, and have been recently?
A. Well, Paris is a very strong competition.
Q. Well, what price had you on Eupion Oil,—what has been the prevailing price at Paris on Eupion?
A. Fourteen cents is my recollection.
Q. Fourteen cents on Eupion; what on Brilliant?
A. Ten and a half, I think.
Q. How long has that been the prevailing price at Paris?
A. Eupion price has been the same for a year or more.
Q. For a year or more.
A. Yes, sir.

1334 Q. Now, I will ask you to state some other point in your Division which has the same freight rate as Paris, all the points in your Division that have the same freight rate as Paris, every one of them from Corsicana up.

A. Bonham, Honey Grove, Clarksville—there is a hundred of them practically all the same freight rate.
Q. Well, all right, what are the rates for Eupion and Brilliant at Bonham, Honey Grove and Clarksville,—have been for the past year?
A. Bonham is fourteen cents; Honey Grove is fourteen, as I recall it, I am not positive about that; Clarksville is fourteen.
Q. Some difference as to Brilliant?
A. Approximately, there may be half a cent difference on the Brilliant; I am not positive about that; we sell very little of it.
Q. Well, what is the difference between the freight rate to Paris and the freight rate to Greenville?
A. Just the same, I think.
Q. Well, have the prices been for the last year at Greenville fourteen cents?
A. No, sir.
Q. What difference?
A. Well, the price is thirteen and a half, my recollection, or possibly thirteen; now, I am not sure about that.
Q. To what do you attribute the difference between the price at Greenville and at Paris, both having the same freight rate?

A. The change at Greenville was brought about by a competitor cutting our price.

Q. Then, as a matter of fact, in that instance where the same freight rate obtains, the only reason why Eupion oil is half a cent or one cent less than at Paris, is on account of competition, isn't it?

A. Not necessarily; the larger gallonage we market at a town the less it costs per gallon to market it, and that cuts some figure.

1335 Q. Well, is your cost of marketing at Paris, Bonham, Honey Grove and Clarksville, the same at every one of those points?

A. Approximately; if there is any difference it costs us a little more at Paris; it is exactly the same at the other points.

Q. The cut at Greenville, you said that the cut was on account of competition, competitor cutting your price?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What railroad line is Commerce on, from Corsicana?

A. Is on the M. K. & T., I think.

Q. You know whether the rate at Commerce is different from the rate at——

Mr. ODELL: He is mistaken about the road; it is on the Cotton Belt.

The WITNESS: On the Cotton Belt, yes, sir.

Q. Texas Midland also, isn't it. Well, is there any difference in freight rate from Corsicana to Commerce than from Corsicana to Paris, Bonham, Clarksville and Honey Grove?

A. I think not; no, sir.

Q. What is your rate at Commerce on Eupion and Brilliant, respectively, for about the last year?

A. I don't remember what our prices are; the price on Brilliant, if I remember correctly, is nine and nine and a half; Eupion trade is fourteen.

Q. Eupion fourteen?

A. I am not sure about that, though.

Q. Why was Brilliant nine and a half there at Commerce and Eupion was fourteen the same as at Paris, Bonham, Honey Grove and Clarksville?

A. Brilliant was a cent less per gallon; that was brought about by a cut on the part of the competitor.

1336 Q. That was brought about by a cut by the competitor; I will ask you whether or not in December, December 1, 1905, your price for Brilliant was twelve and a half cents at Commerce, and Eupion was fifteen cents? Do you remember about that?

A. I don't remember, no, sir.

Q. Well, will you state that it was not?

A. I wouldn't make a statement one way or another because I don't remember it. It is too far back.

Q. Well, now, that difference at Commerce is due to the cut by the competitor; you kept Brilliant over there too?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And likewise at Greenville?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, there are a great many instances, are there not, of that kind, as to Eupion and Brilliant in your Division? I will ask you if it isn't a fact that your prices are regulated in those places by the competition very largely?

A. To some extent they are, but not entirely by any means.

Q. Well, isn't it a fact that you get the best prices you can get for your product, considering competition that exists and the competition that it would probably bring into existence if you raised the prices?

A. Up to a certain point, yes, sir.

Q. Well, don't you get the best prices you can get, considering the competition and competition you will probably bring into existence?

A. We have a great many places where we had active competition in the past and don't have it now.

Q. In one of your letters you say that the St. Louis office advised, or you advised the St. Louis office to make an advance on gasoline, general advance, and general advance on your refined oil, 1337 and you say, "where it would be safe"; what did you mean by that?

A. I probably meant by that that we could hold the trade.

Q. You could make that advance and hold the trade; then your competition did have considerable to do with your prices?

A. To some extent, yes, sir, but not entirely by any means.

Q. Well, I don't guess you would put it a dollar a gallon if there was no competition, but it did have a material effect on your prices, didn't it?

A. Where competitor cuts our price, it frequently becomes necessary for us to put into effect a reduction.

Q. I will ask you to examine this letter and see if you remember that circumstance? (Hands witness a letter) Have you any independent recollection of that letter? (Letter in reference to conditions at Commerce, December 1, 1905) Have any independent recollection of that?

A. No, sir, I do not; I probably wrote the letter.

Mr. BRADY: Will you compare that, gentlemen? (Hands letter to counsel for defendant.)

Q. Did you have anything to do with the fixing of the price at which your products are sold throughout your Division?

A. Only in a limited way.

Q. Well, what do you mean by limited way?

A. I make my recommendations and they are advised me by our St. Louis office.

Q. Final control of that matter is in whom?

A. General Manager Ackert's office.

Q. General Manager Ackert, of St. Louis?

A. I presume he is; I correspond with him in regard to changes.

Q. Well, from whom do you get your authority when you make your recommendations?

A. From whom do I get my authority to make recommendations?

1338 Q. No, after you have made the recommendations, when you act upon them?

A. General Manager Ackert.

Q. That applies to advances and reductions likewise, doesn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRADY: We offer this letter. (Above referred to.)

(No objection by counsel for defendant.)

Mr. BRADY: "Reduction at Commerce, dated Dec. 1, 1905, to Mr. C. P. Ackert, General Manager, St. Louis, Mo."

Mr. BATTS: Mr. Cahoon, do you know the signature of Mr. A. M. Finlay?

A. I would probably recognize it, yes, sir.

Mr. BATTS: You had frequent correspondence with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. BATTS: I will ask you to state whether or not this is his signature? (Hands witness paper.)

A. I should say it was, yes, sir.

Q. You think that it is his signature?

A. Yes, sir, I should say it was, yes, sir.

Thereupon Court adjourned until 8.30 p. m.

Court re-opened at 8.30 p. m.

Examination of C. W. CAHOON continued.

(By Mr. BATTS:)

Q. I note that you make a number of recommendations, Mr. McNall, Mr. Cahoon, to Mr. Acker, or other parties at the St. Louis office,—were those recommendations ordinarily acted on? The change of price, etc.

1339 A. Approved, you mean?

Q. Approved.

A. Sometimes they are and sometimes not. As a rule they are approved, yes, sir.

Q. As a rule, they are approved,—your recommendations?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I asked you about the signature of Mr. Finlay,—do you know the signature of Mr. Pierce?

A. No, sir; I don't think I would know it.

(That's all).

Cross-examination.

(By Mr. ODELL:)

Q. Mr. Cahoon, can you give us the date—the exact date—you became District Manager for the Company's Central Division of Texas?

A. January 1, 1903.

Q. Now, can you give the date when you became the Assistant Manager or Assistant to the Manager, or whatever your position was, in that territory?

A. I went to Dallas on April 1, 1893, as the Assistant to the Manager, and I held various positions of different titles, but I was practically his Assistant from that time on.

Q. You were then with the Company at the time the Eagle Refining Company, as conducted, that is, the oil business,—as conducted by the witness A. W. Clem, was purchased by the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. I don't know the date of the purchase, but I was with the Company then, yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, prior to your going to Dallas, I believe you had been with the Company many years?

A. Yes, sir; I was at Houston four years, and Galveston 1340 one year,—about one year,—prior to going to Dallas.

Q. You testified this afternoon with reference to the reorganization of the Company, the dissolution of the old company, and the organization of the new one. You were asked many questions with reference to whether there was any change in the method of doing business after the dissolution of the old company and the organization of the present company. I believe you said that the business was conducted practically as it had been before.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The physical properties of the present company remained in the same condition that they were maintained by the old company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was no change of name of the company?

A. No, sir.

Q. The new company retained the old employees,—most of them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Paid them the same salaries?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The tank-wagons, the stationery, that was not changed substantially, that is, the brands or the labels on the cars and on the company's property, the tank-wagons?

A. No, sir, there was no change in the wagons or any of the physical property.

Q. Mr. Cahoon, there was no effort at any time, of concealment on the part of the new company, was there?

A. Absolutely none to my knowledge; no, sir. Everything was, so far as I could judge, open and above board.

Q. Yes, sir. There was no effort, so far as you were concerned, or the employees under you, of misleading or deceiving the public with reference to the new company, or the present company carrying on substantially the same kind of business that the old company did?

1341 A. No, sir, there was not.

Q. Well, when you were asked this afternoon about the methods,—whether they were the same or not,—in order that it may get into the record and may enlighten the Jury and the Court,—any oil company, about what are its methods of doing business, that is, a marketing company such as the Waters Pierce Oil Company is?

How does it transact its business; get its oil to the consumers and to the customers?

A. Well, the oil is shipped to the various stations in bulk in tank-cars, and the very large percentage of deliveries are made by tank-wagons; in some territory practically all by tank-wagons. We not only deliver to the local trade that way, but in many places we deliver to every little town within a radius of fifteen and sometimes twenty miles of the central station, and the oil is measured into the country merchant's tank just as in the city.

Q. Now, having in mind the questions that have been propounded to you by State's counsel, with reference to whether there had been any change in the method of doing business,—was there any change that could have been made, Mr. Cahoon, to carry on successfully an oil business?

A. I don't see how they could have made any change and successfully continued to carry the business on.

Q. It was just as necessary for the present company to use tank wagons, as for the old company to use them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was necessary for them to have employees?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Managers, District Managers, and drivers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Necessary for them to have tank stations and tank wagons?

A. Yes, sir.

1342 Q. Tank-wagons?

A. Yes, sir, the new company required absolutely the same kind of equipment to do a successful business, as the old company.

Q. There have been no new methods recently originated or invented with reference to the handling of oil?

A. No, sir.

Q. Of a marketing concern?

A. It is handled very much the same now as it has been, excepting that we are extending our bulk delivery service a little more than a few years ago.

Q. You mean by that, you are sending your tank-wagons further out in the rural districts?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Delivering oil to the dealer and consumer?

A. We are not selling the consumer. The deliveries are made to the country merchants, and we are covering a much larger territory.

Q. You are using ten-gallon cans?

A. In some places ten-gallon cans are used, and in some places tank-wagons.

Q. Well, you were asked about the stationery,—whether there had been any change in the stationery. I believe you said the present company had printed on it the date of the organization?

A. Yes, sir. The letter-heads do. There may be some forms that do not have that; they are changing continually.

Q. The forms,—the kinds of reports you make to headquarters?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, was there any change that could have been made in the stationery, of benefit or advantage to the new company?

A. Why, none that I know of; it was necessary for us to make reports.

1343 Q. You were required to have paper?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And some printing on it to facilitate the business?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you, as Manager of the Company, conceal from the public at any time, or the officials, public officials, the kind of stationery that you were using?

—. ——.

Q. Did you undertake at any time to conceal from them the brand on your tank-wagons?

A. No, sir.

Q. Tank-stations?

A. No, sir.

Q. Then, if I understand you correctly, Mr. Cahoon, you have been interrogated about whether the present company changed the method of doing business, you mean to say that the old company,—that the present company simply used those conveniences that made it convenient and practical for them to transact their business?

A. Yes, sir; it would have been impossible for us to have continued doing an oil business without that same equipment.

Q. Yes, sir. Now, this afternoon you were interrogated with reference to the volume of the business done by the company, that is to say, as to the per cent. of the yearly business done by this company in the territory of which you were the District Manager. I believe you said that this company did about eighty or eighty-five per cent. of the business. That was your estimate of it?

A. Yes, sir; approximately eighty per cent., I believe.

Q. Now, Mr. Cahoon, I wish you would explain to the Jury the equipment of this company; its facilities for carrying on an oil business, as distinguished from the equipment and facilities of your competitors in this same territory.

A. The competitor, with possibly one exception, depends 1344 entirely on iron or wood barrels for making the deliveries. If the town is off the railroad the barrels have to be shipped to the nearest railroad point and then hauled out, and the result is there is almost invariably a loss from leakage, while with us the oil is delivered by tank-wagons and measured to the merchant, gallon for gallon, and he pays for it and the transaction ends there. I have always figured on iron or wood barrels a loss from leakage or wastage would be from five to eight per cent., especially in the summer time. By using the tank-wagons we save that, and as a result the average merchant prefers to pay more money when getting it from us, than when getting it in iron barrels.

Q. You speak of the merchant and his tank; about what is the capacity of the average tank that the smaller dealer or merchant has in his house?

A. Approximately sixty gallons.

Q. Now, explain to the Jury the advantage to the merchants of this iron tank filled from time to time from the tank-wagon, as distinguished from the oil carried in the iron barrel or wooden barrel stored in his house.

A. Well, in the first place, where a may buying oil from a tank-wagon, he can get from five gallons up, and where a merchant sells but ten or fifteen or twenty gallons a week, he don't have to carry any stock, buying from tank-wagons as he does from us. If he buys from a competitor in barrels, he has to buy fifty gallons at a time. That's one of the numerous advantages we have over the competitor in supplying the trade.

Q. Now, the oil in barrel, where it is carried by the small dealer or merchant,—how does it ordinarily affect his business, or the goods in the house, with reference to the leakage, and the oil, not only the leakage of the oil, by reason of its being stored there, damage other goods and wares in his house?

1345 A. If the oil is permitted to stand in the house in a barrel, there is almost invariably some leakage on the floor; or in hauling the barrel oil out to the store, the average merchant objects to carrying it with other goods, for the reason that it frequently damages it, flour and sugar especially; and we have a great many cases where merchants prefer to pay two or three cents more a gallon and have it hauled out, than he would f. o. b. the railroad station, where it is shipped to him on that account; and then again, oil is bad to handle at the best,—a clerk in the store handling other goods, objects to pumping out of barrels. The idea is where they buy in barrels they have to transfer from the barrel into a tank; that takes time, and there is more or less wastage; and then the merchant has to haul the barrel back and ship it to the company be bought from. All of which is saved where he can buy from tank wagons.

Q. Isn't it true that the average retail merchant insists at this day and time on getting his oil delivered in one of these tanks that you have described, from the tank-wagon?

A. A large majority do, yes, sir. In fact, I have undertaken bulk deliveries where I felt later I could not afford to continue them, and the merchant, just as soon as we stopped the trips, began to insist on our making them again.

Q. Isn't it true again, Mr. Cahoon, that as a rule that you charge more for your oil delivered as you have described your deliveries, than the dealer would have to pay for the oil, if he wanted it in the old way, in an iron or wooden barrel?

A. In a large majority of cases, yes, sir.

Q. And is not that the secret of your being able to maintain your prices?

A. It is due entirely to the bulk delivery system, as I see it, and the grade of oil that we are furnishing, also.

1346 Q. Now, approximate as nearly as you can, about how many tank-wagons you have in your territory.

A. I should say we were operating in my territory eighty-five wagons, that is, tank-wagons or can-wagons, either owned by the company or owned by the commission agent. In the latter case, we provide the cans and he provides the wagon and teams.

Q. About how long has this system prevailed,—of going to the country and supplying the merchants and dealers with tank-wagons?

A. As near as I remember, we first began spreading out the matter of making bulk deliveries some seven years ago, and we have gradually built it up.

Q. Well, are you increasing your equipment in that respect year after year,—covering more territory and reaching more dealers in remote localities?

A. Yes, sir. Our idea is to cover just as large a territory as we can possibly reach.

Q. Very well. Now you have estimated the number of tank wagons that you have in the territory that you supervise or superintend for the company. I wish you would estimate as nearly as you can about how many tank-wagons the combined opposition to the Waters Pierce Oil Company has in the same territory.

A. I would say approximately ten. They are making no country delivery, however, with the exception of a few trips out of Dallas.

Q. Now, about how many counties in Texas in your Division?

A. I declare I do not know.

Q. Well, approximate it, so as to give us an idea of the territory now.

A. My territory starts at the Red River and goes south on a line with Temple.

Q. On a line with Temple?

A. A line running East approximately; a line running East and West below Temple.

1347 Q. How far west do you go?

A. To Pecos and San Angelo.

Q. Well, you cover substantially one half of the State don't you?

A. I should judge very near one half; yes, sir. In population at least.

Q. In population?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do I understand you to say that aside from some deliveries that are made outside of the city of Dallas, that the defendant here is the only company that undertakes to cover that great territory with its tank-wagons, and to deliver to the dealers in rural districts off the railroads, oil from the tank-car——

A. From the tank-wagons.

Q. Tank-wagons, I mean?

A. Yes, sir, in my territory.

Q. Now, what is your equipment, that is, the equipment of the defendant, at the railroad centers or the distributing centers, as compared with your competitors?

A. Our plants are much larger; we carry much heavier stock.

Q. Now, very well. For instance, in your territory, where are your distributing centers?

A. Very well, take Fort Worth, for instance.

Q. What is the capacity there of your tanks?

A. As I recollect it, we have seventeen storage tanks and a large warehouse, some sixteen head of stock, and about eight men, eight or nine men; while our one,—one of our competitors has three little, very small, storage tanks.

Q. Now, the capacity of your tanks, what are they?

A. They vary, from the largest, having a capacity of about twenty thousand gallons, and the smallest will hold one tank car.

Q. What is the gross capacity, that is, of all of them?

A. All of them together?

1348 Q. Yes.

A. Approximately one hundred and seventy-five thousand gallons, I should say; I don't know exactly.

Q. Then you have a large warehouse, you say?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what do you keep in the warehouse,—the oil in cans and cases?

A. We carry a large stock of lubricating oil, candles, specialty goods and an immense variety of stock of all kinds.

Q. You have eight employees, you said?

Q. Nine or ten men I said, but I think there are nine, possibly ten.

Q. All right. Now, from your knowledge of the capacity of your competitors—competitors of this company in Fort Worth, that is, estimating all of them together,—about what is their storage capacity in Fort Worth of oil in bulk?

A. I should say about fifty thousand gallons, all of the competitors that are actively operating at the present time.

Q. Yes, sir. Well now where is another distributing point?

A. Dallas. Dallas is a large distributing point.

Q. Well, about what is your gross capacity of bulk oil in Dallas?

A. I should say about one hundred and twenty-five thousand gallons.

Q. Now, the competitors of the defendant in Dallas, about what is their gross capacity in bulk oil?

A. I am not familiar with the storage of the one competitor who is operating there. I should——

Q. You can approximate it then?

A. No, sir; I could not even give you an approximate idea.

Q. Well, your tank-wagons in Dallas,—how many do you have?

A. We operate three in the city and one in the country from Dallas.

Q. Have you any other distributing point in your territory?

A. We have Paris. Paris is quite a large distributing 1349 point. We operate three wagons in the country and one in the city there. At Sherman we operate one in the city and one in the country.

Q. Well, take your storage capacity in Paris for bulk oil, about what is it?

A. Little less than fifty thousand gallons.

Q. Do you know what the capacity of the opposition to your company is in Paris?

A. They have, I think, three storage tanks with an approximate capacity of ten thousand each—thirty thousand gallons.

Q. They operate no wagons in the country there?

A. No, sir.

Q. And you operate three?

A. Three, yes, sir.

Q. Well, at Sherman, what is your storage capacity for bulk oil?

A. When our plant will be completed, when it is completed, we will have about seventy-five thousand gallon storage; we are rebuilding it now.

Q. And how many tank-wagons do you have operating in the country?

A. We operate one in the country and one in the city. In speaking of tank-wagons, I refer to can-wagons as well. They are operated in the same way.

Q. Now, Mr. Cahoon, I wish you would state whether or not your equipment and your supplies of oil of various kinds, is and has been such that you have always been able to fill your orders promptly?

A. With very rare exceptions, we have always been. Occasionally we run out of stock at small stations, but that rarely happens.

Q. And if you do run out of stock at one of the small stations, you supply them from these distributing points in Texas?

A. Yes, sir, we supply them from the nearest stock station.

Q. And on short notice?

A. Yes, sir.

1350 Q. Now, what has been your observation as to whether the competitors of the Waters Pierce Oil Company were always able to fill their orders promptly?

A. Well, so far as I know, they have been able to do fairly well in filling their orders. I am not posted, however, as to how well they have kept in stock.

Q. Mr. Cahoon, since 1900, what has been the policy of the defendant Waters Pierce Oil Company with reference to cutting prices on oil?

A. It has not been their policy to cut prices on oil until it became a question of meeting a competitor's price or permanently losing the trade.

Q. Well, in meeting the competitor's price, have you reduced your price to his level?

A. Occasionally we do; as a rule we do not.

Q. Your service is such, then, that you can maintain a slightly higher price than the competitor?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, state whether or not you have cut under the competitor?

A. I don't recall a single instance where we have knowingly done that. I will qualify that to the extent of stating that in allowing a jobber a discount, our price, our net price, might possibly be as low or lower, or a fraction lower, but I would have no means of knowing about that.

Q. I understand. I will get to the jobber in a minute. I understood you to say that where you had your tank wagons, you delivered oil in quantities or from five gallons up.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, take the small dealer, Mr. Cahoon, as compared with the jobber. I wish you would explain to the Jury the cost to the company of delivering oil to the small dealer in smaller quantities as compared with delivering oil to the jobber in large quantities.

1351 A. Well, the larger the quantity of oil you can deliver at one time, the less the expense. We have many customers in the larger cities especially, that will buy five gallons at a time, and expect you to call on them once, twice or possibly three times in a day, while, if they would take a hundred galls., why, one trip, would possibly answer them for three or four days. That has grown to such an extent that in Dallas it forced us to put on an extra tank-wagon part of the time in the winter season to help out.

Q. Well, of course, in maintaining a tank-wagon service and making these deliveries in small quantities it cost- you more to deliver your oil to the small dealer than it does to the jobber?

A. Yes, sir, considerably more.

Q. And you take that into account, do you, in granting concessions to the jobber?

A. That is considered, yes, sir; and we also have in mind the fact that where we are selling a jobber, he is having his traveling men work the territory, and it relieves us of the expense of working the territory, and the jobber carries his accounts and sometimes does not get his money for sixty or ninety days, or until fall, and that is a great advantage to us to have an advantage of that kind.

Q. Since we are talking of the jobbers and those advantages, I will take up this Rotan Grocery Company matter. Do you remember a letter that you wrote to Mr. Ackert with reference to making some concessions to the Rotan Grocery Company of Waco?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now tell the Jury something about the Rotan Grocery Company, as to the character of business they carry on, the number of men,—drummers,—they have on the road and about the territory they cover.

A. Well, the Rotan Grocery Company are doing a very extensive wholesale business, with houses, if I recall right, at Waco, Temple, Hillsboro, Dublin, Cameron and possibly one other town.

1352 Q. Comanche?

A. I am not sure whether they have a house at Comanche or not. They travel I presume three or four men at least out of each house, on an average, and work their territory every week.

Q. Well, estimate about the number of men they have on the road.

A. I would say that an average of four men to the house would be very conservative. Traveling salesmen is what you have reference to?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, about twenty—then—would be a conservative estimate?

A. Yes, sir, I should think so.

Q. Well, now the territory they cover,—describe that with reference to its area and the population.

A. Well, they cover a very large and thickly settled territory, and, as stated before, many parts of it are worked every week. If we undertook to work it, it would necessitate our having more men than we have now, and then we could not work it as thoroughly as they do. I speak now of the territory we cannot reach by tank-wagons,—the barrel territory.

Q. Now explain to the Jury how these traveling salesmen from the Rotan Grocery Company relieve the defendant of the expense of advertising and getting to the trade the oils of this company.

A. San Angelo would be, probably, a good example of the advantages of dealing through the jobber. We supply a territory from there, I judge, a hundred to a hundred and fifty miles out. The jobber's salesman works the outlying towns every two or three weeks at a very heavy expense and solicits our orders for all of the lines we handle, not only refined oil, but many other grades of goods, and thereby saves us the expense of soliciting the trade.

Q. Now, in addition to saving you the expense of reaching 1353 this trade, state what their facilities are, that is, representatives and traveling salesmen of the Rotan Grocery Company, of introducing your oils, as distinguished from a stranger.

A. Well, the average grocery traveling salesman has a very extensive traveling acquaintance and stands close to the merchant.

Q. Extends credit to them?

A. Extends credit to them. His house many times carries them from June to the first of October, which places them in a position to extend courtesies to the retail merchant that we could not extend to them.

Q. Now explain to the Jury whether or not the Rotan Grocery Company, for instance, in handling your oils, whether they account to the company for that, that is, whether they pay for it, or do you look to the merchant?

A. We look to the Rotan Grocery Company.

Q. They pay your accounts?

A. Yes, sir, regardless of whether they have collected for the oil or not.

Q. Well, now, as the result of this saving to the Company in the many ways that you have described,—I understand that you give this concession in price to the Rotan Grocery Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, there is a letter about some wholesale grocery concern at San Angelo, isn't there?

A. The Walker-Smith Grocery Company, at San Angelo, yes, sir.

Mr. BRADY: At Brownwood.

A. Yes, sir, Brownwood.

Q. Without going into the details again, and consuming time,—I wish you would state to the Jury whether or not this concession that was called to your attention, or this recommendation in the letter offered in evidence, was based on the same principles and grew out of the same conditon of facts that the Rotan Grocery 1354 Company did.

A. Yes, sir, it was very much the same kind of a proposition. We lost their trade because they claimed that we offered oil at lower prices, and objected to our extending our country tank-wagon service to the retail merchant,—interfering with their making the sales, and the result was that we had to,—in order to hold our trade,—we had to travel the country much more thoroughly with our own man than previously, and it made it necessary for me to place two men in the territory I had formerly covered with one man; and afterwards they found—it was so stated to me—their arrangement not entirely satisfactory, and I am under the impression it was at their own request, their own suggestion, that they came back to us and accepted the arrangement we offered.

Q. Mr. Cahoon, you testified this afternoon about Eupion Oil. I believe P. W. that is Prime White oil?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Brilliant Oil and S.W., or Standard White?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well now, this brand or name, "Eupion Oil", is that or not a trade-mark of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. It is my understanding that it is a trade-mark brand.

Q. No other concern within your knowledge sells oil under the name of Eupion Oil?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well now, all right——

A. Excepting that they buy it from us.

Q. Yes, sir. Very well. Well now, Eupion Oil,—what distinguishes Eupion Oil from Prime White or Standard White or Brilliant or the other oils?

A. Well, Prime White, Standard White and Water White are refinery terms, while the Eupion Oil is a trade-mark brand that 1355 has been advertised for many years, at considerable expense; is well known by everyone, and called for by many customers. That in itself helps to hold the trade on it.

Q. Well, all right. That isn't exactly what I wanted to get at. Now, is it not true that as far as Eupion Oil is concerned, that it is bought at many different refineries,—the oil is?

A. It is shipped to us from a number of different refineries.

Q. That just simply means that it is the high-grade oil turned out by those refineries?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, it is the best grade?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Like the best grade of flour from mills?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when this oil is purchased at the refinery by the Waters Pierce Oil Company, the Eupion brand goes on the high grade oil?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well now, Mr. Cahoon, you speak about Eupion Oil being advertised well, being known to the consumers generally, or by very many of them. Now, as a high grade and first-class oil, tell the Jury whether or not the reputation of that oil has anything to do with your ability to maintain prices and to sell such a large quantity of oil as you do?

A. The reputation of the oil is of very material assistance to us in holding the trade at the prices we do.

Q. Well now, after Eupion, what is the next best grade of oil?

A. We only market—we market an oil under the brand of Extra Headlight.

Q. Now there was some testimony about oil called Brilliant.

A. That is a common term applied to the low grade oils.

Q. And there is a difference, I believe, of three or four cents a gallon?

1356 A. From——

Q. Between the marketing price of Eupion and the Brilliant oil?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You sell much more of the Eupion than of the Brilliant?

A. Almost entirely Eupion in my territory, yes, sir.

Q. Isn't it true that you sell ten barrels of the Eupion Oil to where you sell one of the Brilliant?

A. That is just about the proportion,—about ninety per cent. Eupion.

Q. Mr. Cahoon, in discussing what were called "rebates" this afternoon, or concessions, evidenced in these letters that were exhibited to you, or read in your hearing, I wish you would state whether or not your competitor granted rebates and made concessions to jobbers and other large dealers in oil?

A. We have been advised many times by the merchants that the competitor has offered them rebates.

Q. Mr. Cahoon, getting back to the jobber for a minute,—what does you company handle aside from Oil, what do they market?

A. Lubricating oils, axle grease, candles, paraffine wax, oil cans, harness oil, and a large line of specialty goods, stoves, lamps——

Q. Oil stoves?

A. Oil stoves, oil heaters, and a large line of lamps.

Q. Now, these jobbers, would they handle all classes of your goods?

A. Not all; they handle quite a number of items a wholesale grocery house would handle; some lubricating oil, axle grease, candles, possibly a little paraffine wax, and odds and ends in the specialty lines.

Q. How many tank-stations have you in your territory?

A. My recollection is now that it is 102; I will have 109 within a very short time.

1357 Q. Now describe to the Jury what you mean by tank-stations.

A. A tank station consists of a small warehouse or a warehouse large enough to enable us to carry a sufficient stock of axle grease and package goods to supply the trade, one or two storage tanks, with a capacity of from ten to twenty thousand gallons, the pipe connections, the ten-gallon delivery cans,—go to make up the station.

Q. Now, these storage tanks that you spoke of,—they are ordinarily built alongside of the railroad track?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the oil is emptied from a tank-car into the storage tanks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, getting back to—you say you have 102 of those tank stations in your territory?

A. That is my recollection, yes, sir.

Q. About how many storage tanks do your competitors operate in the same station—their stations?

A. How many tank stations?

Q. Yes, sir, tank stations.

A. Approximately twelve, large and small.

Q. Yes. Twelve as against more than a hundred.

A. Yes. Those figures are approximate; I would not be positive.

Q. Now, you distribute in this territory there by tank wagon or milk can, or oil can, from all of these 102 stations, do you not?

A. All but two or three; there are two or three stations in the extreme west where we are not doing it.

Q. Now, by this particular method you have described, of delivery from tank-wagons, I mean by the tank-wagon, and what is called the oil milk-can method, is it not true that about, that is, approximately seventy-eight per cent. of the company's business in this territory that you superintend*ent,* is done in that—by that method?

1358 A. Just about that percentage, yes, sir.

Q. Then this seventy-eight per cent. of the company's business in this territory comes to them by reason of these extraordinary facilities they have for the delivery of oil, as compared with your competitor?

A. That influences the trade to a very considerable extent; other reasons why it is held, are: It is worked aggressively by our traveling salesmen and agents; every possible courtesy is extended to merchants, in addition to keeping them well supplied.

Q. Mr. Cahoon, about how many agents and employees have you in your territory?

A. It is rather difficult to say without figuring it up. Commissioned and salaried together, I should say approximately from 165 to 175—165 possibly.

Q. Is that agents or employees?

A. Employees.

Q. Well, how many agents have you?

A. We have 102; each station has an agent.

Q. You have an agent at each station, of course?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you spoke about courtesies extended to merchants in delivering oil from your tank-wagons. How is it measured, as to whether or not gallon for gallon?

A. We are furnished with standard five-gallon measures that are used for delivering oil from the wagon, and it is drawn from the rear of the wagon and measured into the merchant's tank in that way.

Q. He gets then every gallon he pays for?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what method do you take to protect the merchant and see that he gets full measure,—the dealer? Have you any 1359 system of checking against the driver to see that the customer has been protected?

A. Yes, sir, we provide the driver with what we call "tank-wagon tickets," that he makes in duplicate,—one copy for the merchant, and one copy for us. In order to insure the merchant always getting what he pays for, we frequently have our traveling salesmen to look over these tickets as they find them in the merchants' stores; they take a memorandum of the numbers on them and compare them with the numbers in our office, so as to see that they are the same. Occasionally we find where a merchant has paid for fifty gallons, his copy reads fifty and our copy reads forty. Those are rare cases, but we continuously are on the look-out, in order to protect the merchant and see that he gets what he pays for.

Q. Mr. Cahoon, do you know A. W. Clem?

A. Slightly, yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known Mr. Clem?

A. Why, I am under the impression that I met him some six or eight years ago.

Q. Do you remember the circumstances of the trial of the Hathaway case in McLennan County in 1895 or 1896?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. More than ten years ago?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Cahoon, I wish you would state to the Jury whether or not after the trial of the Hathaway case, it was generally known that A. W. Clem was merely a manager and agent of the Waters Pierce Oil Company in selling oil?

A. My recollection is that at that time these facts were stated in every newspaper, continuously, and a large majority of the merchants knew it.

1360 Q. Do you know anything about—you heard Mr. Clem's testimony, did you not?

A. Only a part of it; I——

Q. Do you know anything about a sign that was sent to Clem at Dallas, in 1900?

A. I have seen the sign, yes sir.

Q. That was sent for him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what instructions he had with reference to that sign?

A. No, sir, I had no means of knowing anything about his instructions.

Q. You didn't see the instructions?

A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Cahoon,—how many competitors have you at Dallas?

A. Of all kinds?

Q. Yes.

A. Three.

Q. Name them.

A. Clem Oil Company, the Oriental Oil Company and the Independent Oil Company.

Q. About how long have they been operating there?

A. The Oriental Oil Company have been in business five or six years, I think. I don't recall when Mr. Clem went into business; I am under the impression it was about 1903; and the Independant Oil Company only opened up about thirty days ago. In addition, however, I omitted to state another one,—the Bonner Oil Company, which is maintaining a stock in Dallas, as well.

Q. Have these companies any connection with the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Absolutely none to my knowledge.

1361 Q. What about the Gulf Refining Company; do they sell oil in Dallas,

A. Not to the retail trade, no, sir.

Q. Well, do they sell it to these oil jobbers there?

A. Yes, sir, I have understood that they sold the Clem Oil Company and also some to the Oriental Oil Company.

Q. Now, the Richardson-Gay Company; do they operate in Dallas?

A. No, sir, not direct.

Q. Well, do they sell to the jobber?

A. It is my understanding that they sell some oil to Mr. Clem and the Oriental.

Q. Now, the Southwestern Oil Company; how long did it operate in Dallas?

A. I don't remember when they opened up; it must have been six or seven years.

Q. Well, did they undertake to do a general oil business?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has there been at any time since May 30, 1900, Mr. Cahoon, that you haven't had aggressive, active competition in the oil business that you supervise for the defendant?

A. We have had active competition ever since I have been connected with the business in Dallas.

Q. Well now, at Fort Worth; what competition have you there?

A. The Gulf Refining Company are operating a plant, and the Muskogee Refining Company,—two competitors.

Q. Any others?

A. There is another concern that carries a little lubricating stock there, yes, sir.

Q. Well, what is it?

A. George Hensler, I think, is the style of the firm.

Q. Now, the Gulf and the Muskogee Refining Companies,

1362 how long have they been operating in Fort Worth?

A. The Muskogee Refining Company has been operating a little less than sixty days; the Gulf Refining Company has been operating for, I presume, two years,—close to it.

Q. You speak of the Muskogee Refining Company,—is that of Muskogee, Indian Territory?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, at Paris, what competition have you there?

A. The Gulf Refining Company.

Q. Well, Sherman?

A. The Gulf Refining Company, and the Southwestern Oil Company had a plant there; also the Independent Oil Company.

Q. Denison?

A. The Richardson-Gay Oil Company have a plant at Denison.

Q. Greenville?

A. The Climax Ink and Oil Company have a plant at Greenville.

Q. Waco; that's in your territory, isn't it?

A. The Climax Ink and Oil Company carry a stock at Waco.

Q. Temple?

A. There is no stock of competitive oil carried at Temple at the present time; the Southwestern were operating there.

Q. How long did they operate there?

A. I should judge six or seven years.

Q. Well, do those companies sell there in barrels, if they find a customer who wants it in barrels?

A. You say the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

Q. No, I say other companies.

A. Oh, yes, quite frequently it is in barrels.

Q. And at Gainesville, what stations are there?

A. No tank stations there; the Gulf Refining Company sells barrel oil.

Q. At Cleburne?

1363 A. It is shipped from Dallas and Fort Worth.

Q. They have no tank station?

A. No, sir.

Q. You were asked to-day with reference to competition being more active and aggressive for the last year or two than it had been, were you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in that connection, is it not true that there have been many discoveries of oil in the Indian Territory, that is, the Muskogee field, and other points in the Indian Territory and in Kansas and in Texas, and in Arkansas,—the last two or three years; and doesn't that account for the activities or so very many independent concerns, especially those that undertake to supply the trade in barrels?

A. That accounts for several of them entirely, yes, sir.

Q. The oil discoveries in the Indian Territory have been so great, the field so productive for the last year or two, that they are building a pipe line from the Indian Territory, through Texas, to the Gulf, are they not?

A. That is my understanding, yes, sir.

Q. B I think I asked this question, but I don't want to be mistaken about it. Mr. Cahoon, in this territory that you supervise for the defendant,—state whether or not you reach every town, hamlet and village with your tank-wagons and with your cans in delivering to the dealers.

A. We come just as near it as possible, yes, sir. Wherever we can make a trip within a day, or some within two days, we make them.

We have a number of trips where it is necessary for the wagon to stay out over night.

(That's all).

1364 Redirect examination.

(By Mr. Batts:)

Q. You say there have been enormous discoveries of oil in the Indian Territory?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And enormous discoveries in Texas?

A. Yes, sir, that is my understanding.

Q. What has been the result, so far as the Texas consumers are concerned? Has it decreased the price of oil?

A. I don't know that it has to any material extent; it has lowered the price of naphtha and gasoline for engine use.

Q. Well, with regard to refined oil and oils that are ordinarily used by the people of Texas; do they or not pay as much for oil now as they did before the great deposits in the Indian Territory were discovered and the great deposits in Texas were discovered?

A. I would say there was no marked difference.

Q. It is a fact that for a long time in Texas there was produced as much as—more than 100,000 barrels of oil a day?

A. I am not personally familiar with that.

Q. Well, you know that as well as you know a great number of things you have testified to?

A. I presume so.

Q. You know that over 100,000 barrels—that would be how many gallons a day?

A. Barrels of crude oil?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Four million gallons.

Q. The enormous deposits in the Indian Territory and in different parts of Texas is just as much as it ever was?

A. Very small percentage of that crude oil is refined.

Q. Well, while we are on that, tell me how much is refined 1365 in Texas now.

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, you can make an estimate?

A. Only a small part of it is refined oil because the crude oil only produces a limited amount of refined, as I understand it.

Q. I will ask you if it isn't a fact that there are more than 20,000 barrels of oil a day refined in Texas?

A. I don't know; I am not familiar with the South Texas refineries at all.

Q. Well, you know that the Security Company has got a very large refinery near Beaumont, don't you?

A. I have heard so.

Q. Well, what have you heard the capacity of that to be?

A. I don't know; don't recall having heard it.

Q. Don't you know its capacity is 15,000 barrels a day?

A. I don't know it.

Q. Well, have you had any information to that effect?

A. I don't recollect.

Q. You keep in touch with the oil situation as Manager of the Texas Division of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. I get a very large percentage of my refined oil, have been recently from the North, North and Corsicana; I get very little from South Texas, and am not familiar with that.

Q. Well, you don't mean to tell me that as an oil man you have no idea of the output of the refineries of Texas?

A. I have no idea of the output of the refineries in South Texas.

Q. Well, up until very recently your principal supply came from Chaison, the Security Oil Company's refinery?

A. No, sir.

Q. You stated so this afternoon, did you not?

A. No, sir.

1363 Q. And from Neodesha?

A. From Corsicana and Neodesha.

Q. Up to about two months ago?

A. Well, state that question again and let me understand it.

Q. I say didn't you state that up to about two months ago your principal oil supply came from Chaison, the Security Oil Company's station, and Neodesha, Kansas?

A. I didn't intentionally say that; a big percentage of the refined oil came from Chaison and large percentage came from Neodesha.

Q. You knew of the existence of these refineries in Texas?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And has the Gulf Refining Company a refinery?

A. Yes, sir, I have been told they have.

Q. The Texas company have a refinery?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Security Company a refinery?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the concern at Corsicana, whose output you received?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, all of those except the Corsicana refinery have been established in the last five years, have they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And notwithstanding that, you say there has been no decrease in the price of oil to the people of Texas?

A. No, I don't know, couldn't state positively, but I don't think there is any material difference.

Q. Now, you stated that you go into every hamlet and town, something of the sort; you don't go anywhere where the jobber does his business do you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You told us before that you utilized the jobber to at-1367 tend to the business; that that cut down your expenses, and you didn't have to keep a man there? You don't do anything where the Rotan Grocery Company does business?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you are mistaken when you say you didn't ha[illegible] to maintain men in their section?

Mr. ODELL: We insist that that is an argument; the witness didn't make that statement.

Mr. BATTS: Counsel made the statement, but the witness acquiesced in it.

Mr. ODELL: Counsel didn't make it, and it is an argument and a re-examination of the witness.

Mr. BATTS: Cross examination on new matter.

Mr. ODELL: He is their witness, and it is asking for conclusions, and is an argument.

The COURT: The objections are overruled.

Mr. ODELL: Defendant excepts.

Q. Now, I understand you to have said that you utilized the jobbers to attend to this business for you, and they saved you any necessity for sending men into that territory and that thereby you can give them a very extraordinary rate,—is that what you now state?

A. I said, as I recall it, that the jobber worked the towns and supplied that business, but not our tank-wagon towns.

Q. Then as to the business you have got established, the jobbers don't affect it at all?

A. Not our tank wagon deliveries.

Q. Then in territory that you haven't got tank-wagons, you don't undertake to work that country?

A. We don't work it with our men as thoroughly as we would otherwise.

1368 Q. But I understood you to say that you didn't have to have any men in there at all. You still maintain men in there?

A. I said we didn't have to work it as often as we did otherwise.

Q. Well, that is the extent to which you now go,—that you don't work it as often, don't have to work it as much.

A. We don't work it as often as we would if we were not selling to the jobber.

Q. Now, so far as these jobbers are concerned and these people that they serve, you have no peculiar facilities for selling to jobbers?

A. Only the advantage of having the stocks distributed over the territory, making it convenient for them to get their supplies.

Q. Well, take the Rotan Grocery Company, does it depend upon your local tank wagons to supply its demands?

A. I don't understand you.

Q. You sell to the Rotan Grocery Company. You say it has got five or six or seven places in Texas and they employ a great many salesmen in Texas. Now, in your sales to the Rotan Grocery Co., do you sell to them in car load lots, or how?

A. We sell them what they buy in single barrel lots just as they want it.

Q. Delivered where?

A. At whatever point they want to draw it from.

Q. To them or to their customers?

A. To them; they do the shipping out.

Q. And do they have any tank wagons to deliver?
A. No, sir.
Q. Then these persons whom they serve have to get it in barrels?
A. Iron barrels, yes, sir.
Q. And stand the loss that you say results from the use of iron barrels?
A. Yes, sir.
1369 Q. Those people do?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then so far as that particular trade is concerned, the Rotan Grocery Company isn't in a better position than these other people that have nothing except barrels, are they?
A. I don't understand the question.
Q. I say are the Rotan Grocery Company in any better position to handle that trade than your other competitors who have only iron barrels?
A. Why certainly, the people are in better position to handle it; they are carrying the merchants and extending them a line of goods which influences the trade.
Q. Now, you sell to jobbers where you can do so?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you give them the same prices?
A. Not necessarily, no sir.
Q. Those cuts to these particular persons mentioned in these letters here?
A. Well, cuts to the prices that you give to jobbers ordinarily; ten per cent. is the ordinary jobber's discount.
Q. You asked for a special price to certain jobbers. You are given a general price to supply to all jobbers, are you not?
A. No, sir.
Q. You are not?
A. No, sir; I have no jobber's price.
Q. You have no jobber's price?
A. No, sir.
Q. Then the price that jobbers ordinarily get is exactly the same as you would give to any other merchant?
A. Yes, sir, less the discount that is allowed to him.
Q. Is there a regular discount allowed, or do you get a 1370 special discount from St. Louis?
A. It has always been customary for our St. Louis office to pass on each individual case as it came up.
Q. Now, the Rotan Grocery Company, you had their territory pretty well covered with your tank wagons, did you not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You covered the same territory that the Rotan Grocery Company barrel order transfers do?
A. Yes, sir, the tank-wagon transfers do.
Q. You go right into the territory that they go into?
A. Yes, sir, except a few outlying towns that we don't reach with the wagon, can't reach them.
Q. Now, as I understand you, you have one hundred and two stations?

A. That is my recollection; approximately that.
Q. One hundred and two storage tanks, or more?
A. More than that, two or three times that much.
Q. Two or three times that many tanks?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You have eighty-five delivery wagons, tank delivery wagons?
A. I said that we have about 85; approximately that.
Q. Horses for each of them?
A. Surely.
Q. Equipment for each, harness?
A. In some cases I said the equipment, the wagons and harness and horse were owned by the agent and others we own them ourselves.
Q. You have in addition to that I suppose a large number of iron barrels that are in use in this territory?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You have gone into every hamlet and established your business there, or substantially every one in your territory?
A. Every one we could get to, yes, sir.
1371 Q. You have a warehouse at all these places?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Good large part of that has risen since 1900 hasn't it, a good large part of that improvement or that property has been accumulated since the present company went into business,—since 1900?
A. No, sir; if I understand the question right,—a great many of our plants were operated prior to that time.
Q. Well, I don't mean that all of them; I asked you if a large part of them, or a good large part of this property hadn't been accumulated since that time?
A. A large percentage of the property was in existence prior to 1900.
Q. And a large part since that time?
A. Quite a number of plants have been put in since that time, yes, sir.
Q. The business has increased, has more than doubled since you have had charge of it?
A. No, not to that extent.
Q. Well, it has quadrupled since you have been connected with the company?
A. It has undoubtedly increased wonderfully.
Q. All of this property has been accumulated and paid for out of the profits of this concern and six or seven hundred per cent. paid in addition to it in dividends?
A. I don't know what dividends are paid.
Q. All this property accumulated and six or seven hundred per cent. per year paid in addition to that, do you know?
A. I don't know anything about the dividends, the property has been accumulated, certainly.
Q. And you state that you conducted your business upon the basis of the superior quality of your oil, and you further state that Eupion Oil, the name "Eupion Oil" is a representative of the highest 1372 grade of oil made by these refineries—I will ask you if it isn't a fact that you sell any grade of oil whatever as Eupion

Oil that you can, that the demands or requirements of business suggest that you use?

A. No, sir, it is not a fact.

Q. It is not a fact?

A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't sell anything then except the highest grade of oil as Eupion Oil?

A. I am not in position to know what grades of oil are shipped now.

Q. I will ask you then this question,—if you haven't recommended that an inferior oil be shipped as Eupion Oil?

A. I did that one time when we couldn't get anything else.

Q. I will ask you if you haven't recommended that it be shipped for the purpose of recouping from the loss resulting from cutting the price?

A. I don't recall of making such a recommendation.

Q. I will ask you further if you haven't recommended or stated that you would put in Brilliant and sell it at the regular prices and meet your competition in that way, as Eupion Oil, and meet your competition that way?

A. I have no recollection of making such a recommendation; If I did it would certainly be out of the ordinary.

Q. Well, you don't ordinarily do that, then?

A. No, sir.

Q. And you don't ordinarily sell poor oil as Eupion oil?

A. Not knowingly, no, sir.

Q. And you don't ordinarily get S. W. oil at a hundred and fourteen to sell for oil of the one hundred and fifty, don't ordinarily do that?

A. No, sir.

1373 Q. But you sometimes do it?

A. The only time I recollect it is the instance I stated we were out of oil.

Q. Now give me the time that was.

A. I don't remember.

Q. You can't come at that? You stated what it was?

A. I didn't state the date; I would say that it was this past winter a year ago, as near as I can remember; I am not positive, however.

Q. In this case it would be the ordinary course of business for you to have told your customers you didn't have it, would it not?

A. We were forced to tell them we didn't have oil; we run out—quite a number of places.

Q. At that time, when you substituted this poor oil for the good oil, for the high grade oil, and sold it for Eupion, you didn't tell your customers that, did you?

A. The oil was not necessarily bad, the S. W. 112 oil.

Q. It is just as good as the other?

A. No, sir, it isn't as good as the other.

Q. It isn't as good as that which you styled as Eupion oil?

A. No, sir.

Q. Isn't it a fact that your statement to the trade is that your Eupion Oil is oil of the best quality and better quality than is handled by your competitor?

A. If we had occasion to make the statement——

Q. That is the statement you make?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your statement is that Eupion Oil is always high, fine grade of oil?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your statement is that that is better oil than S. W. 112?

1374 A. If we had occasion to make the statement, that is what we would state.

Q. That is what you would state if the exigencies of business required?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is a fact that you can't sell, except in this State or one or two other States where the people have not been sufficiently protected by law, oil of that grade, S. W. 112?

Mr. ODELL: We object to that as wholly irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in this case, the assumption of what laws are in other States, and it is prejudicial to the defendant in this case.

Mr. BATTS: I expect to show by this witness that in most of the States of this Union, oil of that character cannot——

Mr. ODELL: I object to the statement before the Court and Jury.

Mr. BATTS: Get the Jury out.

Mr. ODELL: I am not running the Court; I am making my objection to the Court. As to what the laws of other States are is wholly irrelevant and immaterial; they can't bind the people of Texas or influence the laws of Texas, and it is prejudicial.

Mr. ALLEN: The evidence is already in.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Mr. ODELL: The defendant excepts.

Q. Now, isn't it a fact that some of the oil you have sold in this State as Eupion Oil could not be sold in other States at all on account of its inferior quality?

A. I am not personally familiar with the inspection laws of other States; there are some States where I presume it could not be sold.

1375 Q. Now, in addition to sending S. W. 112 sometimes as Eupion Oil, you also had an inferior quality of Water White 120 shipped as Eupion Oil at one time, did you not?

A. I never knew of an inferior grade of W. W. 120 being shipped intentionally.

Q. Will you explain this then, this letter in which you speak of an order for one tank car of Eupion P. W. 150 for shipment to Stephenville, Texas, and "I will be obliged if you will instruct Agent Angus to ship W. W. 120 on this order".

A. You want to know if the W. W. 120 was an inferior oil?

Q. No, I wanted to have you explain that, if you didn't send out W. W. 120 as P. W. 150?

A. P. W. 150 is an oil that isn't made for sale in Texas, not ordinarily sold in Texas, and we were at that time possibly using that oil because we couldn't get any other.

Q. The P. W. is superior to any oil you sell in Texas?

A. No, sir, it is inferior; it is a higher fire test but an inferior compared with Eupion.

Q. Now, talking about S. W. 112, will you explain this letter: "There are some points in Central Texas where we can market it, Corsicana S. W. 112, as Eupion", did you do that?

A. We did it at the time I refer to.

Q. And possibly that was the reason for it?

A. Because we couldn't get the other oil, yes, sir.

Q. And that was the reason that you assign for wanting to do this, to the St. Louis office?

A. It was; my recollection is it was either a question of doing that or getting an oil from South Texas, and at that time they hadn't been able to refine satisfactorily burning oil in South Texas, and I objected to it; that is my recollection; I wouldn't be positive about that, however, S. W. 112 made at Corsicana was a much more satisfactory burning oil than the best oil we could get in South 1376 Texas at that time.

Q. Well now, you couldn't at that time get as good oil as S.W. 112 from Chaison?

A. No, sir.

Q. Security Company?

A. No, sir.

Q. Then you were at that time handling S.W. 112, which is an oil so poor that it can't be sold in some States, and some oil that was inferior even to that to the Texas consumers as Eupion oil?

Mr. ODELL: We object to the question because it is an assumption of what the laws were in other States, not the best evidence of what the law is in other States and the witness isn't shown to be an expert, for the purpose of contradiction on an immaterial and prejudicial issue to the defendant in this case.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Mr. ODELL: Defendant excepts.

Q. Is that true?

A. Will you kindly state it again.

Q. I asked you if it wasn't a fact that at that time you were selling S.W. 112 Corsicana oil, as poor a quality that it couldn't be sold in some States, and still a more inferior quality made by the Security Oil Company at Chaison, Texas, as Eupion Oil?

A. It is a fact that we sold at that time some Corsicana 112 as Eupion; it was not necessarily a poor grade of oil, however, because if it is properly burned it will give just as satisfactory a light as any light, if it is burned in a proper device.

Q. Now the other oil at Chaison was poorer even than that, you say?

A. It didn't give my trade satisfaction.

Q. And those were the two oils you were handling as Eupion Oil for the Texas trade?

A. I don't recall handling over a very few cars of Chaison 1377 oil and that was before I knew—or before we knew that it was unsatisfactory.

Q. You were selling it as Eupion oil?

A. Yes, sir; we sold a few cars of Eupion Oil before we discovered the oil wasn't satisfactory.

Q. And then went from that quality of oil gotten at Chaison and sold as Eupion Oil, to the S.W. 112 gotten at Corsicana?

A. The S.W. 112 was used, as I stated, simply to tide over; we do not now and have never made a practice of substituting knowingly.

Q. Where do you get that Eupion Oil now?

A. I have been getting considerable portion of it from Neodesha, and get some from Corsicana as well.

Q. What is the quality of the oil that you get now at Corsicana, that you use as Eupion?

A. Very satisfactory, so far as I know; occasionally we have a little trouble due to local causes mostly, but as a general proposition it is very satisfactory.

Q. Now, you talked about the changes that were made in the business. You knew the occasion for the re-incorporation of the company, did you not, the fact of the judgment which had been rendered in Texas excluding the Waters Pierce Oil Company from this State?

Mr. ODELL: That is a question of law; we object to it; it is prejudicial to the defendant and not the best evidence.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Mr. ODELL: Defendant expects.

Q. Did you know about that?

A. Only from hearsay, newspapers.

Q. Well, you knew about it just as you knew about the fact that Mr. Clem testified at Corsicana, did you not?

A. At Waco?

Q. Yes, sir.

1378 A. Same way, yes, sir.

Q. And you knew that that was the occasion for the re-incorporation of this company?

A. I supposed it was.

Q. Judgment excluding that concern from the State?

A. I supposed it was.

Q. Now, I understand you to say that the only change that you knew of that resulted from that judgment therein rendered by the State of Texas against this concern was that on some of its letter heads the words, "Incorporated May 29, 1900" was put upon some of those letter heads?

A. That was put on as I recall, on all of the letter heads.

Q. That was the only change of any kind that was effected in so far as you know, on account of that judgment of the Court in Texas?

A. Practically so, yes, sir.

Q. Now, you say that everybody knew about the circumstance that Mr. Clem testified at Corsicana that the Eagle Refining Company's business—at Waco—that the Eagle Refining Company's business was the business of the Waters Pierce Oil Company. Will you tell me why it was then, that thereafter that business was maintained up there?

A. That is something I had nothing to do with; I don't know.

Q. You don't know of any reason then for it being maintained up there, thereafter?

A. I don't know what the reason was.

Q. Two separate establishments there in Dallas?

A. There were two, yes, sir.

Q. Involving unnecessary expense?

A. That is a matter that was handled entirely by our St. Louis office, and one which I know nothing about; I wasn't even manager of the Division at that time.

1379 Q. The Waters Pierce Oil Company was entirely able to take care of the trade there, was it not?

A. In Dallas?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I should say so, yes, sir.

Q. Capable of it, just as it is now, was it not?

A. Yes, sir, just as capable.

Q. No competition of any sort after that was bought out was there?

A. I don't recall when the Southwestern Oil Company was there, but I think it was along about that time.

Q. After Mr. Clem gave his testimony at Waco, there was no competition there?

A. I don't remember.

Q. The Southwestern Oil Company didn't come in there until 1900, about; did it?

A. I am not sure about when it was.

Q. Then you know of no reason, if everybody knew that the Eagle Refining Company was a part of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, why that business was run independently?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know about the fact that the Eagle Refining Company was a part of the Waters Pierce Oil Company prior to the time Mr. Clem gave his testimony?

A. I heard it stated it was, yes, sir.

Q. You didn't know about that?

A. I didn't know positively, no, sir.

Q. No employee of the company knew about it?

A. I understood that it belonged to the Waters Pierce Oil Company, but I had never had any dealings with Mr. Clem.

Q. Never seen any correspondence with them?

A. No, sir, not pertaining to the Eagle Refining Company's business.

1380 Q. You say no effort has been made to conceal the status of things since this was done?

A. No, sir, absolutely none.

Q. You are manager of the Central Texas Division of the Waters Pierce Oil Company in Texas; did you know anything at all about the fact that the Standard Oil Company owned a majority of the stock of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. I think my first information came from the newspapers.
Q. During the last six or eight months?
A. Oh, no, sir.
Q. When did you first get any information about it at all?

Mr. ODELL: We object to the question as to what this witness may have known about the Standard Oil Company's stock as being irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in this case, taking up time unnecessarily.

The COURT: The objection is sustained.

Mr. BATTS: I want to suggest that this is cross examination upon a matter that was brought out new by the defendant; he states no effort was made to conceal anything connected with this concern, and I want to show that——

The COURT: I don't care to hear argument; I don't think there was any statement made about whether there was any effort to conceal the ownership of the stock of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, or about the Clem transaction.

Q. Mr. Cahoon, there is, as far as you know, no patents of any kind on these tank wagons, nothing to keep anybody from getting them?
A. If they have the price.
Q. Now, there have been quite a number of people during the time you have been with the concern at Dallas, have under-1381 taken to supply the business of the people in your territory have there not?
A. In Dallas proper?
Q. In Dallas and in the territory adjacent to it.
A. There have been several, yes, sir.
Q. They have not lasted long against the competition of your company?
A. Several of them have been in business several years.
Q. Sir?
A. Several of them have been in business five or six years; the Oriental Oil Company, I think, has been in business five years.
Q. The Oriental lasted longer than any of them; the Southwestern has fallen before the competition?
A. It closed up, yes, sir.
Q. Did the Waters Pierce Oil Company buy it?
A. No, sir.
Q. Get any of its property?
A. No, sir, not that I know of; they possibly may have got some of the tank cars, something at the plant.
Q. Did you correspond with the St. Louis office with reference to the acquisition of that property?
A. Yes, sir, I have; I don't know that I did in regard to the Dallas property; I did in regard to the storage tanks at one or two other points.
Q. Now, I will ask you if it isn't a fact that you are advised by the St. Louis office that the negotiations had not been by which they would get charge of the Southern Oil Company's properties?

A. I was advised by the St. Louis office that they were negotiating with them, or had done so, in regard to some tank cars——

Q. Well, that——

Judge PENN: We insist on the counsel allowing the witness to answer.

1382 The WITNESS: In reference to tank cars, but they have sold their plant at Dallas to another concern, as I understand it, and so far as I know the Waters Pierce Oil Company has not purchased the equipment, except a few tank cars, at any point.

Q. The truth is, it was running in opposition up there and it has gotten out of the way, and the negotiations with reference to it were had between Mr. Tilley and the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. I don't know who the negotiations were with.

Q. They wrote you to that effect, didn't they?

A. I don't remember, possibly so; I took the matter up in my letters to the St. Louis office.

Q. There is one of them that has fallen. The Eagle Refining Company, the Waters Pierce Oil Company got hold of that concern, didn't it; got it out of business?

A. I understand so, yes sir.

Q. Now what has happened to the Wyse Oil Company's competition in your territory?

A. They are doing practically nothing.

Q. You don't know of your company having any interest in that?

A. No, sir, not to my knowledge.

Q. How long have they been in business?

A. Why, I should say ten years or more.

Q. They have practically been put out of business?

A. The originator of the business is dead; that probably explains their having dropped out.

Q. Well, now, what other concerns have come up during that time and been snowed under?

Judge PENN: We object to that character of examination; this witness was put on the stand by the State and these matters, according to my recollection, were gone over by Mr. Brady, he 1383 is going over the same matters. The questions are put in an offensive manner and involve conclusions that the testimony of this witness doesn't bear out, and we object to this character of examination and ask the Court to require counsel for the State to put his questions in a proper form.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Judge PENN: Defendant excepts to the ruling of the Court.

Q. Will you answer the question, Mr. Cahoon?

A. Will you state it again?

(Question read by Stenographer.)

A. Well, I declare I don't remember; there was a concern doing business under the name of Texas Oil Company, I think, at Waco some years ago, and has discontinued business.

Q. Climax Ink & Oil Company, they are still doing business?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Has the Standard Oil Company undertaken to do business in your territory?
A. In my territory?
Q. Yes.
A. Not to my knowledge.
Q. Not to your knowledge?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know anything about its business in any other part of the United States?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know whether or not in certain other parts of the United States it has the same character of business and the same character of equipment and doing business in the same sort of way that you are doing in this territory?
A. I have seen plants, riding along on the train, in different parts of the country that were intended for doing a business very similar to ours.
1384 Q. But they have not undertaken to get into this territory at all?
A. Not in my territory.
Q. And you don't know anything about them doing business anywhere in Texas?
A. Not as the Standard Oil Company, no, sir.
Q. Your understanding is they are able to do it, got the money to do it?

A. Mr. ODELL: We object to whether they are able to do it; they are not here doing business.
Mr. BATTS: We withdraw the question.

Q. You don't know of the Corsicana refinery selling any oil to the retail trade, do you?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do they ever sell any to jobbers, at all?
A. Not to my knowledge.
Q. Have you known of the Security Oil Company selling to jobbers?
A. No, sir.

Recross-examination.

(By Mr. ODELL:)

Q. Mr. Cahoon, those letters that you were interrogated about this afternoon; where did they come from, the copies that were exhibited to you this afternoon?
A. They were made in my office.
Q. Who made them?
A. My stenographer.
Q. At whose request?
A. Mr. Brady's request.
Q. Did you give him access to all the letters that you had there?

A. Yes, sir; those he asked for, I had copies of all of those he selected.

1385 Q. Free of cost?

A. He kindly gave the young lady a box of candy.

Redirect examination.

(By Mr. BATTS:)

Q. Mr. Brady took there the written authority under the law did he not, to make this examination?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did he stay there?

A. Saturday and Sunday morning.

Q. How many hours in all?

A. In the office?

Q. Yes.

A. I declare I don't know; I should say ten or twelve hours.

Q. You couldn't have gone through more than one-tenth of what you had, in that time, could he?

A. No, sir.

Q. You had counsel there at the time representing you, did you not?

A. On Saturday only; no one on Sunday.

Q. Well, that was after you had taken advice of counsel, after having counsel there?

A. Saturday, yes, sir.

Q. You got instructions from St. Louis to get a lawyer, and then Mr. Brady selected the letters?

A. Yes, sir.

1386 Testimony of E. S. Horn.

The following testimony of E. S. HORN, taken at St. Louis, was offered by plaintiff,—Mr. Lightfoot reading the questions and Mr. Allen the answers, from the stenographic record:

Q. Upon what basis did you fix the prices, Mr. Horn?

A. Well, the only way I would fix them would be in the case of an advance or a decline. Then I would adjust the selling price accordingly.

Q. Well, did the fact of competition existing have anything to do with the price adopted?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What?

A. If a competitor of ours, in the same line of business, was offering a similar class of goods at less than our selling price, we reduced our selling price to meet the conditions.

Q. Wherever there was competition you did that, when it was necessary?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLEN: Then on the next page, 311, the last question at the bottom of the page:

Q. Can you recall what action, if any, you took—do you recall any action that you took because of the receipt of that letter?

A. If there was a change in the price, it is advanced or declined, it would naturally change our selling prices accordingly.

Q. That is, if there was a change in the selling price of the refineries of the Company?

A. Yes.

Q. You would change your selling price accordingly?

A. Yes, sir.

(Omit next question and answer.)

1387 Q. Do you know anything about the delivery of lubricating oils to a mill or plant of the Central Coal & Coke Company located at Kennard, Texas?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom were those oils delivered, at Kennard, Texas?

A. They were delivered to the Central Coal & Coke Company.

Q. That is the plant of that company, at Kennard, Texas?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make deliveries of lubricating oil to any other plant of that company in Texas?

A. No, sir.

Q. How did you come to make deliveries of those oils?

A. It seems that the Standard Oil Company of Kansas City were negotiating with the purchasing agent of the Central Coal & Coke Company, and he asked his representative, whom he was working under, to obtain prices for delivery at Kennard, Texas. The manager of the lubricating department of the Standard Oil Company asked us to quote them prices for delivery to the Central Coal & Coke Company at Kennard, Texas.

Q. Enumerating the grades of oil they wanted?

A. Yes, sir, and they wanted quotations.

Q. What did you do?

A. We quoted them prices, delivered there.

Q. Was there any understanding reached?

A. They accepted the proposition and asked us to honor the requisitions from the Central Coal & Coke Company and render invoices to them.

Q. That is, you rendered invoices of the oils you delivered at Kennard, Texas, to the Standard Oil Company of Indiana?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And who paid you for the oils delivered in that way?

1388 A. The Standard Oil Company.

Q. They paid you the prices agreed upon as between the Waters Pierce Oil Company and the Standard Oil Company of Indiana?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you recall any other transaction of that kind with the Standard Oil Company and the Central Coal and Coke Company in Texas?

A. No, sir.

Q. The transaction in effect was the sale to the Standard Oil Company the same as you would sell to anybody or any other concern?
A. Yes, sir.

Cross-examination:

Q. Mr. Horn, you say that you don't positively identify that letter a copy of which was shown you by Mr. Johnson, but you assume that it was received in the regular course of business?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Wasn't it a frequent occurrence to receive letters of a similar import?
A. No, sir.
Q. From Mr. McNall?
A. We received quotations almost daily or weekly.
Q. I mean letters of that kind and character from Mr. McNall, when he was commercial agent of the company at New York?
A. That is the first letter that I recall seeing of that nature.
Q. You frequently received from him quotations on different kinds of oil, lubricating oils and wax products and things of that sort?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Those prices would be quoted on board the cars at the refinery?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What kinds and character of commodity did the lubricating department handle? That is, the sales department of the lubricating branch?
1389 A. We handled everything outside of the refined oils and naphtha and gasoline, which is manufactured from petroleum.
Q. You handle all sorts of greases and lubricating oils and wax, and everything of that character?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Does the Waters Pierce Oil Company manufacture any lubricating oils?
A. We compound oils.
Q. You have a manufacturing establishment here in St. Louis, have you not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And compound cylinder oils of various kinds?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And grease?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What percentage of your lubricating oils did you purchase from the Standard, in the compounded state? Approximately, of course; I don't expect you to give an accurate statement.
A. I should say fifty per cent.

* * * * * * * *

Q. Now, Mr. Horn, isn't it a fact that on certain brands of lubricating oils that you purchased from the Standard Oil Companies, that is, from the different refineries and agencies, that they fixed the selling price, the minimum selling price, for you, at which you should sell those brands?

A. Not in this market.

Q. You say that is not a fact?

A. Not in this market.

Q. Well, in any market, with the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. I mean not in the Waters Pierce Oil Company market.

1390 Q. They did not have anything to do with and did not prescribe or did not suggest any selling prices of any brands that you handled of theirs?

A. No, sir.

Q. Of any kind or character?

A. No, sir; if they did they were not carried out.

Q. Well, why do you put that modification in?

A. Because we have a selling price. I know they sell less than we do on some brands of oil.

Q. Where? At what point?

A. Well, through the South.

Q. Not in Texas?

A. Well, they can ship it from New Orleans to some points in Texas at less than we are selling.

Q. Of course, they can; I understand that. And they are selling it all over the country at prices less than you sell at in Texas, are they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You never heard of their selling any in Texas did you, in the last six or eight years?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have contracts with practically all of the railroads of Texas to furnish them lubricating oil, have you not?

A. I don't believe we have with all of them.

Q. I said practically all?

A. Practically. The large roads, yes, sir.

Q. But you furnish all of the roads don't you with lubricating oil, practically all the roads in Texas?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you the original contracts in your department, in your custody?

A. They are in my department, yes, sir.

1391 Q. Well, those contracts are made directly with your office, with your department here, the home office?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With the railro[illegible]ompanies?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those contracts are kept on file here?

A. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

Q. It is a fact, isn't it, Mr. Horn, that where your department fixes the prices or promulgates the prices that the two prime factors in determining or fixing those prices are the cost, including the freight and marketing, and competition? That those are the two prime factors that govern you in fixing the prices to the trade?

A. Well, we add some profit.

Q. Well, of course, your profit, that would be in addition to that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You first take the cost price—I mean the two original prime factors upon which you base the price—you get as much as the trade will stand, of course, in the territory, or that you think it will stand, where you have no competition?

A. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

Q. A very large percentage was purchased by the Waters Pierce Oil Company from the Standard Oil Company, or Standard Oil Company interests?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you mean to say in cross examination that the Standard Oil Company sells lubricating oil cheaper in other localities than the Waters Pierce Oil Company sells within the territory in which 1392 it does business?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do you know?

A. We encounter their quotations.

Q. That is, it sells oil cheaper in Illinois than the Waters Pierce Company sells oil in Missouri?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the difference in price?

A. Sometimes from a cent to two cents a gallon. Sometimes three cents. That is, when I say that, I refer to cylinder oil and high class oil. I mean oils which can stand a variation like that.

Judge PENN: We desire to offer the testimony of the witness he has just read, in connection with their introduction of these parts, so the Jury will understand it better.

The COURT: Hasn't part of that deposition been heretofore offered?

Judge PENN: Very small part, but if the State only wants to put in a half a page or so, we have no objection to letting them put that in now and let us put in the parts of this and Mr. Adams' testimony, but we wish to request that the Court allow us to do so in the morning.

The COURT: I will pass on that in the morning; I know now of no reason why it should not be permitted.

Testimony of C. M. Adams.

The following testimony of C. M. Adams, taken at St. Louis, is offered by the plaintiff.

Q. Now, isn't it a fact that ever since your connection with the Waters Pierce Oil Company, both the old company and the 1393 new, with the exception of a short time when Mr. J. D. Johnson was on the Board of Directors, there have been three members of the Board who have been dictated by the Standard Oil people? Don't you know that to be a fact? Supposedly representing them, I am not asking if they did represent them. Don't you know it to be a fact that during your entire connection with the old Company as a director, and with the new company, except for this interval, in which Mr. J. D. Johnson was on the Board, that three members of the Board were dictated by the Standard Oil people or the Standard Oil interests?

A. I can't say that I know that—that they were dictated by them.

Q. What is your information about it?

A. Well, I can't say that I have any positive information.

Q. Well, information that is not positive? What have you information in regard to that? Why do you hesitate about it? You were one of the men that were supposed to represent the Standard Oil on the Board, were you not?

A. I am a director of the company.

Q. Aren't you one of the men who were supposed to represent the Standard Oil interests on the Board and always have been, and so considered by yourself and by every one connected by the Company? Now, why do you hesitate about that? Don't you know that to be a fact?

A. I cannot exactly say that my election as a director was dictated by them, or that any other one or two people were. The election was held by the stockholders and the Board of Directors are elected.

Q. Oh, that is a mere formality; don't you know that, Mr. Adams?

A. I can't say that I do, no.

Q. No? Why, don't they prepare in advance what you are going to do at the meeting? As to who shall be elected Directors or officers?

A. No, sir, I don't think that that is the case.

Q. It is not done?

1394 A. That is, unless it is done with some one before the meeting is held that I know nothing about.

Q. Where did you get your information as to who would be selected on the Board of Directors?

A. Well, I will tell you. At the last election, I received a proxy from——

Q. From M. M. Van Buren?

A. From M. M. Van Buren who owns a very large amount of stock.

Q. Ostensibly?

A. And he said that he would be pleased to see the old Board re-elected.

Q. Who was the old Board?

A. The old Board was Mr. Pierce—Mr. H. Clay Pierce—Mr. C. A. Pierce, Mr. Van Buren, Mr. Taylor, and myself.

Q. Who is Mr. Taylor?

A. Mr. Taylor's name is Walter F. Taylor. He is an attorney belonging to the firm of——

Q. Carter, Ledyard Taylor & Co.?

845

A. Something of that kind. I forget the style of it exactly.
Q. Of New York?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know what interest he has in the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. He owns one share of stock.
Q. He owns one share of stock?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Transferred to him by whom?
A. I don't know.
Q. From whom?
A. I don't know.
Q. Isn't it a share of stock—you are custodian of the stock
1395 books, are you not?
A. Well, they are in my office.
Q. Oh, why do you quibble? I don't want to——
A. Well, you use the word "custodian".
Q. Aren't you the custodian of that book?
A. I don't know that that term would apply to this matter. The book is in the safe in my office.
Q. I don't want to mislead you, or get you tangled up, or anything like that, but all I want is just the facts. Of course, if you know them, you can say so, Mr. Adams?
A. Well, I can't remember where this share of stock—who it was transferred from, without referring to the books.
Q. You have no recollection at all about that?
A. No, sir; I have not, without referring to the books.
Q. Will you refer to the books and say?
A. If it is necessary I can do so.
Q. Now, getting back to the question I propounded to you a while ago,—don't you know in your own mind, and isn't that the impression that was made upon your mind that you and Mr. Gruet and Mr. H. M. Tilford, of the old company, were supposed to represent the Standard Oil interests, as members of the Board of Directors? Isn't that true?
A. Well, I——
Q. I am not asking you a positive fact, but what is your impression? You know the impression that was made on your mind about it?
A. Well, that is the impression that I had at that time.
Q. Now, isn't it a fact also that after the reorganization that the impression was made upon your mind that Mr. Gruet and you and Mr. Walter F. Taylor, who succeeded Mr. John D. Johnson as a member of the Board, was supposed to represent the Standard Oil interest?
A. I can't recollect now when Mr. Taylor came into the Board.
1396 Q. I don't care when he came in. He did come into the Board, didn't he?
A. Well, he was elected.

Q. He succeeded Mr. Johnson as a member of the Board, didn't he?

A. Well, I don't remember about that now.

Q. Mr. Tinsley was a member of the Board, wasn't he? At one time?

A. Yes, he was at one time.

Q. Wasn't Mr. Tinsley when he was on the Board—wasn't the impression made upon your mind that Mr. Tinsley was supposed to represent the Standard Oil interests, and didn't he represent the Standard Oil interests, and raise a row here, because he undertook to run it absolutely independent of Mr. Pierce, and his interests? Isn't that a fact? Don't you know that to be a fact?

A. Well, I don't know how much of a row he raised. I am not sure.

Q. Well, are not those the facts? That you knew that he was supposed to represent the Standard Oil interests, and was sent here for the express purpose of representing their interests. Don't you know that? Why do you hesitate about that, Mr. Adams?

A. Well, I——

Q. Have you absolutely no information or impression about that fact? Now why do you hesitate about that?

A. Why the impression was of course at that time that he was representing the Standard Oil Company, yes, sir.

Q. You say that you know—that it is your understanding that Mr. Tinsley was sent here to represent the Standard Oil Company's interest?

A. That is my supposition of the matter.

Q. Well, that is based upon what occurred here, in the management of the company, isn't it?

A. After he came, yes.

Q. After he came. That is what I say. Now, getting 1397 back to the question I propounded a while ago, don't you know it to be a fact that since the organization of the new company up to along in June of 1905, with the exception of a period during which Mr. J. D. Johnson was on the Board, there has always been three members of the Board of Directors that were supposed to represent the Standard Oil interests?

A. Yes, I think that is true.

(Thereupon Court adjourned until Wednesday morning at 9.30.)

WEDNESDAY, May 29.

Court opens at 9.30 a. m.

Mr. ALLEN: We offer in evidence the depositions of Charles S. Keith, taken in Kansas City, on interrogatories propounded to him by the plaintiff.

Interrogatory 1. What is your name, age and place of residence?

Answer. Charles S. Keith, Kansas City, Missouri, age thirty-four.

Interrogatory 2. What is your business? If you say you are in the lumber business, state how long you have been in said business; and state with what company or companies you are connected or employed.

Answer. Vice president and general manager of the Central Coal & Coke Company and general manager of the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company. I have been in the lumber business for ten years, employed by the Central Coal & Coke Company and the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company.

Interrogatory 3. If you have stated, or if it be a fact, that you are connected with the Central Coal & Coke Company, then 1398 state in what capacity you are connected with said company, and during what years you have been so connected.

Answer. As vice president and general manager. I have covered a period since 1891.

Interrogatory 4. If you have stated, or if it be a fact, that you are the General Manager of the Central Coal & Coke Company, then state whether or not it has an office in Kansas City?

Answer. It has.

Interrogatory 5. Please state whether or not the Central Coal & Coke Company, owns or operates a sawmill within the State of Texas; if so, at what place or places?

Answer. It does not, but the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company does at Ratcliffe, Texas, Houston County.

Interrogatory 6. If you have said that the Central Coal & Coke Company owns or operates a sawmill at Kennard, Texas, then state how long said company has owned or operated said mill, and under what name is said mill operated?

Answer. The Central Coal & Coke Company does not own a mill, but the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company does, at Kennard, or Ratcliff, Texas, and it has been in operation since about 1901 or 1902,—I don't remember just exactly the year. The mill is operated in the name of the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company. The Central Coal & Coke Company has no proprietary ownership in it at all.

Interrogatory 7. Please state whether or not the Central Coal & Coke Company is interested in any manner, directly or indirectly, in any sawmill plant located at Kennard, Texas; if so, state the name of the plant, and state whether or not the Central Coal & Coke Company furnishes it with any supplies?

Answer. No. Central Coal & Coke Company does not furnish the mill at Kennard, Texas, with any supplies, but the sup-1399 plies are purchased from my office as general manager for the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company.

Interrogatory 8. State whether or not the Central Coal & Coke Company owns or operates any sawmills at Neame and Carson, Louisiana. If so, state the name of the plants.

Answer. The Central Coal & Coke Company owns a mill each at Neame and Carson, and they carry the names of Neame and Carson.

Interrogatory 9. Please state whether or not the Central Coal & Coke Company owns or operates, either directly or indirectly, any sawmill plant at any other point in Texas outside of Kennard. If so, state the points at which such plants are located, and how long the Central Coal & Coke Company has been interested in same.

Answer. No.

Interrogatory 10. Please state whether or not the Central Coal & Coke Company, during the years of 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906, or 1907, entered into any contract with any oil company to furnish the Central Coal & Coke Company with lubricating, cylinder, engine or any other kind of oils or greases for either one or more of the years mentioned. If so, state the name of the oil company with whom such contracts were made.

Answer. In the years 1903 and 1904, Central Coal & Coke Company had a contract with the Waters Pierce Oil Company. In 1905 with the Bonner Oil Company. In 1906 with the Standard Oil Company. For 1907 its contract is divided between the Standard and the Bonner Company, the Standard supplying the oil to the Texas plant and the Bonner Company to the Louisiana plants.

Interrogatory 11. Please state whether or not the Central Coal & Coke Company made any contract with any Standard Oil Company for its supplies of oils and greases during either of the following years: 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906 or 1907?

Answer. The answer to the last Interrogatory answers that.

1400 In 1903 and 1904 the Waters Pierce Oil Company, in 1905 the Bonner Oil Company, in 1906 the Standard Oil Company, 1907 the Bonner Oil Company and Standard Oil Company. I only know this company as the Standard Oil Company and the Waters Pierce Oil Company as the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Interrogatory 12. If you have stated, or if it be a fact, that the Central Coal & Coke Company, or any officer thereof, made or entered into any contract with any Standard Oil Company for any oil or greases for either or all of the years mentioned in the last preceding interrogatory, you will attach all such contracts, or a true copy thereof, to your answer and make it a part of your answer, and mark same for identification.

Answer. I will. Exhibits A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, J, K, L, M.

Interrogatory 13. Please state whether or not your company had such a contract for the year 1906 or any portion thereof. If so, attach a copy of said contract to your answer, and state whether or not it is a true copy, and mark same for identification.

Answer. We had such a contract and I will attach it. Exhibits F, G, K, J.

Interrogatory 14. If you have stated, or if it be a fact, that the Central Coal & Coke Company had a contract with any Standard Oil Company for its supplies of oils and greases for any year from 1903 to 1907, inclusive, state whether or not it had a contract during the same years with the Waters Pierce Oil Company for any of its supplies furnished to any mill or plants owned or operated by the Central Coal & Coke Company in the State of Texas or the State of Louisiana.

Answer. During the years before mentioned we had contracts with the Waters Pierce Oil Company and subsequently with the Standard Oil Company, but during any one year our contract was with only one company, with the exception of 1907, when it is divided between the Standard and the Bonner Oil Company.

1401 Interrogatory 15. State whether or not the Standard Oil Company furnish the Central Coal & Coke Company, or any other Company owned or operated by or connected with such company, any supplies of oils or greases in the State of Texas. If so, state through what company such supplies were furnished.

Answer. The Standard Oil Company furnished the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company oil during the years above mentioned, as per contract attached hereto as exhibit, for its plant at Kennard, Texas. However, there is no connection between the Central Coal & Coke Company and the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company, only that the Central Coal & Coke Company disposes of the product of the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company on a commission basis.

Interrogatory 16. Please state whether or not it be a fact that all of the supplies of oils and greases furnished to the Central Coal & Coke Company or to any other company connected with the Central Coal & Coke Company under any contract made with any Standard Oil Company, were furnished to your company or companies by or through the Waters Pierce Oil Company in the State of Texas.

Answer. During the years we had contracts with the Waters Pierce Oil Company they furnished the oil, and it may be that the Waters Pierce Oil Company is furnishing the oil to us under our contract with the Standard Oil Company, but all remittances are being made direct to the Standard Oil Company, but I am not clear in my own mind whether this is being done, as I do not see the bills of lading covering the oil from the points or origin from which it is shipped. That information will have to be gotten at the mill.

Interrogatory 17. To what company did you pay your bills for supplies of oils and greases furnished any of your plants by the Waters Pierce Oil Company in Texas during the life of any contract which you had with the Standard Oil Company for such supplies.

1402 Answer. All bills were remitted direct to the Company in whose name the contract was made. In case where the Waters Pierce Oil Company were contracted with, the remittances were made to them; when the Bonner Company furnished the oil, to the Bonner Company; and when the Standard furnished the oil, to the Standard.

Interrogatory 18. If you have not already done so, please state whether or not the Central Coal & Coke Company had any contract with any Standard Oil Company for oils and greases for any portion of the year 1905. If so, please attach said contract to your answer, or a true copy of same, make it a part of your answer, and mark it for identification and state how you have marked it.

Answer. No. In the year 1905 our contract was with the Bonner Oil Company.

Interrogatory 19. Please state whether any supplies were furnished under that contract to any of your plants in Texas or Louisiana. If so, by and through what company were the supplies delivered, and what company you paid for such supplies?

Answer. All oils and greases purchased by the Central Coal & Coke Company and the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company on account of the year 1905 were purchased from the Bonner Oil Company, and none from the Standard or the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Interrogatory 20. If you have stated, or if it be a fact, that the Waters Pierce Oil Company delivered to any of the plants of the Central Coal & Coke Company, in the State of Texas, oil for and on behalf of any Standard Oil Company, please state from what station of the Waters Pierce Oil Company said deliveries were made.

Answer. I cannot answer that question, except in this way: that during 1904, 1905 and 1906 all the oils used by the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company at its plant at Kennard, Texas, were shipped from the station of Lufton, Texas, by the three companies with whom we had contracts.

1403 Interrogatory 21. If you have stated, or if it be a fact, that the Waters Pierce Oil Company delivered to the Central Coal & Coke Company, or any sawmill owned or operated by the Central Coal & Coke Company, or any other company controlled by said company, any oil or greases for and on behalf of any Standard Oil Company, please state whether or the same charges were made by the Waters Pierce Oil Company for such supplies as your company had contracted for with the Standard Oil Company.

Answer. The Waters Pierce Oil Company never rendered any bills to the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company or the Central Coal & Coke Company for any oil furnished under contract between the Central Coal & Coke Company or the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company and the Standard Oil Company, but all oils were invoiced by the Standard Oil Company, and we remitted direct to the Standard Oil Company. Prices were according to the contracts with the company, as shown by the exhibits hereto attached.

Interrogatory 22. If you have stated, or if it be a fact, that the Waters Pierce Oil Company delivered any oils in Texas to any interest which you represent under any contract had by your company with any Standard Oil Company, then state whether or not there was any difference in prices charged by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and those contracted for with the Standard Oil Company for any such supplies.

Answer. Our contracts were always let in competition and let to the lowest bidder, and necessarily there must be discrepancy in the prices furnished one year as against another on account of this competition. We never purchased any oil from the Waters Pierce Oil Company during the life of our contract with the Standard Oil Company, nor did we purchase oil from any other company during the time of the contract of any of the three oil companies whom we have named as having our contracts during the period named.

1404 Mr. ALLEN: We offer all these exhibits, Gentlemen.

Judge STEDMAN: May it please Your Honor, we object to the introduction in evidence of these exhibits, which are, copies of contracts for the purchase of oil by the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company and the Central Coal & Coke Company. Some of the contracts are for the purchase of oil from the Standard Oil Company, others are for the purchase of oil from the Bonner Oil Company, and others are for the purchase of oil from the Waters Pierce Oil Company. We object to each and all of these contracts, because immaterial and irrelevant. So far as the contracts with the Waters Pierce Oil Company are concerned, they are shown merely to be consumers' contracts, such as were presented to Your Honor yesterday in another connection, and they are not shown to be in violation of law, and they do not tend to establish any issue in this case. So far as the contract with the other companies is concerned, they appear to have been made with persons not parties to this suit; and we think it does not appear that the defendant had any connection, and it does not appear that if the defendant has connection with either of these companies, that these contracts related in any wise to any connection between the defendant and either of these companies. These contracts, too, we say, are merely consumers' contracts, and they are immaterial and irrelevant upon that ground, as well as the others.

Mr. ALLEN: We don't offer them to show a violation of the law, if the Court please. They are offered for two purposes: In the first place, to show, in connection with the testimony of this witness, what we have endeavored to show by other witnesses, that the agreement that the Standard Oil Company should stay out of the Waters Pierce Oil Company's territory was carried out, and that when the Standard Oil Company made any contract with anybody in the Waters Pierce Oil Company's territory the contract was turned over 1405 to the Waters Pierce Oil Company, and therefore there was no competition, and to show that there was no real competition so far as the Standard and the Waters Pierce Oil Company were concerned. The statement of the witness is that he let these contracts to the lowest bidder. Now, whenever two people bid on a contract and it don't make any difference which one gets it, the other one fills it, it shows those facts.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Judge STEDMAN: We except.

(Thereupon the exhibits attached to the deposition were introduced in evidence as follows):

Made by and between Central Coal & Coke Company of Kansas City, Missouri, party of the first, and Standard Oil Company, a corporation organized under the Laws of the State of Indiana (Lubricating department), party of the second part, whereby the party of the first part agrees to buy from party of the second part, all the Petroleum Oils and Greases, and also, such other products as are named in the list below, which the party of the first part may use in its plants, but not for sale, for One (1) year from January 1st, 1903, at the following prices for the goods named; the maximum quantity of each grade not to exceed the number of barrels mentioned as Estimated Yearly Consumption, without the consent of the party of the second part.

It is understood that this Agreement does not include any oils to be used for fuel or Illuminating purposes, except where such Oils are burned in Torches and Miners' Lamps.

Q. Changes, however, were made in the——
A. Some changes in the restaurant, I believe.
Q. The restaurant was abolished?
A. Yes, sir, and rooms were rented that we had on the eighth floor.
Q. They were sub-let?
A. Yes, sir, and things of that kind.
Q. The size of the office was reduced—that is, the rooms were reduced?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. There were some changes in the heads of departments, were there not?
A. I was trying to think about that. I don't recollect now just what they could be. I think there was a change in the accounting department. Mr. Gruet resigned during that time—he left 1450 the company.
Q. And Mr. Backus was appointed controller?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Some transfers were made of employees from one department to another, were there not?
A. Yes, I think there was.
Q. And some employees were let out?
A. Yes, I think there were.
Q. Now, were there any other changes in the policy of the company, so far as the conduct of the business was concerned, made by Mr. Tinsley while he was here?
A. I don't know of any.
Q. Do you remember of his making a change in the manager of the Oklahoma division?
A. That change was made, yes, sir, during the time he was here. I think it had been talked about, though, for a good while before; it was consummated during his time here as vice president.
Q. Mr. Hathaway, the old manager, was let out, and Mr. Ebie was appointed in his place?
A. Yes. Mr. Hathaway was retired with a regular monthly compensation.
Q. There was a change made?
A. He was not discharged from the company—not let out entirely, you understand. He was retired on pay.
Q. On reduced pay?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. There was a change in the manner of keeping the books and accounts?
A. Well, I suppose there was. I have heard in a general way about that, changes in the reports and the manner of keeping the books, but that was not my department and I never bothered myself with it.
1451 Q. There was a change also in the Mexico Division, wasn't there, in the management of that Division?
A. Yes, I think there was. I think that occurred while he was here.

Q. Now, do you recollect any other?

A. There have been so many changes there that it was difficult to tell under whose direction they were made.

Q. Mr. Ryder, the manager in Mexico, resigned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Cole was appointed?

A. Yes, sir, and there have been one or two changes since then.

Q. Do you know of any other changes made in Mexico in the personnel of the employees?

A. At that time, while Mr. Tinsley was here?

Q. At that time?

A. Several people left and went with Mr. Ryder, that were——

Q. When he quit?

A. When he quit. I don't recall now the names, just who they were.

Q. Do you recall any other changes that were made while Mr. Tinsley was here?

A. Among the employees?

Q. In any way, in the management of the company's business?

A. Why, no, I do not now—I don't recollect any.

Q. While Mr. Finlay was absent on sick leave, Mr. Tinsley acted as president of the company?

A. Yes, he was ranking officer at that time.

Q. Isn't it a fact that all that time Mr. Gruet was a member of the board of directors—during the time that he was a member of the board of directors he co-operated with Mr. H. C. Pierce in the management of the company's business?—the present company, I mean—with you and the other officers and directors here?

1452 A. Yes, sir, just the same as we did.

Q. Isn't it a fact that the present company has always been run as an independent company by its officers and directors?

Mr. ALLEN: We object to that as a conclusion, and not the statement of facts.

The COURT: The objection is sustained.

Judge PENN: Defendant excepts.

Q. So far as you know, the company has always confined its operations within the territorial limits that the old company was doing business in at the time of its dissolution?

A. I know of no change in that respect.

Judge STEDMAN: I don't see anything else we want.

Mr. ALLEN: Well, we offer some of the crosses in connection with what they offer. It's on page 297.

Q. Isn't it a fact that after Mr. Tinsley came out here and was elected as vice president of the Waters Pierce Oil Company and put upon the board of directors, and after he had assumed the active management or, as Mr. Pierce puts it, usurped the management of the Waters Pierce Company—isn't it a fact that he had rescinded a lot of things that had been done by the former board of directors? Did you not have meetings at which he dictated the rescinding of numerous actions that had been theretofore taken by the board of directors? Isn't that a fact?

A. There was something of that kind done in connection with some committees, yes.

Q. He abolished the executive committee that you people had originally inaugurated, didn't he?

A. Well, I can't say that he did.

Q. Well, he had it done?

A. It was done by—— 1453 Q. Done at his instance?

A. Done by the board of directors.

Q. Who composed that board that did that?

A. He was here; he was president.

Q. Who was present at the time it was abolished?

A. Mr. Tinsley, Mr. Finlay and myself.

Q. Didn't Mr. Tinsley dictate that that should be done, and you and Mr. Finlay acquiesced in it?

A. Well——

Q. Those are the facts, aren't they? Didn't he keep nagging and nagging at Mr. Finlay about things of that sort until he actually drove him away, physically?

A. I wouldn't swear to that. That statement has been made, but I wouldn't swear to it.

Q. You don't want to make that statement as a representative of the Standard Oil Company?

A. I don't want to make that statement personally.

Mr. ALLEN: Now, then, next is re-cross examination on page 302.

Q. Mr. Adams, it is a fact, is it not, that before Mr. Tinsley came here there was an executive committee that had general control of the business of the company, and that they fixed the prices at which the oil should be sold? That is a fact, isn't it? They passed finally upon it?

A. Yes, I think so.

Q. And after he came here he had that committee abolished?

A. It was abolished, yes.

Q. And then, during the time that he was here, the prices were fixed by the executive officers of the company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, this man Backus that you speak of who had been 1454 put in as controller—he came direct from the Standard Oil Company?

A. I think he had been in their employ previous to coming here.

Q. And Mr. Ebie, also, who went as manager of the Oklahoma Division?

A. It is my recollection that he did, yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Coale,—where did he come from?

A. He came from Cleveland.

Q. He was in the employ of the Standard Oil Company of Ohio at Cleveland?

A. I don't know.

Q. That is your information, isn't it?

A. I don't know whether he was with them then or not.
Q. He had been with them? You know he had been with them?
A. I know that the Coale family in Cleveland were with them. Whether he had worked for them or not, I don't know.

Judge STEDMAN: Now, we will read another portion of it.

Q. Mr. Backus has been discharged from the company's employ, hasn't he?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And Mr. Coale has been discharged from the company's employ?
Q. The persons selected by the present management to succeed them are in charge of those offices, are they not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And those departments of the company's business?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What are the functions of the executive committee? What duties do they perform?
A. Well, they pass on the appropriations for expenditures, for additional plants, and equipments and things of that kind.
1455 Q. I don't care about the details.
A. On the prices.
Q. Isn't it a fact that the different heads of departments, who themselves were members of that committee, refer to the committee questions arising in their different departments for the advice of all the committee?
A. Yes, sir, most all important matters, aside from the routine matters, which they attend to currently as they come up.
Q. The committee considered them and passed upon them and left them for the president, who finally determined on what action should be taken?
A. Yes, sir.

Judge PENN: If the Court please, we will ask at this time to be permitted to read the balance of the depositions of Clay Arthur Pierce and A. M. Finlay which the plaintiff read from a few days ago.
The COURT: I know of no reason why you should not read it when your time comes.
Judge STEDMAN: May it please Your Honor, I don't wish to be in the attitude of being unduly persistent, but I would like to make a statement to the Court in reference to our offer to read the omitted portions of the depositions of the witnesses A. M. Finlay and Clay Arthur Pierce. A few days ago—I don't remember exactly—when the State read portions of the depositions of those witnesses it was our intention immediately upon the State's concluding the reading of those depositions, to read parts that had been omitted, but it happened that the State closed, if I remember correctly, at the adjourning time on a certain afternoon. Our time for offering the 1456 remaining portions was next morning. When I came in the court-room I discovered that Judge Penn, who had these depositions with the portions marked that had been omitted, in his grip—had not arrived. I then received a telephone message from

Judge Penn that his watch had stopped and that he would be here as soon as he could, and asked if the Court and counsel and jury were all here. Without inviting attention to that matter, I made no suggestion and just let the Court proceed with the regular order without reference to these portions of the depositions. Now, we think, may it please Your Honor, that we should have then been entitled to read the omitted parts, and we should have done so but for the facts that I have stated. We think that we ought to have a right to read them now, for the reason that those parts that were not read by the State are portions of the depositions of the witnesses as well as parts that were read, and that it is proper now that the entire depositions should go before the jury before the State concludes the introduction of its testimony, and we request the Court to now permit us to read the portions of the testimony of these witnesses which were not read by the State.

Mr. ALLEN: Those were the depositions they took themselves, and we read the cross examination where we drew out certain facts.

Mr. BATTS: We don't understand really that they have got any right to make out their case as we go along, anyhow.

The COURT: The reason the Court has permitted counsel for defendant to offer the remaining portions of depositions that the State has offered other portions from, was that the jury might get it connected at one time—have the whole deposition before them. These two depositions mentioned were read by the State—that is, the portions the State desired to read—and, without reference to whether it was any fault on the part of counsel for defendant or not, the fact remains that the other part was not read then. The introduction of other evidence has intervened, the reading of other 1457 depositions has intervened, and no good purpose would be subserved now in reading these portions of the depositions. The jury will not get the entire depositions because of the lapse of time. I understand that the State is about to close its case, and I will permit it to do so without going back and reading parts of depositions the other parts of which were read several days ago.

Judge STEDMAN: We except, Your Honor.

C. P. ACKERT, a witness for the plaintiff, testified as follows:

(Examination by Mr. BATTS:)

Q. Mr. Ackert, you are general manager of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. I am.

Q. How long have you occupied that position?

A. Since July 1, 1903, I think.

Q. What were your duties prior to that time?

A. I was assistant general manager.

Q. Performing the same duties that you now perform as general manager?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, prior to the time that you were assistant general manager, were you in fact at any time manager of the company?

A. Yes, sir—of the whole company?

Q. Yes, sir, of the whole company?
A. No, sir.
Q. Isn't it a fact that you performed the duties of general manager for a while prior to the time you were designated as assistant manager?
A. Not the duties, no, sir, altogether.
1458 Q. When did you first become connected with the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. In March, twenty-three years ago; in March, 1884, I believe.
Q. How long have you been with the company at St. Louis?
A. Almost thirteen years.
Q. Beginning there, then, about 1893?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What were your first duties there?
A. I was assistant manager in the lubricating department.
Q. And that employment continued up to what time?
A. About five years.
Q. Then what was your position?
A. I was practically up to that time—up to the time that I was appointed general manager.
Q. Practically assistant in the lubricating department?
A. I was assistant in the lubricating department up to the time I went in with——
Q. Now, isn't it a fact that before you were appointed general manager that you discharged the duties of a general manager?
A. Before I was appointed general manager?
Q. Yes, before you got that title?
A. No, sir.
Q. From the time of the—just antecedent to the reincorporation what were your duties.
A. As I remember, now, I was in Mr. Andrew Finlay's office.
Q. Doing what?
A. Doing some corresponding, looking after some Mexico matters.
Q. Now, upon the reincorporation were your duties in any sense changed?
A. No, sir.
Q. Continued to perform the duties you had theretofore performed?
1459 A. I did.
Q. Upon the same salary?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In the same room?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. At the same desk?
A. I think so.
Q. And that continued up to the time you were appointed general manager in 1903?
A. What do you mean?
Q. I mean the employment you were then engaged at.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Without any change?
A. In title?

Q. In title or change in fact?

A. I have forgotten now whether there was any change in title; I was appointed to the present place on July 1st, 1903—the title.

Q. Well, did your duties as general manager begin prior to that time?

A. No, sir, they did not.

Q. They were concurrent with your appointment as general manager?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what are your duties as general manager?

A. General correspondence with all the division managers, looking after the marketing of our oils, placing of agents, and so forth.

Q. Employment—hiring of employees?

A. In part, yes, sir.

Q. Fixing of salaries?

A. In part.

Q. Determining the prices of oil at points where you have competition?

A. At all points.

1460 Q. At all points. Do you know the parts of the United States that the Waters Pierce Oil Company was doing business in prior to the reorganization or reincorporation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know the line that divided what was called Standard Oil Company territory from the Waters Pierce Oil Company territory?

A. I knew where we were doing business.

Q. Well, I will ask you again, if you know the line dividing the territory?

A. I could not draw a line, no, sir.

Q. You know where you were doing business and where the Standard Oil Company was doing business?

A. I know all the towns we were doing business in.

Q. And where the Standard Oil Company was doing business?

A. Well, I assume they were doing business. All I know is where our agencies were.

Q. You have given testimony heretofore with reference to this matter, have you not, in the case in Missouri?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In that you stated, did you not, that you knew where the Standard Oil Company was doing business and where the Waters Pierce Oil Company was doing business and the dividing line between them?

A. As I stated, I think, that I knew where all our agencies were. As far as the dividing line was concerned, I don't think I could draw any imaginary line.

Q. Now, in appointing agents, you tell him where he shall do business and where he shall not, do you not?

A. No, sir, I don't know as I do. I think that the division manager understands that; he knows where his agencies are.

Q. You then, give no instructions to division managers or anybody else with reference to the points at which you are doing 1461 business and with reference to where the Standard Oil Company is doing business?

A. I don't remember that I have.

Q. Did you or not so testify in the case to which I have referred?

A. Testify what?

Q. Did you so testify in the case to which I have referred—that you had communicated to your managers and your agents and employees where the line was?

A. I don't remember that I did.

Q. You don't reny that you did?

A. I could not say positively.

Q. Has there been any change since the reincorporation?

A. In what?

Q. In the matter of the line between the Standard Oil Company and the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. You know of none?

A. I don't know of any.

Q. As general manager it is a part of your business, isn't it, to extend the business of the Waters Pierce Oil Company into any territory that may need increased facilities or need oil, is that true or not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you since the reincorporation made any extensions over this line between the Standard Oil Company and the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Our extensions have been entirely tributary to the agencies which we already had.

Q. Well, do you mind answering the specific question I put? Have you or not made any extensions into the territory that had been theretofore claimed by the Standard Oil Company?

1462 A. I don't know that I have, no, sir.

Q. Well, you know that you have not?

A. I don't know of any.

Q. You don't know of any?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have not then, at any time since the reincorporation invaded Standard Oil Territory?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. And you don't know of the Standard Oil Company at any time coming into your territory?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?

A. In Louisiana.

Q. In Louisiana?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whereabouts?

A. Shreveport, Lake Charles—eight or ten points in Louisiana.

Q. Now, when was that Mr. Ackert?

A. Oh, a year ago—about a year ago.

Q. When?

A. About a year ago.
Q. Since the institution of the suit in Missouri against the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. I could not say—just about a year ago.
Q. Now, how did you happen to find it out?
A. I found it out from our manager in that division.
Q. He reported that the Standard Oil Company was invading your territory?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What did you do?
A. We immediately went after it, the same as any other competitor.
1463 Q. Well, you referred that to 26 Broadway?
A. No, sir.
Q. Didn't make any report to Mr. McNall, or your commercial agent up there?
A. No, sir.
Q. Made no protest to the Standard Oil Company?
A. Not that I know of.
Q. Well, you took the matter up at executive meetings, did you not?
A. I don't know that I did.
Q. Well, I asked you if you did or not?
A. No, sir, I did not.
Q. To whom did you report the fact that you had found out that the Standard Oil Company was invading territory which had been agreed that the Waters Pierce Oil Company should alone be in?
A. Mr. C. A. Pierce, president of the company.
Q. You reported to him?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, what did you and Mr. Pierce do with reference to it?
A. We immediately put in some more salesmen in Louisiana and went after the business.
Q. How did you go after the business?
A. Just the same as we would any other competitor.
Q. Reduced prices?
A. If they reduced their prices and it was necessary for us to secure business to reduce prices, we did it; in many cases we didn't have to do it.
Q. Now, after the suit was instituted in Missouri and the Standard Oil Company invaded your territory in Louisiana you put out more men and additional equipment and where necessary lowered prices to meet the competition of the Standard Oil Company?
A. Yes, sir.
1464 Q. Now, then, they haven't come into the State of Texas, have they?
A. Not that I know of.
Q. And you haven't found it necessary to increase your equipment on account of Standard Oil competition?
A. No, sir, not——
Q. Or increase the number of your men?
A. No.

Q. Or lower your prices on account of Standard Oil Company competition in Texas?

A. No, not on account of Standard Oil Company, because in Texas we meet conditions as they come up and as rapidly as they develop.

Q. I say, you have not done any of these things on account of Standard Oil Competition in Texas?

A. No, sir, our present equipment warrants not doing that.

Q. Now, what character of claim does the Standard Oil Company make with regard to its right under the agreement with the Waters Pierce Oil Company to go into that territory?

A. I don't know; I have never discussed that part of it.

Q. You don't know what is the basis of their claim to disregard the agreement as to territory?

A. I don't have any idea.

Q. Have you no idea of what it is?

A. No, sir.

Q. The result of their competition in Louisiana, isn't it that there here been a general lowering of prices?

A. In some places, yes, sir.

Q. You have also been compelled to put in a better quality of oil over there?

A. No, sir.

Q. What do you put in over there?

A. It's Prime White and Eupion.

1465 Q. Where do you get that?

A. From the same plants that we get it in Texas.

Q. That is to say, you put in Chaison Eupion?

A. No, sir.

Q. You don't use that?

A. No, sir.

Q. Can't use that over there?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, can you use it over there?

A. No, sir, I don't think we can.

Q. That would be the easiest point to get it, wouldn't it?

A. That or Corsicana.

Q. Well, it would be cheaper to get it from Chaison?

A. Well, I don't know; I could not say whether it was cheaper or not or better.

Q. It is nearer the field, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir, some parts.

Q. Now, you haven't found it necessary to get a better grade of oil than that which you can get at Corsicana or Chaison on account of Standard Oil Company competition in Louisiana?

A. The oil we have always furnished there is the best that can be obtained.

Q. Well, I am asking you, you still furnish this oil you get at Corsicana and at Chaison to your Louisiana trade, do you?

A. We get the best oil we can obtain.

Q. Now, will you answer my question?

A. What kind of oil that we get at Chaison, do you refer to?

Q. Well, I am talking of what you call Eupion.
A. No, sir, we get no Eupion oil at Chaison.
Q. You don't furnish any Eupion oil from Chaison to the Louisiana trade?
1466 A. No, sir.
Q. It is a fact, isn't it, that you have at times in the past gotten some of this inferior oil at Chaison and used it for Eupion?
A. Not that I remember of; we may have gotten a few tanks, but it was not continued; I could not say positively on that.
Q. You were notified, were you not, by the East Texas division manager that the Eupion oil was even worse than the Corsicana S. W. 112?
A. I don't remember that I have.
Q. The Central Texas man—you don't remember that your attention was called——
A. We were talking about Louisiana, weren't we?
Q. Well, I am asking you about the Central Texas man now, if he didn't so notify you?
A. The question, please?
Q. I asked you if the Central Texas man didn't notify you that the oil you got from Chaison and you were selling as Eupion was inferior even to Corsicana S. W. 112?
A. We may have shipped a few tanks in there, but it was discontinued at once on statements by him.
Q. Well, did you have a few tanks?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, you did continue to ship into Louisiana this Texas oil, notwithstanding Standard Oil Company competition?
A. That and the Neodesha or Sugar Creek or the Northern refineries for Eupion.
Q. Now, does the Standard Oil Company also get its oil from Neodesha and Sugar Creek and ship into Louisiana?
A. I could not say.
1467 Q. It doesn't go out in the same car—a shipment to the Standard Oil Company doesn't get into the same car?
A. No, sir, absolutely.
Q. How do you know?
A. Because our oil goes into our own tanks.
Q. What is your course of business in getting it there—how do you get it there?
A. In tank cars.
Q. If you want some Neodesha oil you make requisition on the Standard Oil Company for it?
A. That is handled in another department; I have nothing to do with that; I don't know who we place orders with.
Q. You don't know?
A. No, sir, I don't know; it is out of my department.
Q. You have no information except in your own department?
A. That's all.
Q. About the business of this concern. You have been there for many years?
A. In St. Louis about thirteen years.

Q. You don't know where they get the oil or how they get it?

A. I would like to testify on facts; I would not like to testify on hearsay.

Q. Well, as manager there, and as an officer of the company and as a member of the executive committee of that company, am I to understand that you don't know where oil is bought?

A. I know various refineries where it is bought.

Q. You know as much about that as you do that it is taken from Neodesha down into Louisiana?

A. I know that orders are placed on Corsicana refinery or Sugar Creek and Neodesha and any other place where we purchase our supplies, but I can't say further than that.

1468 Q. You place them yourself?

A. No, sir.

Q. How did you acquire that information?

A. I simply have knowledge that they are placed, but I don't place orders personally or in my department.

Q. Now, these other matters I have been interrogating you about, don't you know that in the same way, as to where you get it and who you get it from and prices that are paid for it?

A. That only in a hearsay way. That is out of my department, so far as the buying of our supplies.

Q. It's a part of the business plan of the concern, is it, to confine knowledge of the employees to their particular department?

A. Not altogether.

Q. But notwithstanding your long stay there and notwithstanding you are an important officer of the company and member of the executive committee, you don't know anything at all about the prices or from whom the oil is bought; is that true?

A. I have stated that the oil was bought from the Corsicana refinery and Neodesha and Whiting; they are placed on those refineries—I could not say with whom they are placed.

Q. They are filled from those refineries, you mean?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, as far as the Corsicana refinery is concerned, you take the entire output there, do you not?

A. I could not say that definitely.

Q. Well, is that your information?

A. It is possible we do.

Q. Well, you know that is the case, do you not?

A. I could not say positively.

Q. You were so notified by your Central Texas division manager, are you not?

1469 A. He has made those statements, yes, sir; there may have been some changes since then—I don't know.

Q. You don't know?

A. I could not say positively.

Q. Now, isn't it part of your business as general manager up there to determine what shall be done with the output of the Corsicana refinery?

A. No, sir.

Q. Who does that?

A. Mr. A. M. Finlay.
Q. Without consulting you?
A. He may consult me at times.
Q. What do you do with that part of the output of the Corsicana refinery that you don't sell as Eupion oil?
A. As I understand it, they make two different grades there.
Q. You take it all?
A. I can't say; it is possible we do.
Q. Sir?
A. It is possible we do; I could not say definitely.
Q. You don't know, then, what is done with the balance of that oil?
A. I could not say definitely, no, sir.
Q. Now, don't you acquire any information up there by reason of your connection with the company—what is your information about it?
A. As to what?
Q. As to what is done with the balance of the output of the Corsicana refinery?
A. I could not say.
Q. You don't want to make any statement about it?
A. I could not say.
1470 Q. You don't know about that?
A. I could not say.
Q. When did you learn that the Standard Oil Company owned a majority of the stock in the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. Only so far as the papers—I have only seen it in the papers.
Q. You have no knowledge of that matter at all, then?
A. No, sir.
Q. You have never heard that discussed there by Mr. Pierce?
A. I have not, no, sir.
Q. Did you hear him discuss his stock ownership at any time?
A. I have not seen Mr. Pierce, only for a short time, in a long time.
Q. Yes, sir, but I didn't ask you that question.
A. I have not heard him discuss it.
Q. For a long time?
A. I have not heard him discuss it at all.
Q. You have never heard him make any statement about it?
A. No, sir.
Q. Didn't you make that statement in the other case?
A. I don't think I did; I don't remember.
Q. Now, who is the executive committee there?
A. Advisory committee?
Q. Executive committee?
A. We have an advisory committee.
Q. Have you an executive committee?
A. Not that I know of.
Q. Never have heard of the executive committee—never have heard of that?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What became of it?

A. Why——

1471 Q. What became of the executive committee?

A. There is a committee.

Q. Well, there is an executive committee?

A. Well, there is a committee composed of the officers of the company.

Q. It is called the executive committee, isn't it—is it or is it not?

A. It is called the advisory committee.

Q. Well, it was formerly called the executive committee, wasn't it?

A. Might have been.

Q. Well, wasn't it?

A. It might have been.

Q. Well, you know it was, don't you?

A. Yes, there was an executive committee.

Q. Now, you have been a member of that advisory committee, haven't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long?

A. Since it was organized.

Q. Since its organization?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The advisory or executive committee has before it very frequently communications from 26 Broadway, hasn't it?

A. I don't remember of any communications between St. Louis and 26 Broadway. We have now at 23 Broad Street a commercial agent.

Q. How long since you have had him there?

A. About fifteen months.

Q. Prior to that time you had men at 26 Broadway, didn't you?

A. I understand we did.

Q. Man that was on your pay-roll?

A. I could not say.

1472 Q. Don't know about that?

A. I don't.

Q. What was his name?

A. R. H. McNall.

Q. R. H. McNall. You had frequent communications from him, didn't you?

A. Me?—no, sir, I didn't.

Q. Did the company?

A. I presume they did, yes, sir.

Q. Officers of the company?

A. Naturally so, if he was our commercial agent.

Q. These matters were referred to the executive or advisory committee?

A. They were probably talked of in the committee.

Q. Then they came before the committee?

A. Probably so, yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who Mr. McNall was?

A. Do I know who he was?

Q. Do you or not?

A. I have never met the gentleman.

Q. What training had he with the Waters Pierce Oil Company prior to the time that he was appointed commercial agent?

A. I have never met the gentleman; I don't know anything about him or what training he might have had.

Q. Well, you know a number of gentlemen with the Waters Pierce Oil Company or know of them, that you have never met?

A. That I have never met?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't know of any now.

Q. Did you ever hear of Mr. McNall as an employee of the Waters Pierce Oil Company antecedent to the time he was designated 1473 as commercial agent?

A. No, sir, he was not in the employ of the company before that.

Q. Did you ever have any connection with him prior to that time?

A. Not any more than other men whom we employ.

Q. It's a rule to secure competent men by promotion, isn't it?

A. If we have them, otherwise we employ them on the outside.

Q. Now, your present commercial agent, where did you get him?

A. He was employed.

Q. He was an old employee?

A. No, sir, never had been an employee.

Q. Who employed him?

A. Mr. H. C. Pierce.

Q. Your other important officers, persons that conduct the general affairs of the company, have been people who have been raised up in the service and know something about it?

A. Part of them.

Q. Who have not?

A. Mr. Edward C. Stanley, the controller.

Q. Whose business is simply to audit accounts?

A. General finances of the company, handling reports of——

Q. Having nothing to do with the active business except keeping its accounts and its money?

A. He has some, yes, sir.

Q. Now, what training do you know of Mr. McNall having in the oil business prior to the time he was employed?

A. Only what I have heard and seen in the papers.

Q. Had he had any training at all?

A. I understand he had, yes, sir.

Q. You understand he was clerk in Mr. Tilford's office?

A. I have heard that and seen it in the papers.

1474 Q. Now, at the time he was employed, you didn't know anything at all about it, did you?

A. No, sir, no more than our present commercial agent.

Q. The executive committee didn't know anything about it?

A. No, sir, only he was employed by Mr. Pierce.

Q. Was that matter referred to the executive committee at all?

A. By whom?

Q. By Mr. Pierce?

A. No, sir, not until after he was employed.

Q. Now, the details of that business, such for instance as determining whether or not a rebate shall be given to the Rotan Grocery Company, is determined by the executive committee, isn't it?

A. It is considered there.

Q. Who determines it?

A. The Committee.

Q. The Committee?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whether or not a tank station shall be put in at any place is determined by the executive committee?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to whether or not a horse shall be bought is determined by the executive committee?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But when you get a man to attend to your New York business, buy your supplies, buy all your oils and engines and everything of that sort, you don't take that into consideration in your executive committee?

A. Our present commercial agent, who was appointed in March, was employed on account of the death of the commercial agent we had had for about a year, and it was necessary to do it very 1475 quick, and Mr. Pierce arranged it personally and advised the committee of what he had done.

Q. The one preceding him was also arranged at 26 Broadway, wasn't it?

A. I don't know as it was.

Q. Well, was that matter up before the executive committee?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Did the executive committee consider whether it should discharge Mr. McNall and employ Mr. What's-his-name?

A. Mr. Rundel.

Q. Mr. Rundel?

A. I have forgotten; I could not say; at that time I was out of the country, I was in Mexico on business and I could not say.

Q. Those things are all put down in the minutes of the executive committee, are they not?

A. They may be.

Q. Well, do you know or not?

A. I could not tell you; I have not read any of the minutes or seen them.

Q. Don't you hear the minutes of the committee read?

A. I hear them read, yes, sir.

Q. How big a book is that, by the way?

A. I don't know as it's in a book.

Q. What is it?

A. Simply a memorandum kept of what is done.

Q. It is not put in a book?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is that volume of business so great that it could not be easily brought to Texas?

A. I could not say; I don't know anything about how it is kept; I simply hear it read.

1476 Q. Don't know anything about it, then?
A. No, sir.
Q. Now, tell us in a general sort of a way what this agent does at New York?
A. Attends to our shipments for Mexico, purchases stills, boilers, piping, for the supply of the refineries or for the refineries in Mexico. Attends to our shipping from there. Attends to crude oil, and any other matters which they may have up that is necessary to handle in New York.
Q. You have quite a good deal of business of that kind?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Very necessary that you have somebody to attend to that?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How did you get along during the time that testimony was being taken in the Hadley case and Mr. McNall was absent from New York?
A. I didn't know he was absent.
Q. His absence didn't so affect the business there that you didn't find out about it?
A. I was in Mexico at the time the testimony was taken.
Q. You were in Mexico and Mr. McNall was there?
A. I was down there in Mexico re-organizing the business in Mexico; I don't know where Mr. McNall was. Your information is the first I ever had that he was not——
Q. You did not know he was absent when Mr. Hadley was taking the testimony?
A. I did not.
Q. How did the company get along during that period?
A. I can't say; I didn't know he was absent.
1477 Q. Now, Mr. McNall during the time he was commercial agent there made all sorts of recommendations to you as to how you should conduct your business, didn't he?
A. No, sir.
Q. Didn't?
A. No, sir.
Q. You know his signature?
A. I don't think I would.
Q. Do you know that which is accepted by your office as his signature?
A. I couldn't say that I do; I have never had any correspondence with Mr. McNall.
Q. Well, I will ask you if that isn't Mr. McNall's signature?
(Hands letter to witness.)
A. Oh, I couldn't swear to it.
Q. That is what you accepted there as his signature? Haven't you seen hundreds of them?
A. I have seen them, but I couldn't say whether it is his signature or not.
Q. Well, it is R. H. McNall on Waters Pierce Oil Company's blanks, isn't it, and accepted as the signature of Mr. McNall in your office?
A. It may be.

Q. I am asking you if it isn't.

A. I have had no correspondence with Mr. McNall.

Q. I didn't ask you that; I asked you if that isn't that which is accepted as the signature of Mr. McNall in your office and the office of the Waters Pierce Oil Company at St. Louis, and is accepted by the executive committee of the Waters Pierce Oil Company at St. Louis as the signature of Mr. McNall, and acted on?

1478 A. If the letter came from Mr. McNall, I wouldn't know whether it is from him or some one else; I presume that is Mr. McNall's signature, but I couldn't swear to it.

Q. Well, I will ask you to specifically answer my question,—isn't that the same signature that is accepted by your office and by the executive committee as the signature of Mr. McNall in your office, in the St. Louis home office?

A. I have no correspondence in my office with Mr. McNall.

Q. I didn't ask you that.

A. It may be his.

Q. I didn't ask you that; I asked you if you didn't accept that as his signature?

A. I couldn't say.

Q. You didn't accept it?

A. I couldn't say, because I have never had any correspondence with Mr. McNall; it may be his name.

Q. You know it is his name, don't you?

A. That is his name, but I mean his signature; I couldn't swear.

Q. It is a fact, is it not, that when letters are received from Mr. McNall that they are passed around to you and other heads of departments and members of the executive committee?

A. There are no letters received from Mr. McNall.

Q. Well, they come to your office, do they not, and are they not passed around to you and other people there?

A. Sometimes they are.

Q. Well, now, when they are passed around there, do you accept that as his signature?

A. I have seen the signature before.

Q. Haven't you seen it a number of times before?

A. I have seen that signature before.

Q. And haven't you accepted that as the signature of Mr. McNall?

1479 Mr. ODELL: We object to that manner of examination, because the witness has stated time and again that he never saw Mr. McNall, didn't know Mr. McNall, didn't know his signature, and that he has had no correspondence with him.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Q. Well now, will you answer that?

A. (Question read by stenographer.) I can't say that I can swear that that is his signature.

Q. I didn't ask you to swear that; I asked you if you didn't accept that as his signature and act upon it?

A. It is possibly his signature; I have seen letters with that same signature before that came from our commercial agent.

Q. And you acted upon it as his signature?
A. We considered it as his signature.
Q. And acted upon it?
A. I don't know that we did; that was a matter for the executive committee to decide.
Q. I am not asking you whether you accepted his recommendations, but whether you acted upon that as his signature, assumed that to be his signature and accepted it as his signature?
A. We probably did.
Q. You did, did you not?
A. We probably did. I don't know the man, and I don't know; all I know is what I see there, and have seen before.
Q. Now, the course of business, wasn't it, was for a letter which you had any interest in coming to the office from Mr. McNall, was for that to be brought around to you and for you to read——
A. I have read a great many letters from Mr. McNall.
Q. Well, do you mind answering the question I have asked?
1480 A. It might have been brought around; I have read letters from Mr. McNall.
Q. I will ask you again if that isn't the course of business, wasn't the course of business when a letter that pertained to any of your business came from Mr. McNall, for that letter to be sent to you—to be brought to you, to be read by you, and if it wasn't read by you?
A. It might have been sent to me; yes, I have read lots of Mr. McNall's letters that have been passed around to me.
Q. Frequently you would note upon that the fact that you had read it, would you not?
A. Possibly so.
Q. Well, I will ask you if that wasn't frequently the case, that you noted it?
A. If I had read it I probably noted it; I usually do on all letters.
Q. Now, whenever a letter was read before the executive Committee that fact was noted, was it not, stamped on the letter itself?
A. I presume it was.
Q. (Hands witness another letter.) That is the same signature that was on the other letter that has been shown to you?
A. It looks like it.
Q. And that? (Counsel hands witness another letter each time.)
A. Looks like the same.
Q. And that?
A. It looks like the same one.
Q. And that one?
A. It looks like it.
Q. And that?
1481 A. That looks like it.
Q. And that one?
A. It looks like the same one you had first.
Q. (Same letter.) You would say it was the same?
A. It looks like it.
Q. And that?
A. It looks like it.
Q. And that one?

A. That looks like it.
Q. And that?
A. That looks like it.
Q. And that?
A. That looks like it.
Q. And that is the same is it not?
A. That looks like it.
Q. (Same letter.) Same signature isn't it?
A. It looks like the same one.
Q. And that one?
A. That looks like it.
Q. You know the signature of Mr. A. M. Finlay?
A. I think so, yes, sir.
Q. Now, that is the signature of Mr. McNall there, isn't it?
A. That looks like the same one you had first.
Q. And whose handwriting is that below?
A. That looks like Mr. Finlay's.
Q. (Hands witness another letter.) Did you ever see this handwriting before?
A. I don't know that I did, no, sir.
Q. (Another letter.) Now, that is the same signature as that which you have examined?
A. That looks like the first one.
1482 Q. And that also?
A. Same way.
Q. And that?
A. Same way. (Counsel handing letter with each question.)
Q. You don't know whose that is?
A. No sir, I do not.
Q. Now, how about that signature?
A. That looks like the first one you had.
Q. Looks like the correspondence which you have had here all the time?
A. Probably is.
Q. Now, what is the significance of that stamp up there in the corner?
A. Looks as though Mr. Gruet had got it and transmitted it to Mr. A. M. Finlay, vice president.
Q. That is the stamp that is used to indicate that fact?
A. That is the stamp he probably used in transmitting it.
Q. (Another letter.) Now, with reference to that signature?
A. That looks like the first.
Q. And that?
A. The same.
Q. And that?
A. The same.
Q. Look at that there, this "A. J. H" up there?
A. A. J. Hutchinson, I assume, that was his initials. He was clerk.
Q. What about that signature?
A. That looks like the first letter.

Q. Looks like all the other signatures you have received there in your office from R. H. McNall and acted upon?
A. It looks like it.
Q. And that?
1483 A. That looks the same way.
Q. And that one?
A. That is like the first.
Q. And that?
A. Same.
Q. And that?
A. The same.
Q. And that?
A. That looks the same.
Q. And that?
A. That looks the same.
Q. And that?
A. Looks like the same.
Q. And what about that?
A. That looks the same, like the same.
Q. And that?
A. Looks like the same.
Q. And that?
A. That looks like it.
Q. And that one?
A. That looks like it.
Q. What about that?
A. That looks like it.
Q. Is that the signature of Mr. McNall?
A. That looks like the first one.
Q. That is the signature accepted there as Mr. McNall's signature?
A. That looks like the first letter you showed me.
Q. Who is T. J. Rider?
A. He was general manager at that time in Mexico.
Q. What about that signature?
A. That looks like the first one.
1484 Q. Now, take this sheet here, have you seen anything like that in your business up there, like that? (Hands witness paper attached to letter and envelope).
A. I don't remember of seeing anything of this kind.
Q. Got any company blanks with reference to competitive shipments, shipments by competitors?
A. In St. Louis?
Q. Yes.
A. Yes, sir, we may have some blanks.
Q. Well, you have some blanks?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What about that signature? (Another letter).
A. That looks like the first one.
Q. And that?
A. And that the same.

Q. Now, read this,—the heading, "Waters Pierce Oil Company, incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri, May 29, 1900."

Mr. ODELL: We would like to see the letter.

Q. "R. H. McNall, Commercial Agent", all of these letters have that on them, haven't they?

The COURT: Let counsel for the defendant see the paper.
(Mr. Batts hands paper to counsel for defendant).

Q. All these letters that you have noted have "Waters Pierce Oil Company, incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri, May 30, 1900, R. H. McNall, Commercial Agent", on them, have they not?

Judge PENN: That statement of counsel as to the contents of these letters, the letters themselves are the best evidence of their contents?

Mr. BATTS: I am not undertaking to prove the contents of the letter.

1485 Judge PENN: We object to the witness being interrogated as to the contents of the letters.

Mr. BATTS: I am undertaking to establish these letters. The witness has been very guarded in his statements with regard to this signature and it seems to me that it is entirely competent to show that these letters have the letter heads and name of the commercial agent there, and that it has semblance, at all events, of genuineness, and I am undertaking to establish that fact by him; it isn't the contents of the letter.

Judge PENN: If those facts assist in identifying the letter, or show that they are admissible in evidence, it will appear upon the face of them when they are offered in evidence, and it is entirely unnecessary to question the witness in advance as to the contents of the letters.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Judge PENN: Defendant excepts.

Q. Now, the letters that reference has been made to, they have those letter-heads, have they, that I have just mentioned?

A. How is that?

Q. Well, I say these letters that you see here have the company's name, all that have been shown to you?

A. I think so.

Q. Just as all the letters that the company has received from its commercial agent at New York, that is the same character of stationery that all of those letters are written on?

A. So far as I know.

Q. So far as they have come under your observation?

A. So far as I know.

Q. (Hands witness another letter). Now, that is the same signature, isn't it?

1486 A. Looks like the first one.

Q. That also?

A. Same as the first, seems to be.

Q. And that?

A. That seems like the first.
Q. And that one?
A. That one seems to be the same.
Q. And that?
A. And that one.
Q. And that?
A. And that.
Q. Now, these letters are with regard to the same character of matters that Mr. McNall writes to you about, are they not? I will call off some of them. (Counsel reads) "Statement of bad debts for the first six months of 1902, Mexican bad debts——"

Mr. ODELL: Before the witness is interrogated about those letters, there are a great many of them and we have had no opportunity to examine them.

Mr. BATTS: If the counsel will admit their genuineness, why I have no further questions to ask upon it. If I have got to prove them up in this circumstantial way, I shall insist upon doing it.

Mr. ODELL: We insist that under the rule we are admitted to examine the letters or documents before the witness is interrogated about them, and I object to any interrogation about them for any purpose until we have an opportunity to examine them.

Mr. BATTS (hands all the letters to counsel for defendant): They are there for the examination of counsel.

Mr. ODELL: There are some forty or fifty of them, Your Honor.

Judge PENN: If the Court please, the examination of this witness with reference to these letters, as we understand, is being 1487 made for the purpose of undertaking to show by circumstances the authenticity of these letters for the purpose of introducing the letters.

Mr. BATTS: The purpose of the interrogation is to establish the genuineness of the letters, yes.

Judge PENN: We make the objection now, that this isn't the best evidence at the command of the State with reference to the genuineness of these letters, if they are genuine, and we ask the Court to retire the witness from the state, and permit us to put Mr. Lightfoot on the stand and show by him from whom he received these letters. We expect to show by Mr. Lightfoot that if these letters are genuine, they were received by him from one J. P. Gruet, and stolen by Gruet from the files of this company, and if they are genuine, that Gruet knows that fact; and that they have a contract with Gruet by which he has agreed to come here and testify whenever called upon by the State to do so, and having that evidence at their command it is the best evidence as to whether or not these letters were received in the ordinary course of mail by the Waters Pierce Oil Company, and having the best evidence it isn't competent for them to prove it by circumstantial evidence.

The COURT: The request will be denied.

Judge PENN: The defendant excepts to the ruling of the Court.

Mr. BATTS: Your Honor, I offer the documents in evidence under the proof already made. It is in connection with the established and admitted signature of R. H. McNall.

Judge PENN: Now, if the Court please, we object to the introduction of these letters in evidence, on the ground that their authenticity has not been sufficiently established; on the further ground that the fact of their having been received by the Waters Pierce Oil 1488 Company or by J. P. Gruet, as Secretary of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, has not been sufficiently established, and on the further ground that the evidence which has been introduced by the State with reference to the authenticity of these letters, or the fact that they were received by the Waters Pierce Oil Company or J. P. Gruet, is not the best evidence at the command of the State with reference to their authenticity, if they are authentic, or with reference to their having been received by the Waters Pierce Oil Company or by J. P. Gruet, if they were so received, and we here again offer to put Mr. Lightfoot on the stand and to prove by him that he received these papers from J. P. Gruet, and to show by him that he made a contract with J. P. Gruet, agreeing to give him one third of the county attorney's fee in this case, in consideration of his furnishing evidence in this case and coming here to testify when called upon to do so. We further offer to prove by Mr. Lightfoot that they have examined Mr. Gruet on two occasions by deposition and have not attempted to prove the authenticity of these letters, if they are authentic, by him, on either of those occasions.

The COURT: It is not incumbent on the party offering the letter to prove by one witness, rather than the other, the authenticity of the letter. The proof, so far, simply shows that the letters are written on stationery similar to the stationery that McNall used, and that the name resembled McNall's signature.

Mr. BATTS: There are established signatures of Mr. McNall already before the jury, and the witness testified that they are apparently the same.

Mr. ALLEN: And the question of law is that the jury themselves may compare the established signature with what we are offering, and let them pass on it and say whether it is the genuine signature.

The COURT: I don't understand that the witness has compared the signature with the letters which you offer in evidence 1489 with the admitted signature of McNall.

Mr. BATTS: The Court is mistaken about that. I did make that proof. I will do it over again if the Court desired.

Mr. ALLEN: We make the point further that the jury can do that themselves; it is a well established rule of law wherever you get an admitted signature in to the jury, then they can take other signatures and compare them themselves and say whether they are the same.

Judge PENN: If the Court please, in addition to the objections made, while we do not concede that the evidence is sufficient to establish the signature of McNall to these letters—but if it should be conceded that it is sufficient to establish his signature, it is in our judgment, certainly insufficient to establish the transmission of these purported letters to the Waters Pierce Oil Company or to J. P. Gruet, and the receipt of them. There is no evidence that they were ever mailed and no evidence that they were ever received, and the point which I was after making is—and I think I made it clear—that we contend that the State cannot prove by circumstances the authenticity of these letters or their receipt, when they have better evidence at their command.

The COURT: The contention is overruled.

Judge PENN: We except to the ruling of the Court.

Mr. BATTS: If this is admissible on the proof that has been offered, I do not desire to use any more time to prove these up; if it is not, I shall——

The COURT: I am of the opinion that the evidence is sufficient to establish the—or to warrant the introduction of the letters, if that is desired, and further, that McNall wrote the letters, but whether they were ever received by the Waters Pierce Oil Company at St. Louis is another question.

Mr. BATTS: I shall offer proof on that, I think, later.

1490 Q. Now, Mr. Ackert, it is the habit, is it not, in your business there, that when a letter is received, to stamp the date of its receipt upon the letter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And for the signature or name of some of the officials of the concern to appear upon the stamp?

A. Yes, sir, the initials of the party who gets it, receives it.

Q. Has the name in some places?

A. It may have; I don't remember now of its having.

Q. Now, I will ask you Mr. Ackert, if letters—I will indicate the general subject-matter of these letters and ask you if they are not the character of letters received from your commercial agent at New York.

Judge PENN: We object to the counsel indicating in his questions the character of the letters, and if the Court thinks that it is permissible for him to prove the character, whether or not it is of the general character of letter received, that the proper plan is to hand the letter to the witness and let him examine it and state whether or not it is similar in character to letters which were received from McNall.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Judge PENN: The defendant excepts.

Q. Now, a letter purporting to be written to A. M. Finlay, Esq., and signed by R. H. McNall, dated September 1, 1904, "Advance in billing prices of 72 and 73, 76 gravity gasoline,"—is that the same character of letters received from your commercial agent at New York?

A. It might have been.

Q. Well, I will ask you if the matter of advance in billing 1491 prices of gasoline isn't among the things you received letters from your commercial agent in New York?

A. We bought a great deal of gasoline and oil from the Standard Oil Company, and he probably was advising of the advance and decline.

Q. Will you answer the question I asked?

A. I never had received any letters from Mr. McNall; it is possible Mr. Finlay got a good many letters of that kind.

Q. I am not asking you about that; I am asking you if that isn't the character of letters received by the Waters Pierce Oil Company at St. Louis, from the commercial agent in New York, if that is one of the things that would be included in his correspondence and with reference to which he writes you?

A. It might be.

Q. It is, is it not?

A. It might be; I couldn't say because I have never gotten any letters from Mr. McNall.

Q. Well, I will ask you to look at this particular letter, (Hands letter to witness) and see if you recall anything about it.

A. Not anything about this letter at all.

Q. Now, on the bottom of that letter, is the signature—handwriting—of A. M. Finlay, is it not?

A. Yes, sir, looks like it.

Q. Well, it is, isn't it?

A. I think it is, yes, sir.

Q. What is the date of that letter?

A. September 1, 1900.

Q. What was the relation of Mr. Finlay to your company at that time?

A. He was vice president, I think. No, he was president.

Q. Now, will you explain that stamp there?

A. It was the date on which Mr. Finlay received it.

Q. It was the date upon which Mr. Finlay received it?

A. I assume so, yes, sir.

1492 Q. Now, that is the character of stamp that is put upon it when a letter is received at the Waters Pierce Oil Company's office, is it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. This stamp here, what is that and what does that mean?

A. J. P. Gruet, it was read in the executive committee meeting, September 4, 1904.

Q. What does that mean?

A. It was read there.

Q. It was read in the executive committee?

A. Yes, sir, that is what it says.

Mr. BATTS: What is the date of that letter?

Mr. JOHNSON: September 1, 1904.

Q. Now, explain these notations down here. (Hands witness letter.)

A. Looks as though it was noted by a clerk in Mr. Adams' department; I don't know what the lower one is, I couldn't say.

Mr. BATTS: I am sorry to have to go so minutely into each one of these letters, but we have now—here is a letter with the signature of R. H. McNall, such as he accepted in his office as the signature of McNall, with two stamps upon it, such as would be put there, and the subject-matter is the—such as might be the subject of a letter, that it is the signature or writing of A. M. Finlay, has that upon it, and he was vice president of the company, and notations by a clerk in Mr. Adams' office——

Q. Who was Mr. Adams?

A. I don't know whether he was secretary or treasurer at that time.

Mr. BATTS: Now, I will offer that particular letter.

Judge PENN: The defendant objects to its introduction for the reasons stated: that neither the signature of R. H. McNall has been sufficiently established, nor its transmission to the Waters 1493 Pierce Oil Company or to A. M. Finlay, or its receipt by A. M. Finlay or the Waters Pierce Oil Company; and for the additional reason that the evidence which has been introduced by the State to show these facts is not the best evidence at the command of the State of the facts, if the facts are as claimed, and we again offer to put Mr. Lightfoot on the stand and to prove by him that these letters were received by him from J. P. Gruet, who was at the time of their receipt Secretary and an officer of the company, and if they are genuine, and if they were received by the Waters Pierce Oil Company or Mr. Finlay, as president, that the fact of their receipt could be established by direct, instead of circumstantial evidence, which we understand to be the best evidence; and that the witness had no personal knowledge of the receipt of this letter and has never seen it before.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Judge PENN: The defendant excepts.

Mr. BATTS: I hate to take up so much time on these; it is our purpose simply to indicate the general subject matter of these letters, the subject-matter as indicated on each one, as "advance in billing price of 72, 70, 76 gravity gasoline, and with permission of the Court, I will undertake before now introducing this particular one, to see if I cannot meet the demands of the law with regard to the entire batch, so I can simply, with permission of the Court and counsel, indicate the subject-matter instead of having to read all of these letters.

Q. Now, I will ask you to look at this, Mr. Ackert. (Hands witness letter.) What does it mean in this corner of this letter dated December 18, 1902?

A. Transmitted.

Judge PENN: We object to the witness being asked to state 1494 what a thing means; the genuineness of it hasn't been established.

Mr. BATTS (Handing letter to counsel for defendant): We have not been attempting to read it; I have simply passed it up to them.

Judge PENN: We submit that it isn't competent for him to be permitted to testify to the meaning of something the genuineness of which hasn't been proved.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Judge PENN: Defendant excepts. (Mr. Stenographer. Let the record show that the objection was made to notation on this letter, "transmitted December 20, 1902, to J. A. S.", and the notation "Received December 20, 1902, answered 20, J. P. Gruet," and the red ink notation at the bottom of this letter, "J. A. S. 12/20/02" for the purpose of saving time, it can all be considered objected to on the same ground and the same bill. Counsel, I presume, introduces it all?

Mr. BATTS: Yes, sir.

Q. Now, will you explain that, that stamp?

A. That seems to be a stamp used in Mr. Gruet's office, and I assume it is transmitted to a clerk in his office. I don't remember now who "J. A. S." is.

Q. "J. A. S." was the secretary of the executive committee, J. A. Stuart?

A. I think not.

Q. You think that Mr. Stuart was not secretary of the executive committee?

A. He was undoubtedly at that time the secretary, but this stamp down here shows that undoubtedly, or to my mind, that it was transmitted to a clerk in Mr. Gruet's office.

Q. That is Mr. Stuart, now the private secretary of Clay Arthur Pierce?

1495 A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know his signature?

A. That isn't his signature.

Q. Whose signature is it?

A. I can't say, but I am sure it is one of the clerks in Mr. Gruet's office.

Q. At this time, Mr. Gruet was secretary of the company?

A. Yes, sir, I think so.

Q. Now, the subject matter of this letter purported to be the cost of barreling and marketing, I will ask you if the cost of barreling and marketing is one of the things that your commercial agent in New York gave you instructions with reference to?

A. He never gave me any instructions at all.

Q. I am talking about the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

A. That was undoubtedly handled entirely in Mr. Gruet's department without reference to me or others.

Q. Well, I will put it in another way then: Is the matter of cost of barreling and marketing one of the subject matters upon which your commercial agent in New York communicates with the Waters Pierce Oil Company or some of its officials in St. Louis?

A. I did not know that it was.

Q. You don't know that it was.

A. I didn't know that it was.

Mr. BATTS: We offer this letter, it having been stated that that was—that "J. A. S." was a clerk in the office of the secretary who was Mr. J. P. Gruet, in connection with the testimony with regard to the signature of R. H. McNall.

Judge PENN: We renew the objections which we have made to the introduction of this other letter; I take it to be unnecessary to recite them.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Judge PENN: The defendant excepts.

1496 Q. Now, your attention is called——

Judge PENN: In order to save any confusion, when a letter is offered in evidence, identified, we insist that it be read at that time without delay.

Mr. BATTS: It is all done, Your Honor, in an effort to save time. (Reads:) "Received September 3, 1904, Ans. —, President Waters Pierce Oil Co." "Read at executive committee meeting, September 8, 1904, J. P. G. Secretary", "Advance in billing prices of 72 and 73, 76 gravity gasoline." "A. M. Finlay, Esq., St. Louis, Mo. Dear Sir:" (Counsel reads letter.) Signed by R. H. McNall, dated September 1, 1904.

Mr. BATTS: (Reads another letter:) "Waters Pierce Oil Co., New York, N. Y." "Transmitted December 20, 1902, to J. A. S." December 18, 1902." "Cost of barreling and marketing." "J. P. Gruet, Secretary, St. Louis, Mo. Dear Sir:" (Reads letter) Written by R. H. McNall.

Q. Now, is this clerk Rundel you talked about here, the same one you sent up to New York as your commercial agent?

A. Yes, sir.

Judge PENN: If the Court please, we do not want to consume the time of the Court and jury unnecessarily by having the same procedure gone through with reference to fifty or sixty letters. We desire to claim, as we have with reference to the two letters introduced, that they are not admissible, and of course if this same procedure is gone on with, in order to preserve our rights, it will be necessary to make our objection, but if we have an adjournment now and counsel would give us an opportunity to examine these letters, we think we will probably—feel almost assured that we will be willing to concede that the same character of evidence has been introduced or might be considered that the same character of evi-1497 dence has been introduced with reference to these two, and then let one general objection cover the whole matter; we think it would be a saving of probably an hour and a half or two hours' time, and we want time to go over these and confer with reference to them, but I feel satisfied that that will be the result.

The COURT: Well, we will adjourn until half past two o'clock.

Court re-convened at 2.30 p. m.

Direct examination of Mr. ACKERT continued.

(By Mr. BATTS:)

Judge PENN: If the Court please, with reference to these letters which have been offered by the State, for the purpose of saving time, we desire it to be considered as though the same character of testimony has been introduced with reference to each of these letters that was introduced this morning with reference to the two which Your Honor admitted in evidence.

The COURT: With reference to the endorsements and stamps on them?

Judge PENN: With reference to the endorsements and stamps on them so far as they are applicable; some of them haven't the same stamp on them; some have others of similar character and some have not; one some of them these endorsements are omitted. And we make the same objections to all of these letters which we made this morning to the two that were introduced in evidence, to-wit, that it isn't the best evidence at the hands of the State of the writing of these letters or of the receipt by the Waters Pierce Oil Company or the different officers to whom they are addressed, and we make this objection specifically with reference to the letters addressed to J. P. Gruet, who, as appears from the testimony in this case, was an officer of this company, secretary, and we sub-1498 mit that the testimony of the witness J. P. Gruet is the best evidence as to whether these letters were received by him, and we again renew our offer to put Mr. Lightfoot on the stand and prove that the State has a contract with the witness J. P. Gruet by which they could have him here if they saw fit to do so.

The COURT: The objection will be overruled.

Judge PENN: You decline to allow us to put Mr. Lightfoot on the stand?

The COURT: Yes, sir.

Judge PENN: The defendant excepts to both rulings of the Court.

Mr. BATTS: Now, with permission of the counsel and Court, instead of reading these letters, I will read the subject matter as indicated by the letter itself, where it does so.

Judge PENN: That is all right.

Mr. BATTS (to the Jury): Gentlemen, each of these letters is signed by R. H. McNall, written upon letter heads——

Judge PENN: We understood he is offering nothing but the letters and the endorsements on them. There are some of them that other papers are attached to, and there has been no effort to introduce those other papers in evidence.

The COURT: The other papers and the letters have not been offered in evidence.

Mr. BATTS: No, sir, I have not yet read them. The letter heads are: "Waters Pierce Oil Company, Incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri, May 29, 1900. New York, N. Y., R. H. McNall, Commercial Agent," and all that I see right now are addressed to J. P. Gruet, Esquire, Secretary Waters Pierce Oil Company, St. Louis, Mo., and where anything else is indicated I shall call attention to that. (Counsel either reads entire letter or subject matter.)
1499 The subject matter of this is, "Returning of cargo of steamship Pennant," dated August 27, 1902.

Letter of February 18, 1903, subject matter is not indicated here, "Will you kindly send me a report covering your annual sales at your station," etc.

Letter of July 9, 1902, subject matter as indicated by the letter itself is changing from Walter Jennings, Agent, to R. P. Tinsley, Agent.

Letter dated September 16, 1904, cost and selling price sheet.

Letter of April 6, 1903, shipment of refined oil from San Francisco to Mexican ports.

Letter dated September 19, 1904, "I beg to advise that on all orders received after this date the price made on linseed oil shall be as follows," etc.

Letter of December 7, 1903, "I beg to give below memo. of the average cost of barreling and marketing oil at stations in your various divisions during the first six months of 1903," etc.

Letter of January 6, 1905, "On all orders received after this date the price on linseed oil will be as follows," giving the prices.

Letter of January 30, 1903, subject, returning debit memorandum.

Letter of December 24, 1902, "I beg to hand you herewith blank for reporting prices upon company supplies during the month of December."

Letter of March 31, 1903, "For some time past we have not received from you clearances of Texas fuel oil from Sabine Pass and Port Arthur," etc.

Letter of February 11, 1903, seems to be the one I read to the jury this morning.

Second letter, December 19, 1902, "I would like to have 1500 you make me up a statement showing the number of employees of the W. P. O. Co., and the annual amount of wages paid same for one year," etc.

Letter, November 25, 1902, "I beg herewith to hand you blank report on which I shall be glad to have you specify prices upon company supplies for the month of October not already rendered."

Letter of January 28, 1902, subject matter, "report of prices upon company supplies."

Letter of January 2, 1905, "On all orders received after December 29th, the price on linseed oil shall be six and three fourths cents per gallon," etc.

Letter of December 22, 1902, "I beg to return herewith stable inventories of your various divisions," etc.

Letter of June 28, 1902, reports 41-d and 41-e, Mexico refineries.

Letter of September 17, 1903, refinery statements.

Letter of November 28, 1902, "I am in receipt of your favor of 24th inst., and am to-day in receipt of express package containing reports," etc.

Letter of January 7, 1902, "I beg to advise that the cost of milk cans used for milk can delivery should be charged to B. & M. expense."

Letter of February 18, 1902, "Will you please have made up and send me a statement giving the names of the different banks where you have an account," etc.

Letter of February 6, 1902, "Will you please let me know if you have recently re d a letter from C. E. Bedford," etc.

Letter of March 18, 1902, "For some unknown reason, on December 28, 1895, instructions were given to charge iron barrel depreciation of four cents per barrel to P. & L. accounts," etc.

1501 Letter of January 15, 1902, "Replying to your favor of 11th, on the above subject, cost of milk cans, I think your manner or having these milk cans numbered," etc.

Letter of December 5, 1902, the subject matter is, "Excess tank wagon equipment at City of Mexico."

Letter of May 11, 1903, "In your telegram of May 8th, giving total sales of refined oil and naphtha for the month of April, I notice that you have included in the naphtha sales 20 barrels of engine naphtha," etc.

Letter of May 6, 1903, "Replying to your favor of 4th inst., beg to hand you herewith copies of cyclopædia reports relative to E. M. Wilhoyt," etc.

Letter of May 7, 1903, "I am in receipt of your favor of 4th inst., enclosing cyclopædia reports of various points."

Letter of March 13, 1903, subject matter of the letter is marine insurance.

Letter without date, "Referring to the wording of your letter of March 19th, I beg to say that I would suggest," etc.

Letter of September 6, 1902, "I have not received from you for some time current reports of fuel oil shipped from Beaumont," etc.

Letter of July 23, 1902, "Referring to report from 30-d, deliveries of refined oil and naphtha," etc.

Letter of September 18, 1902, "I should be glad to have as soon as possible W. P. O. Co.'s statement showing net results of marine oil business." (All of letter.)

Letter of February 24, 1903, "I am in receipt of report from form 23-d, receipts and purchase for month of January," etc.

Letter of July 18, 1902, statement of bad debts for the first six months of 1902.

Letter of August 7, 1902, bad debts in East Texas and Louisiana and North Texas Division.

1502 Letter of January 27, 1902, bad debts for the year 1901.

Letter of September 16, 1902, "I have not received from you for some time reports showing tank car shipments," etc.

Letter of November 12, 1902, "I have not received any report from you since September 1, of shipments of Beaumont oil," etc.

Letter of August 22, 1902, "I am in receipt of your favor of the 20th inst., in regard to bad debts charged off during the month of June," etc.

Q. Mr. Ackert, what arrangements did you have for ascertaining who shipped oil to and from—who shipped oil outside of your own company, from Beaumont and from Port Arthur and Sabine Pass?

A. Same kind——

Judge PENN: We object to that as irrelevant and immaterial.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

Judge PENN: Defendant excepts.

A. Same kind of information we have now, from agents and salesmen, keep posted on what is going on.

Q. Well, you have some special payments that you make for the purpose of getting that information, have you not?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have discontinued that business?

A. I don't know of any.

Q. Didn't you have through Mr. Tolliver, at Houston, several employees for the purpose of obtaining information of that kind?

A. Not that I know of, sir.
Q. You know the signature of Mr. Tolliver?
A. Yes, sir, I think so.
Q. Was this letter received during your incumbency as general manager? (Hands witness letter.)
A. No, sir, it was not. I have never seen the letter before.
1503 Q. And the matter referred to there, you don't know about?
A. No, sir.
Q. Don't you know about the special arrangement for securing information at those points. (Hands witness letter) I will ask you to state whether or not that is Mr. Tolliver's signature?
A. It looks like it.
Q. Was that received while you were general manager?
A. No, sir.
Q. There was a Southwestern Oil Company doing business in St. Louis, Mr. Ackert, was there not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Purchased by the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. It was.
Q. It was in competitive business there?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. When was it purchased?
A. I think it was two years ago, or about two years ago.
Q. Have you, since you became manager, purchased any other competing plant?
A. I don't remember of any.
Q. Well, I will ask you to think about it and tell us.
A. I don't remember of any.
Q. The Southwestern was run there in its own name after you acquired it?
A. I think it was closed out immediately.
Q. Well, did your company organize the International Oil Works?
A. That was before my time.
Q. It is still operating, isn't it?
A. The International?
Q. Yes.
A. Yes, sir.
1504 Q. Belongs to the Waters Pierce Oil Company, doesn't it?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Operating as in competition with the Waters Pierce Oil Company, is it not?
A. No, sir, I can't say that. I think it is known by the people of St. Louis who owns it.

Mr. ODELL: We object to testimony with reference to the International Oil Company, for the reason that it is irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in this case; it is not operating in the State of Texas.
The COURT: The objection is overruled.
Mr. ODELL: The defendant excepts.

Q. Well, that has been operated ever since you have been with the company, has it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Operated as an independent plant?

A. Ever since I have been with the company in St. Louis.

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is still being operated as an independent concern?

A. It is operated as the International Oil Works; it is known, however, by the people of St. Louis that it is owned by the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Q. Well, why is it operated that way, then?

A. Simply operated, that is all.

Q. Now, why do you maintain two plants, when one would do the business, if everybody knew about it, the ownership of the International Oil Works?

A. I can't say; I couldn't answer that question.

Q. When did it become known that it belonged to the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

1505 A. I can't say just when; it has been known generally for several years.

Q. Generally known?

A. Yes, sir, that is my understanding.

Q. Published in the papers?

A. It has been in the papers quite frequently.

Q. A statement by the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. No, sir.

Q. Considered as an independent concern, is it a paying proposition?

A. I think so.

Q. You don't know about that?

A. I couldn't say for sure.

Q. You maintain separate offices and separate tanks?

A. All the reports come to our office every day; all the cash reports come to our office.

Q. Well, did you maintain a separate organization for the International Oil Works?

A. Only so far as the tank wagons and the manager of it.

Q. You have some tank wagons with the name "International Oil Works" on them; is there any difference, any better or any worse than the Waters Pierce tank wagons?

A. About the same.

Q. Well, now, will you tell me why this is maintained?

A. I couldn't explain that; that is a part that I don't have anything to do with.

Q. Now, while you were maintaining concerns in Texas, that were separate—belonged to the Waters Pierce Oil Company, but operated separately——

A. It was known to be the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Q. You supplied them with oil from the International Oil Works, did you not?

1506 A. That was before my time, I couldn't say.

Q. Well, you kept the Eagle Refining Company going up to about what time?

A. 1903, I think, some time,—November, 1903, I think, about that time.

Q. Well, did you supply it with oil from the International Oil Works?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Where did you supply that from?

A. I couldn't say; I didn't handle the orders.

Q. Now, you were right familiar with the situation in regard to the Eagle Refining Company, were you not?

A. I knew about it.

Q. And you discontinued it, did you not?

A. I arranged for its discontinuance.

Q. Why?

A. Well, I thought that our agency at Dallas could take care of it; Mr. Cahoon was in charge of the division; I thought he could take care of the business.

Q. When did he get in condition to take care of the business?

A. About a year before.

Q. Couldn't take care of it prior to that time?

A. He might have, yes.

Q. Why wasn't it discontinued?

A. Just because it wasn't. It got to a point where we made up our mind to do away with it.

Q. Now, you looked after these points, all the points in your division, and were very careful to figure out to a cent the cost of even a barrel and if it gets over on the Pacific coast or anywhere

1507 else, you keep correspondence in reference to it and you knew, did you not, the very moment that the Eagle Refining Company at Dallas, got to a point where it didn't pay, di- you not?

A. I think it was paying when it was closed out, as I remember.

Q. It was paying then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But the business could have been handled by the other concern?

A. It could have been.

Q. And you don't know of any reason why it was not closed out as soon as it was bought, do you?

A. Only as far as Mr. Clem's services were not altogether satisfactory and we decided to do away with it.

Q. Then it was on account of Mr. Clem that you discontinued this Eagle Refining business?

A. I think that was a part of it.

Q. That was it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you accomplish or hope to accomplish by the maintenance of the Eagle Refining Company's business there, separate and distinct from the regular station and business of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. I understand arrangements were made long before I had anything to do with it, and I couldn't say.

Q. I know, but why did you keep it up?

A. I can't tell you that.

Q. You can't give any reason for keeping it up?

A. It was shortly after I was put in there in that capacity that I had it discontinued.

Q. I will ask you if that wasn't continued as long as it was in effect for the purpose of reaching what is known as the "dissatisfied trade"?

A. No, sir, I don't think so, because it was known in Dal-1508 las that it was owned by the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Q. You are speaking now with the knowledge of the facts?

A. I understand that it was known generally.

Q. What do you predicate that on?

A. It was advertised in the papers in '95, '94.

Q. What was advertised?

A. It was known in the papers, it was given out at the time of the trial, in '95, I think in Waco; it was known.

Q. Now, I will ask you if that concern was furnished oil in the name of or through the International Oil Works?

A. I couldn't tell you; I didn't handle any of the orders.

Q. Now, with reference to the Roy Campbell business, was it through the International Oil Works?

A. I couldn't say.

Q. Was it impossible to get another manager besides Mr. Clem up there?

A. I don't know that it was.

Q. You were not so dissatisfied with the services of Mr. Clem that you didn't still give him a place with the company?

A. He was given a place.

Q. Have you not now at this time in the State of Texas any concern that you run in the same way you ran the Eagle Refining Company?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any kind of business in the State of Texas that belongs to the Waters Pierce Oil Company that isn't operated under the name of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. No, sir, not that I know of.

Q. No oil business at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, I will ask you if you are in a position to know
1509 with reference to those things?

A. I think I would know if there was any such arrangement.

Q. All the business is communicated to you, of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Yes, sir. All of it?

Q. Yes.

A. Not all of it, no, sir.

Q. Well, by reason of your being an officer there and being on the executive committee and coming in contact with those parties every day, you really know all of the transactions of the company, don't you?

A. No, sir, I don't know all of them.

Q. Now, they don't undertake to keep anything concealed from you, do they?

A. I have not heard of it, but I am away quite a little.

Q. The general course and policy of the business you, of course, must know certainly?

A. I know, generally, yes, sir.

Q. Now, you know how they get oil?

A. In what way?

Q. What arrangement they have got for getting oil?

A. For buying it?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. The most of our supplies are bought from one place.

Q. Who?

A. The S. O. People.

Q. What does that mean?

A. The Standard Oil Company, most of it.

Q. You make a contract every year for your oil?

A. No, sir.

Q. When was your contract made?

1510 A. I don't know of any contract; never heard of any.

Q. Never heard of a contract for oil?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, how did you get it then?

A. It is bought, or purchased.

Q. Negotiate for every specific lot of oil?

A. No, sir.

Q. Don t negotiate for it?

A. We do not; there is a price for the various grades of oils, and we buy what we need.

Q. They fix the price then, absolutely?

A. Just the same as the Gulf Refining Company, or the Texas——

Q. I am not asking you that; I asked you if they fixed the price?

A. They have a price.

Q. Not a matter of negotiation between you at all?

A. No, sir. They have a price just the same as anybody else.

Q. And the- notify you as to what that price is?

A. If they change it, advance it or reduce it, we are advised.

Q. You are advised?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't undertake to get any refined oil from anybody else at all?

A. Yes, sir, we bought from the Gulf Refining Company and the Texas Company.

Q. You have bought from them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the Standard Oil Company buy from them?

A. No, sir, the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Q. Now, do you get a notice from them as to their price?

A. We assume they have a price before we buy.

1511 Q. And you assume the Standard Oil Company has a price before you buy?

A. We have a price from them and we assume that that price is good until we are advised of another price.

Q. Now, when you get another price from them, we will say a raise, you immediately, do you not, raise your own prices as far as possible?

A. Not always.

Q. Well, isn't that the ordinary course of business?

A. It is generally.

Q. Now, when they notify you the price has been raised, that is a matter that goes to the executive committee?

A. It is always considered.

Q. Always considered by them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you adjust your prices to the prices fixed by the Standard Oil Company, is that true?

A. No, sir.

Q. How do you fix it?

A. The local conditions in the territory may have something to do, always has something to do.

Q. That is to say, competition?

A. Yes, sir, and conditions.

Q. Competition, I say, has something to do with it always?

A. Naturally.

Q. And the price which the Standard Oil Company changes you is the other—considerable element?

A. It is the price we pay for our goods, is the basis on which the selling price is made.

Q. The price the Standard Oil Company charges you is the basis on which you make your price?

1512 A. From them or any one else.

Q. Well, you get the most of your oil from them, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you bought oil from the Gulf Refining Company. Have you bought any refined oil from them?

A. I think so; I have forgotten now; I couldn't say, really.

Q. Well, when did you buy it?

A. I couldn't tell you.

Q. Well, can you tell me that you did buy it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have you in mind to base that on? When was it and the amount of it?

A. I couldn't tell you just when or how much.

Q. Or the price?

A. I got twenty tank cars of gasoline only a short time ago.

Q. I am not asking you about the gasoline.

A. I couldn't say just exactly when.

Q. You have bought refined oil from them?
A. As I remember, we have.
Q. What did you do with it?
A. Sold the same as any other oil?
Q. Well, where?
A. In Texas, I assume.
Q. Well, now is this a matter of assumption with you, or do you know you bought oil from the Gulf——
A. As I remember, we have bought oil from the Gulf Refining Company, but I know we bought a great deal of gasoline.
Q. But I am talking about refined oil.
A. I couldn't say definitely, but I am of the impression that we have bought oil.
1513 Q. Well, now, so far as the Security is concerned, you haven't bought any oil from them, have you?
A. Yes, sir, buying it every day.
Q. You bought that from the Standard Oil Company,—do you not, what you get from the Security Company?
A. All of our quotations are made to them direct.
Q. From whom?
A. From the Security Company, from them direct; we know nothing except the Security Company.
Q. But you pay the Standard Oil Company, though?
A. I couldn't say; I don't have anything to do with the paying of it. I assume the Security is paid direct; I couldn't say.
Q. Now, I will ask you if this is the course of business, that you get a card or letter from the Standard Oil Company, in which they quote a certain price to you at Corsicana and at Neodesha, and that your orders are predicated upon that, your requisitions?
A. Our orders are placed at the most economical point of supply, considering the quality of the goods.
Q. But you haven't answered my question; you get that from the Standard Oil Company?
A. We have our quotations from the Standard Oil Company.
Q. With reference to the Corsicana and the Whiting, Indiana, refineries, and the Neodesha?
A. We get them direct from the Corsicana refinery, from the Neodesha refinery, as I understand, from the Sugar Creek refinery, Whiting, etc.
Q. Now, isn't the ordinary course of business for you to receive a letter like this from the Standard Oil Company: (Reading) "Effective August 15th, our prices on refined oil f. o. b. Whiting and Corsicana will be as follows: Common oil, Corsicana 4¼¢; Whiting 4-3/8¢; Water White 110 to 120, 4⅞¢; Eupion 6⅛¢; Water 1514 White 4⅞¢; Eupion 120 to 150, 6¼¢",—isn't that the ordinary course of business with reference to the purchase of oil?
A. It may have been.
Q. Well, if you know, I want you to say so.
A. I can't say, I haven't seen the letter.
Q. I am asking you about the ordinary course of business?
A. Probably they did come in that way.

Q. And upon those prices thus paid the Standard Oil Company you make your requisitions direct upon the refinery?

A. At that time I can't say how they were placed; all I know is at the present time.

Q. Well, this is August 15, 1906, have you changed since the suits were instituted against the company?

A. I couldn't say we had; all I know is the way the orders are placed now.

Q. Your recollection don't go back as far as August 15, 1906?

A. No it doesn't, I couldn't say.

Q. Now, I will ask you, Mr. Ackert, what the course of business is when an order is received by the company for oil from a person outside of the Waters Pierce Company territory and in the Standard Oil territory?

A. There isn't anything done with it?

Q. Sir?

A. There isn't anything done with it.

Q. Don't do anything at all with it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Don't reply to the letter?

A. Sometimes we do.

Q. You don't do anything with that at all?

A. I didn't understand your other question; I beg your pardon——

Q. Now, take the dividing line between the Standard Oil
1515 Company and the Waters Pierce Oil Company, when you get an order from a merchant or any person over on the Standard Oil Company's territory, what do you do with it, with that order?

A. You mean what——

Q. What does the Waters Pierce Oil Company do with it?

A. I don't understand the first question; I would like to have the first question changed; we always quote them.

Q. You always quote them?

A. Quote them the price, our regular selling price; if it is St. Louis, it is quoted f. o. b. there.

Q. If it is inside your territory, you don't quote f. o. b. St. Louis, do you?

A. Yes, sir, the same way.

Q. Now, how long have you been pursuing that policy with regard to such orders?

A. It has been done right along, as far as I know.

Q. About how long?

A. I couldn't say how long.

Q. Well, something less than a year?

A. I couldn't say, I am sure.

Q. Well, what was the course of Business before the suits were instituted?

A. I have forgotten now just exactly how they were handled; I assume in the same way.

Q. You assume in the same way?

A. Yes, sir, my understanding; I am not sure about it.

Q. Now, I will refer you, Mr. Ackert, to your statement taken in the case of the State of Missouri vs. Standard Oil Company, et al., Waters Pierce Oil Company,—didn't you state in that, that prior to that time that these orders were turned over to the Standard Oil Company?

1516 A. Not that I remember.

Q. You don't remember having so stated?

A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. And you stated that——

Judge PENN: We make two objections to this: first, that this is the State's own witness,—it is incompetent for him to attempt to impeach him in this way; and, second, that what this witness may have testified to in another case in the State of Missouri is hearsay and not admissable as against this defendant. And then we make the third objection, if these should not be sustained by the Court, that the witness is entitled to have the questions which he is supposed to have been asked, stated to him and the answers which he is supposed to have given, stated to him, without asking him to state whether or not he made the statements such as counsel seems to conceive was the substance of his prior statement.

The COURT: The objection is overruled. If counsel for the State desire to introduce what they say was another statement of this witness, they will have to ask him if he made that identical statement before they can introduce it, but for the purpose of this examination they need not show it to him.

Judge PENN: The defendant excepts.

Q. Now, I will ask you, Mr. Ackert, if the course of business prior to that time was not for you to send the order to the Standard Oil Company, and didn't you get like courtesies from the Standard Oil Company, with regard to orders received by them?

A. I don't remember of any such thing.

Q. You don't remember anything of that kind?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any change at all about a year ago with reference to the handling of that matter?

A. Not that I remember.

1517 Q. Mr. Ackert, I notice among the letters introduced, a reference to "encyclopedia reports" relative to E. M. Wilhoyt, Joplin and Springfield, Missouri; what do you mean by "encyclopaedia reports"?

A. I am sure I don't know; I never heard of that before.

Q. Who is E. M. Wilhoyt?

A. Man in the oil business at Springfield, Missouri.

Q. One of your competitors?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Dubbs & Ruddles?

A. They were competitors at Belleville, Illinois.

Q. Are they competitors now?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Actual competitors, now belonging to the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Actual competitors.

Q. You had some little controversy, did you not, with reference to whether or not the Belleville, Illinois, territory belonged to you or the Standard Oil Company?

A. I don't know of any controversy; we have always continued our agency there; supplied the trade.

Q. They insisted that that belonged to them, did they not?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. Didn't you have some kind of a controversy with Mr. Von —— with regard to that?

A. No, sir, not that I remember of.

Q. He insisted that was in his territory.

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, in East St. Louis?

A. No, sir, the Waters Pierce Oil Company have always operated in East St. Louis.

1518 Q. Well, some point there across the river, didn't you have a controversy with him or somebody with reference to whether that was Standard Oil or your territory?

A. Not that I remember of now.

Q. With reference to which you testified in that case?

A. There was some territory above there that was in controversy; didn't amount to anything, but it wasn't Belleville or East St. Louis.

Q. Where was that?

A. I can't say.

Q. Then there was a controversy as to which one owned that territory?

A. We were supplying it; we were sending our wagons and they claimed that it was——

Q. And they claimed it was their territory?

A. And we have simply continued to do it.

Q. You haven't recognized their claim to that?

A. No, sir.

Q. You know anything about the capacity of the refineries in Texas?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Are you familiar with the signature of Mr. Pierce?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Hands witness paper.) I will ask you to state whether or not that is Mr. Pierce's signature?

A. Yes, sir, it looks like it.

Mr. BATTS: Identified as voucher dated June 30, 1900.

Q. I will ask you about voucher dated June 15, 1900, you know whose signature this is?

A. Mr. A. M. Finlay's; looks like it.

Q. You recognize that signature? (Indicating on paper.)

A. Yes, sir.

1519 Q. Whose is that?

A. J. D. Johnson's; looks like it.

Q. Do you know whose signature this is?

A. Mr. Naudain's.

Q. Do you know anything about the books and vouchers, etc., of the Waters Pierce Oil Company being audited by the Standard Oil auditors?

A. No, sir.

Q. Don't know anything about that?

A. I simply know there were auditors there; I have understood that they were in the employ of the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Q. That there were auditors there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. H. H. Stein?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever known him?

A. Don't remember ever having met him.

Q. You know whose hand-writing this is? (Indicating on voucher.)

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Have you any knowledge at all of the method of keeping books by the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. No, sir, I haven't it is out of my department.

Q. Do you know whose handwriting this is? (Hands witness paper.)

A. No, sir, I do not.

Mr. BATTS (handing paper to counsel for defendant): We offer it in evidence.

Judge PENN: You offer both of these in evidence?

Mr. BATTS: Yes, sir.

Q. Who pays the salaries of the auditors?

A. The accounting department.

Q. The auditors sent to St. Louis?

A. I suppose it is the same as all of the others.

1520 Q. Paid in St. Louis?

A. The treasurer, Mr. C. M. Adams, pays all the salaries.

Q. The auditors that came from New York to audit the books of the Waters Pierce Oil Company are paid by the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Mr. Adams pays all of the salaries; further than that I know nothing.

Q. Well, you don't know by whom these auditors are paid?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Judge PENN: With reference to the voucher dated June 30, 1900, which is offered in evidence by the State, we object to it as irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in this case; only tendency it could possibly have would be to prejudice the jury against the defendant.

Mr. BATTS: I may be able to secure an agreement with counsel to obviate the necessity of putting this in, if he thinks it will prejudice the Jury; I have no desire to do that.

Mr. BATTS (after conference with defendant's attorneys): We have an agreement to the effect that there were auditors of the Standard Oil Company sent to St. Louis to audit the books of the Waters Pierce Oil Company; the first of the audits made by them is sometime in the year 1901; I take it that counsel will not hesitate to make an agreement to the effect that audits were made by the Standard Oil Company as early as June 15, 1900. And further, that payments authorized by Mr. Pierce as early as that, were audited by the Standard Oil Company. If these agreements are made, the vouchers will be withdrawn.

Judge PENN: If the Court please, in addition to the objection which was made to this alleged voucher, dated June 30, 1900, we understand counsel for the State to say that their sole purpose in——

Mr. BATTS: I have not made any statement of the sole pur-
1521 pose; I made a statement to you as to what I would keep the vouchers out, if you would agree to; if the vouchers are to go in for any purpose, they are to go in for every purpose for which they are admissible.

Judge PENN: We desire to make the objection which has been made,—irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in this case, and that the audit stamp on the back hasn't been identified or proven up.

Mr. BATTS (after conference with counsel): The vouchers are withdrawn, and the following agreement is made: It is agreed that the expenditures made as early as June 15, 1900, and authorized by H. C. Pierce were thereafter audited by the auditors of the Standard Oil Company.

The COURT: Read that again. (Counsel having written it out in pencil on a scratch tablet.)

Mr. BATTS: It is agreed that expenditures made as early as June 15, 1900, and authorized by H. C. Pierce, were thereafter audited by auditors of the Standard Oil Company.

Mr. BATTS: Of course, this is expenditures of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

Judge PENN: Certainly.

Mr. BATTS: Can I put that in,—"of the Waters Pierce Oil Company"?

Judge PENN: Yes, sir. (Counsel writes the words in the agreement.-

Q. Just one question, Mr. Ackert: I call your attention to a document dated February 8, 1901, being a letter from Wade Hampton; I wish you would explain, if you can, what this stamp which is included in it, means.

A. Transmitted to Mr. A. M. Finlay, vice president, Mr.
1522 H. C. Pierce, president, I suppose a copy of it is what it means, to be transmitted.

Q. You were at the home office in February, 1900, were you not?

A. I think so, yes, sir; I couldn't say definitely, though.

Q. You recall the occasion of Mr. Pierce sending out a letter to the subordinates to the effect that his health had become impaired so he would have to resign from the business management of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. I think there was such a letter.

Q. That was about February, 1907?

A. I couldn't say just the date.

Q. Well, was it about that time? A few months before the re-incorporation?

A. I think there was such a letter as that, but I have not thought about it since then, and I couldn't say as to the date.

Q. Mr. Pierce went in as president upon the re-incorporation of the concern, didn't he?

A. I think so, yes sir.

Q. At the time of the re-incorporation, Mr. Andrew Finlay was president?

A. As I remember, he was.

Q. Just had been in only a few months?

A. I think so.

Q. After the re-incorporation, how many members of the Board of Directors were there as representatives of the Standard Oil Company?

A. After the re-incorporation?

Q. After the re-incorporation.

A. I don't know that there were any.

Q. Well, you didn't know then the representations that the members of the Board had with regard to the different interests involved?

A. No, sir, I did not.

1523 Cross-examination:

Judge PENN: If the Court please, Mr. Johnson is more familiar with the facts in reference to the testimony of this witness, and we ask permission that he be allowed to cross-examine him.

THE COURT: All, right, sir.

(Examination by Mr. Johnson:)

Q. When did you say you first became connected with the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. In March, 1883.

Q. In what capacity?

A. As agent at Fort Smith, Arkansas.

Q. How long did you remain in that position?

A. I think it was five years, about, as I remember.

Q. To what position were you transferred at the end of the five years?

A. To the position of traveling salesman in Arkansas.

Q. Connected with the Arkansas division?

A. Yes, sir, under the office at Little Rock, where I staid for six months.

Q. Then to what position were you transferred?

A. To a position in St. Louis.

Q. With the home office?

A. With the home office, for six months.

Q. What particular position did you occupy then, and what were your duties?

A. I was on the street as salesman.

Q. City salesman?

A. One of them.

Q. How long?

A. For six months, about.
1524 Q. Then what position did you assume?
A. I was transferred to the East Texas & Louisiana division at Marshall, as assistant manager, Marshall, Texas.
Q. Who were you under there?
A. Under F. M. Austin.
Q. How long did you remain there in that position?
A. A year and a half.
Q. Then to what position were you transferred?
A. As manager of the Arkansas division, where I remained for two years and a half.
Q. Headquarters at Little Rock?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then where were you transferred?
A. To St. Louis, as assistant in the lubricating department.
Q. When was that, Mr. Ackert?
A. In '93, June '93, I think.
Q. Who was the head of the lubricating department?
A. June '94, Mr. Stephen Johnson.
Q. How long did you occupy that position?
A. For five years.
Q. Then what duties did you assume?
A. I was with Mr. Gruet, in the accounting department, for a few months, just doing one thing and another; then I was transferred to Mr. A. M. Finlay's office.
Q. Mr. Andrew Finlay?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What was his position at that time?
A. He was vice president.
Q. And general manager, wasn't he?
A. Yes, sir; vice president and general manager.
Q. You were made the assistant then to the general man-
1525 ager?
A. I was general manager for a short time and then I was——
Q. I say you were made assistant to Mr. Finlay, the general manager?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long did you perform the duties of that position?
A. Until June or the 1st of July, 1903.
Q. I don't recollect, did you state when you assumed the duties of assistant to Mr. Finlay?
A. As I remember, it was 1900; I have just forgotten the date.
Q. Was it before or after the dissolution of the old company and the organization of the new company?
A. Just before, as I remember.
Q. And you performed those duties as assistant to the general manager; Mr. Finlay was vice president of the new company?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And continued as general manager of the new company from the time of its organization?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Until 1903, when you were made general manager?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then you assumed all the duties of general manager?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. These different positions that you have occupied with the company, has given you a pretty thorough knowledge of its general plant and operation?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And mode of transaction of business?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And employees?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Nature of the equipment?
A. Yes, sir.
1526 Q. Hasn't it?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. First, are you any relation to Mr. H. C. Pierce?
A. I am.
Q. What?
A. Cousin.
Q. First cousin?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have a brother, Cyrus L. Ackert?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What position does he occupy?
A. Manager of the Missouri division.
Q. How long has he been connected with the company?
A. Sixteen years, I think.
Q. Mr. Stephen Johnson, you say, was at the head of the lubricating department for years?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What relation is he to Mr. Pierce?
A. He is a brother-in-law.
Q. That is, his wife is Mr. H. C. Pierce's sister?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Mr. Andrew M. Finlay, has been connected with the company longer than you have?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In different responsible positions; what position—what relation is he to Mr. Pierce?
A. He is also a brother-in-law.
Q. He and Mrs. Pierce were brother and sister?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And all the parties have been connected with the company since you first became connected yourself?
1527 A. Yes, sir; twenty-three years ago last March.
Q. Now, what are your particular duties; state them briefly,—as general manager of the company, Mr. Ackert?
A. Manager of the business in the divisions and St. Louis, so far as the agencies and marketing, etc.

Q. That is, you have general charge of what is called the marketing department?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Marketing of all oils?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And products of the company?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Can you tell us, Mr. Ackert, how many stations the Waters Pierce Oil Company has in Texas, all told?
A. I think it is about four hundred and fifty; that is pretty close, I haven't the figures with me.
Q. You have one or more stations in every county in the State, haven't you?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. When I say you, I mean the company.
A. Waters Pierce Oil Company.
Q. You recall from memory the number of so-called tank stations, as distinguished from the other stations?
A. From memory I should say that there were about two hundred and fifty.
Q. By tank stations you mean stations at which there are storage tanks for the purpose of storing and keeping oil in bulk for distribution to the trade?
A. It is where we have one or more tanks.
Q. At each station you employ an agent?
A. Yes, sir.
1528 Q. Who is in charge of the agency or the business at that station?
A. Yes, sir, and what other employees are necessary to properly transact the business.
Q. But you have an agent who is in charge of the business at each particular station?
A. At each station we have an agent.
Q. And at many of the stations the agents have assistants or subordinates to assist in carrying on the business of the company?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, you have a great many agents who are on a salary?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You have a great many agents who are paid a commission on the quantity of oil which they sell?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How many paid agents are there?
A. Let's see. There are about one hundred and fifty of them.
Q. Isn't there an agent to each station?
A. Not of the paid agents; there are commissioned and salaried agents; the commissioned agents get so much per barrel.
Q. Then there are commission agents?
A. Yes, sir; commissioned agents and salaried agents.
Q. How many employees has the company in Texas?
A. About 450.
Q. Does that include the employees at the division headquarters?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. There are more there?
A. Yes, sir, in the way of clerks, etc., there are about at each divisional headquarters fifteen or eighteen altogether.
Q. How many tank wagons does the company operate in the State?
A. Tank wagons and can wagons, about one hundred and fifty.
1529 Q. You know how many tank wagons as distinguished from the can wagons?
A. I should say about two-thirds of them, or more.
Q. Aren't there more than one hundred and fifty, Mr. Ackert?
A. I think that is about what it is, about one hundred and fifty.
Q. How many divisions are there in the State, so-called divisions in the State.
A. Central Texas, headquarters at Dallas, Mr. Cahoon, and South Texas Division.
Q. Their headquarters are at Houston, and Mr. Fries is the manager?
A. Yes, sir; and the East Texas and Louisiana Division,—headquarters at Shreveport.
Q. Who is the manager there?
A. Mr. D. A. Vann.
Q. Who preceded him?
A. Mr. J. H. Littlefield.
Q. When was Mr. Littlefield transferred or relieved from duty as manager at Shreveport?
A. About two weeks ago.
Q. You recall the date?
A. A week ago on Saturday; I think it was on Saturday.
Q. Mr. Vann was appointed to succeed him?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then, there is the Oklahoma Division?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Which Division has a number of agencies in the Panhandle of Texas, that is, it takes in quite a large area of the Panhandle?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the Louisiana and East Texas Division takes in——
A. The eastern part of Texas.
1530 Q. There are two Divisions wholly within the State?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. These distributions are for the convenient distribution or marketing of oil or oil product, is it not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How do the division managers have control over the agents, all the agents in their respective divisions?
A. They have control of all of them in their respective divisions, and the marketing of oil and the handling of the Waters Pierce Oil Company's business in each of their divisions.
Q. And they communicate with the home office?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the home office communicates directly with them?

A. Yes sir.

Q. There is no immediate communication or connection between the home office and the agents in the different divisions?

A. How?

Q. I say there is no immediate connection or communication between the home office and the agents in the different divisions?

A. No, sir, it is direct with the manager at the division headquarters.

Q. And these division managers have charge of the marketing of the oil in their divisions? And all the facilities?

A. All of the facilities and the handling of the entire business of the company in their divisions.

Q. Mr. Ackert, what percentage of oil sold by the company within the State is distributed to the trade in bulk, that is, by tank wagons or by cans?

A. Sixty to sixty-five per cent. of the total sales of refined oil in Texas is sold from tank wagons or cans.

1531 Q. And the distributions are made from central storage points?

A. From our tank stations, which ever is the most convenient.

Q. And where you cannot reach the trade by tank wagons or by cans you make your shipments how?

A. In iron barrels; we have a supply of iron barrels in addition to our tank wagons and cans, to take care of the business in Texas.

Q. How many iron barrels does the Company own and operate in Texas?

A. About fifteen thousand, I should say.

Q. They are shipped out to fill orders beyond the reach of tank bulk deliveries, and the barrels are ultimately returned to the Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What facilities have the retail dealers which you—which the company furnishes, to be filled with bulk oil from tank wagons and cans?

A. They have 50, 75, 100, and 150 and 200 gallon-tanks,—pump tanks.

Q. Those are called store tanks?

A. Or store tanks. They can buy them from the Waters Pierce Oil Company; and we have them for sale; our tank-wagons make the delivery into these tanks.

Q. They are provided with a pump, by means of which the oil is—the oil or gasoline, as the case may be,—can be readily pumped out into a smaller vessel,—the can of a customer, for instance?

A. Every convenience for our customers; yes, sir.

Q. Have you, as general manager, and the agents under you, encouraged the use of these store tanks,—the adoption of them by your customers?

A. To the fullest extent.

Q. Now, all the oil which was handled by the Company in bulk is transported from the refinery in tank cars, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

1532 Q. Whether it be Chaison, or Corsicana, or Whiting, or Neodesha, or Sugar Creek?

A. It is all handled in tank cars.

Q. How many tank cars does the Waters Pierce Oil Company own and operate for the carrying of oil within the territory in which it operates, including Texas?

A. And Mexico?

Q. No; take the United States.

A. I haven't the figures before me here, but it is somewheres between eighty and a hundred; possibly a hundred; may be a little more; it is in the neighborhood of a hundred tank cars.

Q. When its equipment of tank cars are not sufficient for its business, it rents or hires tank cars from the Union Tank Line, does it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the deliverey of the bulk oil is made in those cars?

A. Yes, sir; we have also——

Q. Now, the process of supplying the trade begins at the refinery, by filling into a tank car, or tanks cars, the oil or gasoline, shipping it to the tank station, say, in Texas; transferring the contents of the tank car into a storage tank; then distributing from that storage tanks, according to the requirements, into tank wagons, into cans or into iron barrels, as the case may be.

A. It is a bulk deliverey all the way from the refinery into the merchants' tanks.

Q. Your tank wagons at the different tank stations make regular rounds through or over a certain route every day or so; many times every week.

A. Yes, sir; a sufficient amount to take care of the trade; to keep them all supplied.

1533 Q. And where you haven't sufficient tank wagons for the purpose of supplying your customers, you then transfer the oil from the storage tanks into cans, ten-gallon cans, load the cans into wagons, and distribute those cans around to the customers?

A. In the same way, giving the customer the benefit of the bulk delivery.

Q. Then, in localities beyond the reach of the tank wagons and cans, you fill the iron barrels from the storage tank, and ship them by rail to the point at which the purchaser resides?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Ackert, how long has the Waters Pierce Oil Company, so far as you know, been engaged in building up this system of facilities which you have described?

A. Ever since they were first organized; and continually improved from time to time.

Q. What has been the method since you were connected with the General Manager's office, with respect to increasing those facilities, increasing bulk deliveries, increasing and establishing agencies, increasing facilities for reaching outlying and new localities?

A. It is one of our principal duties required of all of our people in the field, to watch that; just as quick as a town has grown to a sufficient extent to warrant a tank station, or additional tanks are necessary, the manager comes to the home office with his recommendations. It is very frequently, nearly always the case, that the people—the residents of the towns—make application to put in a tank station. It is safe to say that in the last ten years, that ninety per cent. of all the tankage we have put in, we have had applications from the merchants at those towns to locate our warehouse, our tanks, etc., in them.

Q. So as to give them the conveniences and facilities of handling oil?

A. For the benefit of that. In a few instances we had to 1534 take them out, because the business did not justify it; and in each case where we have, we have had a very strong complaint from the merchants of those towns because we had done it; and in many cases, we had to extend our tank wagon deliveries to those towns where the tanks had been taken out, to have the trade feel entirely satisfied.

Q. Can you give any idea of the percentage of increase in the new facilities established since the present company was incorporated?

A. I should say that they had increased practically fifty per cent., or nearly that.

Q. Since the new company was organized?

A. Yes, sir; in rebuilding tanks, in extending the tankage and in building new plants.

Q. Do you know how many plants in the State or stations in the State the company has, at which it owns the land in fee and which are substantially improved.

A. Nearly,—well, there is a number,—fifteen or twenty,—I should say; I haven't the number with me.

Q. You have a station of that kind in all of the principal towns?

A. In nearly all of the principal towns we own property.

Q. You have one at Galveston?

A. We have.

Q. How extensive is it?

A. Quite a large one.

Q. At Houston?

A. Yes, sir, it is a very large one; recently rebuilt.

Q. It burned out?

A. No, it didn't burn out; it was too small.

Q. I mean the old plant.

A. Only in part; the fire didn't amount to anything. It was too small. We bought some land and spent forty or fifty 1535 thousand dollars at Houston for a new and thoroughly up-to-date plant.

Q. Can you mention other towns at which the company owns those stations in fee?

A. At Dallas; at Galveston,—I think that was mentioned; there is a number of small——

Q. At Fort Worth?

A. No, not at Fort Worth; a part of it only; a part of it in fee, and a part leased.

Q. You say there are twenty odd plants?

A. Yes; large and small, but a number are small.

Q. And at other stations the Company has leased the lands and improved the lands?

A. Yes, sir, and improved them.

Q. And their are some stations that the commission agents themselves provide the premises?

A. At very few in that way. Nearly all of that is leased, and we have our tankage.

Q. Mr. Ackert, what have these facilities to do with your ability to supply the trade, the retail trade, with the products dealt in by the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. It has altogether to do with it; we carry it in bulk; we try always to have enough of every product on hand, either in tankage or barrels, to fill any order. If we haven't it there, it is drawn from any point near, or the nearest point.

Q. During your lond experience with the Company, I suppose you gained some knowledge. What knowledge did you gain with respect to the old system of making delivery of oils to retail dealers in wooden barrels?

A. It was very unsatisfactory; there was leakage; always claims; and the cost of handling the barrels was excessive; the gluing 1536 and coopering; and in the collecting of the barrels. There was liability to be—the oil was liable to get off-color, complaints on account of that would be made; and there is no comparison at all between the two, because the one is old and out-of-date, and the bulk package is what the customers want, and they insist upon it. In addition to our tankage, we have put in,—in many cases the customers in the smaller towns have come to us and asked us to put on our tank-wagons, and I know of many cases where we had to be gone two days with five hundred gallons of oil. It is very expensive in rainy weather like this. If we dropped off for a week, we got any number of complaints, so that the trade expects us to come at certain periods during the whole year, regardless of weather.

Q. State whether or not you have, as general manager, kept posted with the business done by your competitors throughout the State.

A. I have.

Q. How, as a general thing, did the prices at which the Company has sold to the trade from time to time in the State, compare with the prices of corresponding grades of oil at which the Company's competitors sold?

A. It is nearly in all cases higher than the competitor; all for the one fact of our bulk deliveries. We have the large number of tank-wagons and cans, and I believe there are only ten or fifteen tank wagons of the whole competitors in the State. They make very few, if any, of the interior deliveries, and the only manner that they have of getting the oil out is in barrels, wood barrels, some few iron barrels; and because of that we maintain and are able to maintain from a half up to three-quarters and a cent, and sometimes a cent and a half, above what the other people ask for it; and the trade seem willing and entirely glad to pay us that difference. The interior deliveries are expensive; they fully appreciate that, and 1537 that they get the full measure, as against the loss of the wood or iron barrels, as it goes out from our competitors. In addition, it is the hauling out from the railroad points which is avoided.

Q. Mr. Ackert, do you remember when the first so-called executive committee was organized at the home office in St. Louis?

A. I do.

Q. About what time was that?

A. It was, I think, in the summer of 1900, possibly June or July; I have just forgotten the date.

Q. Were you on that committee?

A. I was.

Q. The organization was informal, I believe.

A. It was, yes, sir.

Q. When was the formal organization effected by resolution of the board of directors?

A. Some time in 1902; I have just forgotten the date.

Q. Who composed that committee; do you recall?

A. Mr. A. M. Finlay, Mr. C. A. Pierce, Mr. C. M. Adams, Mr. J. P. Gruet, and myself and yourself, and Mr. H. C. Pierce was there; he always attended.

Q. Mr. Stephen Johnson?

A. And Mr. Stephen Johnson.

Q. In other words, made up of heads of departments?

A. Heads of departments.

Q. The president presided?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did that committee continue in operation?

A. Until September, 1904, I think; about that time.

Q. What matters, in a general way, were referred to that committee and considered by it?

A. All matters of a general character.

1538 Q. That is, outside of the regular——

A. Regular current business, yes, sir.

Q. They discussed and passed upon questions, and advised, and acted in advisory capacity to the president?

A. Yes, sir; and the handling of the company's business, except in detail.

Q. Now, during the time of the continuance of those committees,—but before coming to that question. The executive committee was dissolved in the fall of 1904, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. By resolution of the board,—the board under which it was organized? Afterwards, was there any organization effected,—after that?

A. Not for a time.

Q. Well, when was a subsequent organization effected?

A. In October or November, 1906.

Q. That was an advisory committee, too?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who composes that committee?

A. Mr. C. A. Pierce, the president, Mr. A. M. Finlay, Mr. Edward Stanley, Mr. C. L. Harris, and myself.

Q. The heads of departments?

A. The heads of departments.

Q. Now, at the time of the organization of the first executive committee, the information organization, down to the time of the dissolution of the formal and regular executive committee,—how were the selling prices of the commodities of the company fixed or determined on?

A. They were all passed on by the committee.

Q. Well, how was it done,—state briefly how.

A. The letters as regards the prices—all of the correspond-1539 ence from each of our divisions came to my office, and they were all submitted to the executive committee.

Q. Well, propositions came up to change the price of a commodity at a certain point?

A. Mr. Cahoon, as an illustration, would have one or more points where he considered that a change was advisable, and he would submit it to me, with recommendations; I would take it to the committee, and we would consider it. We would have our costs and everything that gave full information, and there it was decided whether it would go into effect. If we put in an advance or a decline, that was considered in that way.

Q. What had the Standard Oil Company, or what did anybody else have to do with the fixing of prices during that time, if anything?

A. Absolutely none whatever.

Q. How were the fixing or changes in prices arranged or made after the dissolution of the executive committee in the fall of 1904 and until the advisory committee was created or begun to act?

A. By the officers of the Company.

Q. What officers?

A. Mr. A. M. Finlay, Mr. W. P. Tinsley and myself.

Q. Anybody else have anything to do with it?

A. Mr. C. A. Pierce.

Q. How were the prices determined during that period; upon what basis did you fix the prices?

A. Our prices before that period were already in effect, and we simply advanced or declined, as the case might be, according to the market prices of oils or gasoline.

Q. That is to say you might raise prices throughout the State of Texas, or you might lower them; or you might raise the prices at one or two or three stations?

1540 A. According to the recommendation or advice of our people in the field,—of the managers.

Q. Then, in what way did the method of fixing prices differ during that time, from the method pursued while the executive committee was in existence?

A. Exactly the same as before.

Q. That appertains to the prices at which the Company sold its commodities in Texas, as well as in other States?

A. In all portions that the Waters Pierce Oil Company operated.

Q. Now, state whether or not the Standard Oil people or the Standard Oil Company, or any one besides the officers you spoke of, had anything to do with the fixing of prices during the period you mentioned?

A. None whatever.

Q. What has been the method pursued in fixing prices since this last advisory committee began to act?

A. Just the same as previous,—in the executive committee or in the last six or seven years,—ever since the re-organization of the company.

Q. Do you remember when Mr. Tinsley first went to St. Louis?

A. I do.

Q. About what time was it?

A. March, 1904.

Q. What were his duties at first; what duties did he perform, if you remember, in a general way?

A. Why, in the accounting some; various matters,—didn't amount to very much.

Q. He nosed around generally, didn't he?

A. Yes; that is all,—practically nothing.

Q. Do you remember the date at which Mr. Finlay, the president, I mean, had sick leave of absence.

1541 A. In February, 1905.

Q. He was the president?

A. He was the president, yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall when Mr. A. M. Finlay became president; it was in February, 1904, was it not?

A. I think it was, yes.

Q. Who performed the duties of president during the time of February, 1904, up to the time that Mr. Finlay had sick-leave?

A. Mr. Finlay.

Q. How long was he away?

A. From February, about the middle of February, until June 15th, I think of the same year.

Q. Who performed the duties as president—who acted as president during his absence?

A. Mr. R. P. Tinsley.

Q. During that time who fixed the prices at which the commodities were sold?

A. Why, he did and myself and Mr. C. A. Pierce.

Q. All continued to act in that capacity?

A. In the same capacity.

Q. Do you remember when Mr. Tinsley left St. Louis?

A. About June 1, 1905.

Q. Do you remember when he resigned as vice-president and director of the company?

A. About that time.

Q. And who succeeded him as president?

A. Mr. C. A. Pierce.

Q. Who became vice-president?

A. Mr. A. M. Finlay.
Q. Who have occupied those positions since?
A. Mr. C. A. Pierce and Mr. Andrew M. Finlay.
1542 Q. Now, Mr. Ackert, I want you to state generally whether or not the Waters Pierce Oil Company has been operated as an independent company since the time of its organization down to the present time.

Mr. BATTS: I think that is a conclusion of the witness——

Q. (Continued:) Under the management and direction of its officers at St. Louis?

Mr. BATTS: I object to it as a conclusion.
The COURT: The objection that it calls for a conclusion is sustained.
Mr. JOHNSON: Defendant excepts.

Q. Well, who since its organization has managed the business affairs of the Company, and fixed the prices and determined the quantity of oil that it would sell?
A. Mr. C. A. Pierce, the president, Mr. A. M. Finlay, the vice-president, and myself.
Q. And since—how was it while Tinsley was there?
A. Mr. Tinsley, Mr. Finlay, Mr. Pierce and myself.
Q. How has it been since Mr. C. A. Pierce was made president?
A. Just the same—Mr. C. A. Pierce, Mr. Andrew M. Finlay and myself. (To the Stenographer:) "Just the same" should be left out.
Q. Mr. Ackert, you spoke of the purchase by the Waters Pierce Oil Company of the Southwestern Oil Company in St. Louis. What did you mean? That the Waters Pierce Oil Company had purchased the plant?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. After the Southwestern Oil Company had gone out of business?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know Mr. Grinner?
A. I do.
Q. H. H. Grinner, isn't it?
A. H. C. Grinner.
1543 Q. How long has he been in the employ of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. Since 1891 or '92, possibly 1890. It is between 1890 and '92; I have forgotten which.
Q. What has he been doing during that time?
A. To operate and manage that part of the buisness.
Q. That is——
A. That is, the International Oil Works.
Q. That fact is generally known in the city of St. Louis?
A. Yes, sir, it is.
Q. Among the trade?
A. It is, among the trade.
Q. Mr. Ackert, do you remember when the Republic Oil Company began doing business in St. Louis?

A. I do.

Q. About what time was it?

A. As I remember, about 1901. I have forgotten; somewhere about there.

Q. When did you first learn that it was a Standard Oil interest?

A. When this first came up in the courts.

Q. That is, when the Missouri case was brought?

A. When the Missouri case was brought, is when I knew definitely.

Q. What knowledge had you as manager of the Waters Pierce Oil Company of any connection between the Republic Oil Company and any Standard Oil Company?

A. I had none whatever.

Q. Where did the Republic Oil Company begin doing business when it opened up in St. Louis? At any other point besides St. Louis?

A. I think that was the only point in our territory, in the Waters Pierce Oil Company territory, where they operated.

1544 Q. They operated from St. Louis?

A. From St. Louis; but it was the only tank station.

Q. It established a tank station in St. Louis. Any tank wagons?

A. Had four or five tank-wagons.

Q. Any salesmen?

A. Had about three or four salesmen.

Q. Where did the tank-wagons operate?

A. In the City of St. Louis.

Q. Where did the salesmen operate?

A. In the city and out in Missouri.

Q. In the Missouri Division?

A. Practically all over the Division.

Q. How long did they continue to operate in that way?

A. They continued up to about five or six months ago.

Q. What policy did the Waters Pierce Oil Company adopt towards the Republic Oil Company, so far as competing with it is concerned?

A. They went after their business just as hard as they knew how.

Q. How long did they keep it up?

A. To the end.

Q. So you had your suspicions in regard to its connections?

A. I did for two or three years before, but I had nothing to prove it by.

Q. Notwithstanding that, you competed with it all the time?

A. Just as hard as we knew how.

Q. You were asked on direct examination about the quotation of prices by the Standard Oil Company. You understood that question to mean the selling prices——

A. It is the selling prices.

Q. Now, the fact that the Standard Oil Company, because of the large output of refined oil, really determines the general market price throughout the country, of refined oil?

1545 A. That is what I understand.

Q. State whether or not there are changes made in the prices by the Standard Oil Company to the trade generally.

A. There are frequently.

Q. Do those prices apply to the Waters Pierce Oil Company, the same as everybody else?

A. The same as any other large concern.

Q. Yes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Associate counsel suggests that I may not have made myself clearly understood in regard to this matter. I mean the quotation of prices—refinery prices or selling prices—by the Standard Oil Company to the trade generally.

A. Not to any of the trade in the territory, but it is to the Waters Pierce Oil Company, you mean?

Q. Well, doesn't it fix the prices generally, of the market generally,—the selling prices?

A. As I understand, it does. There is a report of the market prices in all of the papers—New York, Pittsburg papers, etc.

Q. State whether or not all other dealers or refineries do not follow the general prices fixed by the Standard Oil Company.

A. It is my understanding that they do.

Q. In other words, the Standard Oil Company and its allied companies determine and establish the market price throughout the country?

A. It is largely the same with the people in the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Q. Then these quotations made by the Standard to the Waters Pierce Oil Company are on changes in the general market price from time to time of the commodity mentioned?

A. It fluctuates from time to time.

1546 Q. On refined oil and gasoline?

A. On all products.

Q. That has no relation to the prices at which the Waters Pierce Oil Company sells to the trade in Texas or elsewhere?

A. Absolutely none. We make our own prices.

Q. You were asked a question by Mr. Batts; I judge that your didn't understand when you made the answer. You, of your own knowledge, know nothing about the original arrangement made between Mr. Pierce and Colonel Thompson and others connected with the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, way back in 1878, regarding the territorial limits in which the Waters Pierce Oil Company, the old company, I mean, was to do business.

A. None whatever.

Q. When you went with the Waters Pierce Oil Company, it was doing business in the same territory it is doing business in now?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is all you know about it?

A. That is all I know about it at all.

Q. Now, that question related to knowledge on your part of the Standard Oil Company beginning selling oil in Louisiana, west of the Mississippi River; you don't know whether it was doing so in violation of any understanding or not, do you?

A. Nothing whatever.

Q. All you know is that the Standard Oil Company did go into that territory and establish tank stations in competition to the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. I knew that, and we immediately took steps to protect ourselves.

Q. Yes, and you have beaten them out pretty nearly, haven't you?

A. Practically so.

Q. You have the same perfect organization of plants, system and method, and intelligent employees, west of the Mississippi 1547 River, that you have in Texas and elsewhere?

A. Just the same; they are practically doing no business, notwithstanding the efforts of a half dozen salesmen.

Q. The Standard Oil Company has also started in business in the portion of Illinois, that the Waters Pierce Oil Company has for years been doing business?

A. In East St. Louis; yes, sir.

Q. When did it begin there?

A. In May, 1906.

Q. And what has been the policy in respect to competing there?

A. To aggressively go after the competition.

Q. What has been the result?

A. We have practically held all of the business to date in that way.

Q. They are still competing?

A. They are.

Q. In both localities?

A. They are.

Q. There is no sham about that?

A. None whatever.

Q. As far as the Waters Pierce Oil Company is concerned?

A. Absolutely none.

Q. In neither instance?

A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know anything much about the refining of oil, do you, Mr. Ackert?

A. No, sir, I don't. It is out of my line.

Q. But you do know something about the product?

A. I do.

Q. You stated, I believe, that Eupion was the best grade of oil sold by the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. I did.

1548 Q. And that it had established a very large trade in it under that name,—that trade name?

A. I did.

Q. And that Eupion, while it is the same in quality, varies as to fire test?

A. It does.

Q. Do you know why that is?

A. In some States they require a hundred——

Q. Isn't it because of the crude oil——

Mr. ALLEN: We object to that. The witness has started to answer, and let him answer the question, and not the counsel.

Mr. JOHNSON: I was afraid he had misapprehended the question.

A. On account of some of the States having a law of 150 fire test, while in other States it is lower, or there isn't any. We have always considered that a lower fire test is better than a 150 fire test, unless you go too low.

Q. That is, until you get too low?

A. Until you get too low.

Q. Then the fire test has practically nothing to do with the burning-quality of the oil?

A. Down to a certain point?

Q. Or up to a certain point?

A. That is right.

Q. What is—what difference—what does the difference in fire test make as to the burning quality of oil; take, for instance, 120 degrees, so-called fire-test, and 150 degrees so-called fire test?

A. It is considered that the 120 is a good deal better than the 150.

1540 Q. In all respects?

A. In all respects; it is a better burner and it gives a better light than the 150; it is generally conceded that the 120 to 125 is better than 150.

Q. Really, the only difference is that the 120 is a little more volatile than the 150?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And burns freer?

A. Burns freer.

Q. But the quality of oil is practically the same?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Ackert, state whether or not you ever authorized the selling in Texas, at any time, of Prime White 112 degrees fire test, for Eupion.

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Instead of the regular Eupion brand?

A. I have not.

Q. Did you ever know of that being done?

A. I understood from Mr. Cahoon here yesterday, and I think that he reported it, that at one time it was done, and we immediately gave instructions that it be stopped, and I have issued letters to the managers, that if we didn't have the Eupion Oil, to go to the customers and inform them that we didn't have it, but that it was on the way. I have held meetings in each of our headquarters during the last year, and I have positively directed the managers and salesmen they should not het out and sell any lower grade for Eupion; and I think they all thoroughly understand it.

Q. What has been your policy since you became general manager, with dealing with the trade in that way?

A. With strict integrity; we feel that that is the capital stock.

1550 Q. You spoke of meeting with your agents; how often do you hold meetings with your agents?

A. Every four or five months we try to. I am not always present, but I try to be present as often as I can; that means all of our agents,—salaried agents and commission agents.

Q. Now, of your knowledge and the present state of business of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, state whether or not the amount of the company's business in Texas to-day—state what it results from, and your ability to hold the trade or to do the business that you do, against the competition that exists.

A. It is the quality of our oils, the men that we have, and the strict integrity and open manner in which we go after the business. It enables us to hold as large a percentage as it does. We try to have in every position men of strict integrity, men whom the people at large can place confidence in, and as soon as we find that any of our men are not of that class, that are not treating the people as they should, in a strict integrity, in a manner which makes or has the trade feel full confidence in the Waters Pierce Oil Company—that they are able to give first-class oils, to give first-class service—we simply make a change; we do that as soon as we can after we find that they are not of that calibre of men.

Q. Who has—what have you had to do with the purchase of oil supplies, Mr. Ackert?

A. I haven't had very much to do with that.

Q. Well, haven't you had anything to do with it?

A. Practically nothing.

Q. Who has had charge of that?

A. Mr. Andrew M. Finlay.

Q. What is the process—through what channels do requisitions or requests for supplies at the agencies, go?

1551 A. At the agencies?

Q. Yes.

A. The agencies make their orders on the main office or the division office, for carloads or less, as the case may be, and these orders are made up in the division office and sent to the home office in St. Louis, to Mr. Andrew M. Finlay.

Q. Do they all go direct to him?

A. Go direct to him.

Q. You- statement as to the policy pursued towards the trade, a moment ago, referred to the period since you have been general manager of the Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON: I believe that is all.

Redirect examination.

(By Mr. BATTS:)

Q. The relations between the Waters Pierce Oil Company and the Standard Oil Company are just the same that they have been ever since it was incorporated, are they not?

A. What do you mean?

Q. Well, has there been any change in the course of business of the Standard Oil Company with reference to the Waters Pierce Oil Company during that period?

A. On prices?

Q. Anything.

A. I have had practically nothing to do with any correspondence or knowledge of the S. O. Company, in matters of that kind.

Q. Now, you seem to know most everything about the business when you are interrogated by your counsel, and you have 1552 been on the executive committee all the time, and you state that everything that pertains to the company comes before the committee. I want to know if at any time since May 29, 1900, there has been any change in the attitude of the Standard Oil Company towards the Waters Pierce Oil Company in the management of the business of the letter?

A. The Waters Pierce Oil Company have always managed their own business.

Q. Now, will you answer the question that I have asked you?

A. I don't know that there has been any change, because the Waters Pierce Oil Company has always done it.

Q. Very well, it has been auditing the accounts all the time?

A. I couldn't say whether it has or not.

Q. You still state that you were a member of that executive committee, but can't tell me whether or not the Standard Oil Company has been auditing the accounts, has been doing it all the time?

A. I have heard of no auditors for two years.

Q. Prior to that time there were?

A. Prior to that time?

Q. I am talking about that corporation.

A. There were auditors that came there during that time.

Q. Up to about two years ago?

A. I think so; yes, sir.

Q. About two years ago they stopped. What time was the suit up in Missouri filed?

A. I couldn't tell you, sir.

Q. What reference did that have—the suit up in Missouri?

A. I do not know.

Q. Well, it was talked about before the Executive Committee, was it not?

A. No, sir, it was not.

1553 Q. Now, as a member of the executive committee, and as a member of the family, and one of the officers of the Waters Pierce Oil Company's wasn't the affairs of that company and its relations to the Standard Oil Company, discussed?

A. No, sir, not in that way, as regards the management of the business.

Q. Well, was the matter of its stock-ownership discussed?

A. No, sir.

Q. When did you first learn of the ownership by the Standard Oil Company of the stock of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. In the papers.

Q. Notwithstanding you are a member of the executive committee; notwithstanding you knew about the affairs generally; notwithstanding the letters received daily from 26 Broadway; notwithstanding you are a relative of H. Clay Pierce; notwithstanding you met all these persons every day there,—you didn't know anything about it?

A. I do not know what stock the Standard Oil Company had, or anything about it.

Q. And don't know that it owned any stock?

A. I do not know.

Q. Now, I understand you to say that the general attitude of your business is to be entirely open and frank to the people of Texas?

A. Yes, sir, absolutely.

Q. And yet the stock-ownership of the Waters Pierce Oil Company was not disclosed even to you?

A. I had nothing to do with the stock or any part of it.

Q. And didn't know about it?

A. I had no means of knowing about it.

Q. You recall the testimony given by Mr. Pierce, to the 1554 effect that he had been informed that the Standard Oil Company methods would no longer be tolerated in Texas?

A. I knew of that?

Q. What was meant by that?

Judge PENN: We object, Your Honor; it is not competent to call on one witness to explain what another witness meant by his testimony.

The COURT: If the witness knows, he can state.

A. I do not know.

Q. Well, you don't know what that meant?

A. No, sir.

Q. I will ask you if there has been any change in the character of your relations to the people of Texas since May 29, 1900? Have you just since that time begun to treat them honestly, and have honest employees?

A. I didn't have anything to do with the business in Texas before that. I assume the company always tried to assume its high dignity of first class employees.

Q. You don't understand that there has been any change since May, 1900?

A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. And don't know what was meant by Mr. Pierce's statement that the Standard Oil Company's methods would not be tolerated in Texas?

A. Mr. Pierce didn't tell me; I don't know what that means.

Q. In your executive committee meetings, as I understand, that this committee up to the time that Mr. Tinsley came, had absolute charge of the corporation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I will ask you, if in your talk or by any action put down on your books, you determined that you would abandon the 1555 methods of the Standard Oil Company in Texas, and conduct the business in an honest and decent way in Texas?

A. It was the same manner that we did previous to Mr. Tinsley's coming, and continued when he was there.

Q. Now, I am talking since May 29, 1900; did you take any such action in your Committee?

A. I do not understand you.

Q. Did you talk over or take any official action, changing the character of the business or the way in which you conducted business in Texas?

A. It was not talked over at all.

Q. Now, as I understand it, this executive committee had absolute control of the affairs of the company.

A. It did.

Q. Any time during that period was there a discussion of the matter of trying to get your oil from some supply other than the Standard Oil Company?

A. We have bought during that time from the Gulf Refining Company. There was no other company that could supply us.

Q. The Gulf Refining Company couldn't supply you?

A. No, sir, they couldn't supply all?

Q. Could the Texas Company?

A. No, sir.

Q. Can you tell me the output of those companies?

A. No, sir.

Q. Then how do you know?

A. Because I understood the companies couldn't do it.

Q. How did you hear that?

A. I simply heard——

Q. Where did you hear that?

A. I heard they exported most of their oils.

1556 Q. I asked if you discussed that in your Committee?

A. We have not.

Q. And what information did you undertake to acquire as to whether or not there was enough oil refined in Texas to supply the people in Texas?

A. We have simply understood that there was not.

Q. You don't know how much they did supply?

A. I don't know, because I understood most of it is exported.

Q. It could be used here, couldn't it?

A. I don't know. We haven't because it was not satisfactory.

Q. Now, what is the output of the refineries in Texas?

A. I can't tell you.

Q. How much—in all the refineries, how much oil is made of a quality equal to W. W. 120?

A. At Corsicana, is all.

Q. None at Chaison?

A. None at all equal to that or the northern oil.

Q. And how much oil is refined in Texas which you could use as Eupion oil?

A. I couldn't say how much.

Q. How much Eupion do you use in Texas?

A. About three-fourths of our total sales.

Q. What per cent. of all the oil business do you do in Texas?

A. I should say eighty per cent.
Q. Of the total business?
A. Of the total business.
Q. Eighty per cent.?
A. Eighty per cent.
Q. Isn't it more than that?
A. I couldn't say that it was.
1557 Q. Now, you have got some refineries in Mexico?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You have never undertaken to establish any in Texas?
A. No, because we could get our oil cheaper here than we could make it.
Q. Do you know what it costs to refine oil?
A. I do not know in the United States; that isn't my part of the business.
Q. Well, how do you know that you can get it cheaper than refining it yourself?
A. I understood from others——
Q. How much have you understood from others; how much it costs to refine oil?
A. I do not know.
Q. Then you don't know whether you could refine it cheaper than you buy it, or not?
A. I have heard from those who know.
Q. From who?
A. Our people in St. Louis.
Q. Then you discussed it in the committee?
A. I do not know that it has been.
Q. What does it cost to refine oil in Mexico?
A. I couldn't tell you; I haven't the figures.
Q. Now, you stated this morning that the old agreement between the Standard Oil Company and the Waters Pierce Oil Company, made prior to the present re-incorporation, was observed afterwards; and you have stated this afternoon that you did not know anything about such an agreement. Why did you state this morning that it had been observed, if you did not know anything about it?
A. This morning I misunderstood your question.
1558 Q. Then you never had heard about any agreement between the Standard Oil Company and the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. Then I had not. I misunderstood your question this morning.
Q. You know, do you not, that there is a line between the Standard Oil Company and the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. I simply know where our agencies are; that is all. I will repeat again that I could not draw an imaginary line.
Q. You direct your agents not to go outside of that territory?
A. I have not directed them not to.
Q. You have directed them where to operate?
A. They know where to operate.
Q. How do they know?
A. Just from one agent to another.

Q. It has passed from one agent to another, as to where the line was; is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you say that the Standard Oil Company has been getting into your territory, and that it is no sham. Has the circumstance that it is no sham been discussed in the committee?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you discussed it elsewhere?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what arrangement Mr. Pierce has made with the Standard Oil Company at 26 Broadway, about it?

A. I do not know.

Q. How do you know whether it is a sham or not?

A. From the way they have gone after the business.

Q. Do you know whether or not it has been arranged that they should go out after the business as though it were not a sham?

A. I do not know.

Q. You say the Republic Oil Company was doing business.

1559 You did not know it was a Standard Oil Company proposition?

A. I did not.

Q. They did not—Mr. Pierce did not let you know it was Standard Oil Company property?

A. I do not think he knew it himself.

Q. Then the Standard Oil Company didn't let Mr. Pierce know.

A. I do not know.

Q. So far as you know?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was not communicated to you in the Executive Committee, or as a member of the family?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, does the Waters Pierce Oil Company also surreptitiously violate the agreement of the Standard Oil Company, and put in plants and conceal it from that company?

A. I do not know of any agreement.

Q. Well, you don't know of any arrangement upon which the Waters Pierce Oil Company surreptitiously goes into Standard Oil Company territory and maintains plants without letting the Standard Oil Company know of its character?

A. I do not know of any.

Q. But your belief is that the arrangement between the Waters Pierce Oil Company and the Standard Oil Company has been violated with regard to the Republic Oil Company doing business in St. Louis, and that it was not there as a sham?

A. I do not know of any arrangement; I simply know it was not there as a sham, and we went after their business as aggressively as any other.

Q. You don't know whether it was a part of the arrangement that you should go after the business that way?

A. Never was discussed that way.

1560 Q. But a great many things took place between Mr. Pierce and the Standard Oil Company, not communicated to you?

A. I do not know.

Q. Take, for instance, the matter of stock-ownership, that was not communicated to the executive committee?

A. I never heard of it.

Q. Never heard of it in your relation as a member of the committee or otherwise? So you are not in a position to say whether it had been agreed between Mr. Pierce and the Standard Oil Company, that the Republic Oil Company should appear to be in opposition to you down in St. Louis?

A. I don't think there was ever an agreement. I have no way of knowing, but I am positive that there was no agreement.

Q. Well, how are you positive about it; you know nothing about it?

A. Just the same as I am positive on anything else I am sure of.

Q. You had the same information about that as of the stock-*p*wnership?

Judge STEDMAN: We object to the further prosecution of this witness——

Mr. BATTS: Well, I will pass to something else, if you don't like that.

Q. Now, you say that the Standard Oil Company is so complete, that it fixes the price of all the refineries in the United States?

A. It has the largest output of oils in the United States.

Q. I ask you again to state if it is a fact or not, that its monopoly is so complete, that it fixes the price at which all the oil is sold in the United States?

A. I do not say its monopoly is so great.

Q. It fixes the prices?

A. It naturally fixes the prices on account of its output.

Q. Of all oils disposed of in the United States?

A. All refined oils.

1561 Q. All refined oils?

A. I think the other competitors follow it.

Q. They trail behind; you stated so in your examination——

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Didn't you, in your examination by counsel?

A. I stated so.

Q. The Standard Oil Company, then, fixes the price at which the refined oil is sold in the United States?

A. At which the refineries sell it.

Q. Now, it is a fact, is it not, that when you and Mr. C. Arthur Pierce, and Mr.—the gentleman sent there to nose around—what is his name?

A. Tinsley.

Q. Mr. Tinsley,—when you determined at what price you would permit Mr. Cahoon to sell oil in Texas, you fixed it with reference to the price which the Standard Oil Company had placed upon it at the refinery, did you not?

A. No, sir.

Q. Had nothing to do with it?

A. Absolutely nothing.

Q. Now, I will read you a part of what purports to be your former testimony in the case of the State of Missouri vs. Waters Pierce Oil Company, and ask you if you so testified:

"Q. The price at which it is billed to you by the Standard Oil Company, is accepted by you as the basis upon which you fix your price? A. It is."

Q. Did you so testify?

A. I presume I did.

Q. Well, when was it that you abandoned that as the basis?

A. We have not abandoned it.

Q. You have not abandoned it?

1562 A. Our prices generally are based on our cost—the same as any other mercantile house.

Q. And the Standard Oil Company fixes the cost?

A. They may fix the cost on oil, but so far as the selling price, they do not fix it.

Q. They fix it at the price it goes to you, and you fix it at which it is sold? Is or is not that the case?

A. No, sir, it is not. Our selling price would be based on what the conditions were at that time.

Q. Now, aren't these the circumstances that you take into consideration?

A. In that——

Q. Wait a minute. A certain price obtains and the Standard Oil Company informs you and the balance of the companies in the United States, that oil has gone up, say, a cent a barrel. Now, isn't it a fact that you immediately put up your price a cent a barrel?

A. Not always.

Q. What do you do?

A. We may put it up part, and not altogether; but we do not arrange our prices altogether on that basis.

Q. There are some other considerations you put there? For instance, if you have competition at a certain place, say, Greenville, or Commerce,—you may conclude that the trade would stand a one cent advance?

A. Not always.

Q. Not always?

A. Not always do we consider it on that basis.

Q. Now, let us consider the elements. It is what the Standard Oil Company alone says that oil all over the United States will be fixed at; the local conditions as to competition; the freight rate, and what else?

1563 A. And the marketing expenses.

Q. And the marketing expenses. Now, then, taking some specific case, that which you get it at from the Standard Oil Company is the biggest element, isn't it ?

A. The cost of any concern, is its basis.

Q. Well, will you just answer the specific question I have put to you?

A. Our cost, or our basis, are the same as any other concern.

Q. Now, in order to find out whether you fix the price, your executive committee, or the Standard Oil Company, I will call your attention to a letter already introduced, in which you were notified on September 1, 1904, "that on September 6th, an advance will be made in the billing prices of the following grades of gasoline;" what is meant by the billing prices?

A. It is the price at which we buy the gasoline.

Q. Now, at that time you were the General Manager, were you not, on September 1, 1904?

A. I think so, yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you to state if upon the receipt of that advance in price you didn't write a letter to each of your division managers to the effect that——

Mr. JOHNSON: That is not in evidence.

Mr. BATTS: Oh, I am going to get it there, though.

Q. You didn't write a letter to the effect——

Judge STEDMAN: Are you reading from a letter, Mr. Batts? We object to his reading from a letter, Your Honor, before we have an opportunity to inspect it, and before laying a basis for its introduction. We do not know what the letter is.

Mr. BATTS: I do not know whether I want to introduce it, or not.

Judge STEDMAN: We think it is but just to the witness 1564 that he should be shown the letter.

Mr. BATTS: Well, he can see it; I have no objection to his seeing it. (Hands letter to witness.)

Q. You don't recall the particular transaction?

A. No, sir, I don't.

Q. You don't know, then, whether you notified your division agents to advance prices in response to this letter, or not?

A. That purports to be a letter from my office, but I can't say whether I did or not.

Q. It's a common thing to have it advanced?

A. We advance if the cost increases.

Q. Advance when the cost increases?

A. Generally; we don't always.

Q. And notify your managers when to?

A. We do.

Q. Then the people at 26 Broadway determine what the price shall be down here in Texas?

A. No, sir.

Judge PENN: We object to that as argument, Your Honor.

Mr. BATTS: Well, don't get excited. I'll withdraw it.

Judge PENN: If the Court please, we object to counsel making side-bar remarks to us when we make objections to the Court.

Mr. BATTS: I will apologize for it.

The COURT: Yes, sir; Counsel will confine themselves to addressing the Court.

Q. Now you say the Standard Oil Company had nothing to do with the fixing of prices up there by the executive committee?

A. I do.

Q. Who fixes the executive committee?

A. No one fixes them.
1565 Q. Who determines who they shall be?
A. Who does?
Q. Yes, sir.
A. Officers of the Waters Pierce Oil Company.
Q. Who determines who the officers of the Waters Pierce Oil Company shall be?
A. Mr. H. C. Pierce.
Q. Mr. H. C. Pierce?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. He determines that?
A. So far as I know.
Q. Who owns the stock?
A. Who owns it?
Q. Yes.
A. Why, I can't tell you who owns it, only so far as I have seen in the papers, I stated.
Q. The officers of a corporation are ordinarily elected by the owners of the stock, aren't they?
A. Not always, I understand.
Q. You don't understand that to be the case?
A. Not always, no, sir.
Q. The officers of a corporation can be so elected, can't they?
A. They might; I don't know.

Judge PENN: If the Court please, that is a matter of law as to who controls or who elects officers of a corporation. We object to the witness being examined with reference to his opinion on questions of law.
The COURT: The objection is overruled.
Judge PENN: Defendant excepts.

Q. Now, if Mr. Pierce elects the officers of that corporation, it is because the Standard Oil Company permits him to do it, isn't it?
1566 A. I have no means of knowing.
Q. And you don't even now know that the Standard Oil Company owns a majority of the stock of that concern?
A. Only what I have seen in the papers and Mr. Pierce's testimony.
Q. But you know that Mr. Pierce names the officers of that corporation?
A. I have no personal knowledge of it.
Q. You so testified, didn't you?
A. So far as I know, he names them all.
Q. The directors and the officers of that corporation?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And he has all the time?
A. So far as I know, he always has.
Q. He named Mr. Tinsley?
A. I don't know whether he did or not.
Q. You don't don't know who named Mr. Tinsley then?
A. No, I don't.

Q. Do you know who named Mr. Finlay?
A. I suppose Mr. Pierce did; I don't know.
Q. Well, you don't know, then—do you know whether he named Mr.—that auditor there, what's his name—Mr. Stanley; who named him?
A. I understand Mr. Pierce did.
Q. Well how did you get that information?
A. It's sort of understood that he did; I have no positive information.
Q. Who are the directors of that corporation?
A. I could not tell you, sir.
Q. You don't know who they are?
A. I could not tell you, no, sir.
Q. Well, how do you undertake to say who named them?
1567 A. Because the management of the Waters Pierce Oil Company has been in the hands of Mr. Pierce, so far as I know.
Q. Who sent Mr. Tinsley to St. Louis?
A. I have no advice.
Q. You know that he was sent there by Mr. Pierce?
A. I presume he was not.
Q. What makes you think that?
A. Because he left.
Q. You conclude from the fact that he left that Mr. Pierce didn't send him there?
A. That's my conclusion, that's all.
Q. He left after the Missouri suit was instituted, didn't he?
A. I could not say whether he did or not.
Q. You don't know?
A. I don't remember.
Q. Can you fix the time when he left?
A. He left the last of May or first of June, 1905.
Q. Now, you recall the testimony of Mr. Pierce to the effect that the offices were taken away from him when Mr. Tinsley came out there?
A. I have forgotton exactly what Mr. Pierce testified.
Q. Well, wasn't it something to that effect?
A. It might have been; I don't remember.
Q. Well, you have heard him say so, yourself, haven't you?
A. No, sir, I have not.
Q. You have been in the management all the time?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. During the time Mr. Finlay was there, was there any difference in the management of the concern, as compared with the way it was managed prior to that time and afterwards?
A. It was managed by the Waters Pierce Oil Company all the time.
1568 Q. Well, now, will you answer that question of mine? Was there any difference in the way in which it was managed?
A. There might have been.
Q. Well, what was the difference?
A. I don't know as I could state exactly.

Q. Well, was there any difference that you can state to the jury?
A. There might have been a difference.
Q. I will ask you if there was any difference that you can define or point out, mention or specify?
A. I don't know that I can mention any.
Q. Either before or after that time?
A. I don't know that I could mention any.
Q. Now, as general manager of the concern, as member of the executive committee while it was there, as manager of the concern with Mr. Tinsley, who was it that helped fixe the prices when Tinsley was there?
A. Mr. C. A. Pierce and Mr. Andrew Finlay.
Q. Mr. Finlay?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. As a member of the advisory committee since that time, I want to know from you if the business has been conducted in the same way all the time.
A. Then and now?
Q. All during that time?
A. Prices and all were fixed by the officers of the company, as I have explained.
Q. Yes, sir, but you won't answer questions, and I want you to do that. Was the business conducted in the same way all during that time?
A. Practically, yes, sir.
Q. What difference was there in the way in which business was conducted?
1569 A. There was no executive committee part of the time.
Q. That's the only difference?
A. As I remember.
Q. The people who first were on the executive committee still acted without being called the executive committee?
A. They acted, yes sir.
Q. Well, was there any difference?
A. There might have been some difference; I don't just remember. I don't think I could just explain what the difference was.
Q. You recall the circumstance that Mr. Pierce testified that he was taken out of the control of things and that things were different thereafter. Now, I want to know what the difference was?
A. I have forgotten just what he testified. It's on record. I say there might have been some changes, but I don't remember just what they were.
Q. You know that the directors that he had theretofore named were taken out of office—do you or not?
A. I don't know that any—I could not say, because I don't know who the directors were then, or who they are now.
Q. Now, you undertake to tell us all about everything in Texas, all your employees in Texas, method of doing business in every one of the counties in Texas and how many tank-wagons and just how they do business, how many barrels there are, and yet you can't tell us about those things that take place in your office and under your immediate and direct supervision and within your own view?

A. It's a part of my business to look after this end of it.

Q. And it's a part of your business not to find out about these other things?

A. It's not in my part of it at all.

Q. Yes, sir. Now, you stated that the Standard Oil Company has increased its facilities in Texas—I mean the Waters Pierce
1570 Oil Company—fifty per cent. since 1900?

A. I should say nearly that, yes, sir.

Q. How much does that represent in dollars?

A. I could not say just exactly.

Q. What is the total equipment worth in Texas?

A. A million and a quarter, I should say.

Q. Million and a quarter.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. One-half of that has been put in since 1900?

A. I should say that we have increased fifty per cent. since 1900.

Q. And that during a time when dividends of six or seven hundred per cent. were brought in?

A. I don't know what the dividends were.

Q. Don't you know about that?

A. All I know is what has been testified.

Q. Member of the committee and in charge of the business and in touch with Mr. Pierce every day and a cousin of Mr. Pierce's?

A. I am looking after my part of the marketing end of it.

Q. And don't know the dividends declared by the company?

A. I have nothing to do with that part of it; whatever was done was done by the officers—I don't know what the dividends were, no, sir.

Q. That part of it you are not expected to know about?

A. It is not in my department.

Q. Well, at all events, of the million and a half of property in Texas, how much of it do you say has been put here since 1900—fifty per cent. since that time?

A. Of the property, I don't suppose there is a million and a quarter or a million and a half in property; the accounts and all would probably run a million and a quarter or million and a half.

Q. Well, it has been increased fifty per cent.?

A. Yes, sir, since 1900——

1571 Q. And that increase has been made——

Judge STEDMAN: Let him finish.

Q. Well, go ahead.

A. I said the accounts and the property of the Waters Pierce Oil Company would probably run from a million and a quarter to a million and a half, but the actual value of the real estate and the equipment will probably run five hundred thousand dollars.

Q. Well, then, you have got in Texas——

A. About five hundred thousand dollars.

Q. There has been an increase of about fifty per cent. since 1900?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that increase has been made notwithstanding whatever these dividends are?

A. I could not tell you, sir.

Q. Now, what per cent. of the business of the Waters Pierce Oil Company is done in this State?

A. I have not the figures here; I am sure I could not say.

Q. Well, now——

A. I should say not a half of it; I should say a third of it, possibly, in guessing at it.

Q. Well, what per cent. of the profits arise in Texas?

A. I could not tell you; it is impossible to tell you.

Q. You have no Standard Oil competition in Louisiana or Standard Oil competition in that part of Missouri that you are in,—have you or not?

A. We have competition there from them, yes, sir.

Q. Any competition from the Standard Oil Company in the Indian Territory and Oklahoma?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. No competition from the Standard Oil Company in Texas that you know of?

1572 A. None that I know of.

Q. Now, isn't Texas, so far as population is concerned, and the tank stations and the number of wagons that you have got,—aren't more than half of them in Texas?

A. No, I don't think they are.

Q. Forty-five per cent.?

A. I could not say exactly.

Q. Well, about that?

A. I could not say—could not say what per cent. of them.

Q. Now, I suppose that it was in pursuance of that plan of being entirely honest with the people of Texas that you did away with the Eagle Refining Company business?

A. It was known previous to that; as I understand, the people of Dallas knew it in 1895, but the people of Texas didn't.

Q. Some of the people, you mean?

A. Well, generally.

Q. Then, that had nothing to do with your anxiety to be honest and frank with the people of Texas—open and above board?

A. It was understood by the people of Texas, as I understand, that the Eagle Refining Company was owned and operated by the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Q. And the busine[illegible]f Roy Campbell over there, I suppose you discontinued that on account of the fact that you wanted to be square with the people of Texas?

A. That was known back in 1895, as I understand.

Q. And I suppose, Mr. Ackert, that when you got a proposition from Mr. Cahoon to put in Brilliant as Eupion oil to meet competition up at Brownwood, that you immediately wrote him "We must not treat the people of Texas that way"?

A. I probably wrote to him that he could not make any 1573 any sales of Brilliant at Brownwood. I should say I did, but I don't remember it.

Q. An honest proposition?

A. I should say it was probably turned down—it would be naturally.

Q. His proposition to put in S. W. 112 at Corsicana, you turned that down as soon as you found out about it?

A. I presume we did. Positive instructions were not to make any sales of that kind.

Mr. BATTS: That's all.

Judge PENN: That's all.

Mr. BATTS: State rests.

Judge PENN: We will ask the Court to adjourn until to-morrow morning, to give us time to arrange the order of testimony for the defense.

The COURT: I will adjourn until 9.30 to-morrow morning.

THURSDAY MORNING, May 30th.

(Court opened at 9.30 a. m.)

Judge STEDMAN: We offer part of the testimony of Mr. Clay Arthur Pierce, taken in St. Louis. In order to make the matter entirely clear, we shall to some extent, read some of the testimony already offered by the other side. It is in the form of a deposition, and we do not care to uselessly consume time, but we desire to read some that is already read and also some of the omitted parts.

(Judge Stedman reads questions and Judge Penn reads answers:)

1574 Q. State your name in full, please.

A. Clay Arthur Pierce.

Q. Your age?

A. Thirty-three.

Q. Your residence?

A. No. 40, Vandeventer Place, St. Louis, Missouri.

Q. Your occupation?

A. President of the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Q. How long have you been president of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Since June, 1905.

Q. Since that time you have actively discharged the duties of president of the Company?

A. I have.

Q. And managed and controlled its affairs as far as a president can manage and control?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what have been your duties as president of the company since your election?

A. I have been the executive head of the company, to manage its business affairs, all details connected therewith, and to take final executive action on all business of any nature pertaining to the Company.

Q. Who did you succeed as president of the Company?

A. Mr. Andrew M. Finlay.

Q. You were employed by the Company before you were made its president, were you?

A. I was first employed by the Company in the spring of 1898, as assistant treasurer.

Q. That was the old firm, Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. The old firm, the Waters Pierce Oil Company. I was re-employed by the new company as assistant treasurer, organ-1575 azed in 1900, and continued as assistant treasurer until June, 1905, when I was elected President. Just two months previous to that time, however, I was made acting president, and I occupied that position for two months.

Q. What were your duties as assistant treasurer? What duties did you perform?

A. I performed such duties as would naturally fall to the position of assistant treasurer in the Treasurer's department, and in addition I sat on the executive committee as Secretary of that committee, and a member of the committee from the time of its formation until the committee was disbanded.

Q. When was the executive committee organized?

A. If I remember correctly, it was organized in 1900. I am not sure as to the date.

Q. And it has existed down to what time?

A. Until the fall of 1904, I believe.

Q. What have you had to do since the organization of the executive committee with the fixing of prices at which the company sells its commodities in the State of Texas?

A. Since the organization of the Executive Committee I have been actively one of usually three who have determined or fixed the selling prices in the State of Texas.

Q. Who were the other members of that committee? I mean who were the other parties, not the executive committee, but who were the other parties that acted with you or that you acted with in fixing prices of sales of oil in Texas and other commodities?

A. The entire executive committee while it was in session acted finally upon the fixing of prices of a sub-committee, composed of Andrew M. Finlay, then president, C. P. Ackert, general manager, and myself, as assistant treasurer, examined schedules which 1576 were exhibited to the executive committee for their final approval with our recommendation.

Q. And the prices were fixed in that manner during the continuance of the executive committee?

A. Without exception.

Q. How have they been fixed since that time?

A. During the period that Mr. R. P. Tinsley was vice-president of the company after the disbanding of the executive committee until Mr. Tinsley resigned as vice-president I cannot say from my personal knowledge how the prices were adjusted; I was not present at such times. Since Mr. Tinsley resigned his position——

Q. When was that?

A. The date that his resignation was accepted was June, 1905. Since that date until the formation of the advisory committee which is at present in operation, the prices were adjusted by Mr. Andrew

M. Finlay, vice president, Mr. C. P. Ackert, General Manager, and myself, and the final adjustment of prices has been in my hands. Since the formation of the advisory committee, which was formed in 1906, in the fall of 1906, the prices have been considered by the advisory committee and voted on by the advisory committee and finally adjusted by myself and the president.

Q. Who composed the advisory committee during that time?

A. It was composed of myself, as chairman of the board, Mr. Andrew M. Finlay, vice president, Mr. C. P. Ackert, general manager, and Mr. C. M. Adams, Secretary and Treasurer, and Mr. Harris—I don't recall his initials managing the lubricating department, and Mr. Edward Stanley, Controller of the company, and Mr. Stewart, my private secretary, is the secretary of the committee. He is not, however, a member of it.

Q. And that way you have mentioned is the only way in which prices have been fixed, the selling prices have been fixed by 1577 the company during the time that you have had to do in prices?

Mr. ALLEN: We object to that as leading and suggestive. Direct examination of their own witness.

The COURT: The objection is sustained.

Judge PENN: The defendant excepts.

Q. What other concerns or individuals, if any, have ever had anything to say——

Judge PENN: If the Court please, if you will pardon a suggestion with reference to this question,—this is a deposition of this witness and we believe it to be well settled that whether the question is leading or suggestive goes to the manner and form——

The COURT: Was any objection made to that question at the time?

Mr. ALLEN: No, sir. This is under a different law and it is really taken before a court. We do not care, however.

The COURT: The objection is overruled.

A. Absolutely that has been the final fixing of prices, as I have stated.

Q. What other concern or individuals, if any, have ever had anything to do in respect to the fixing of prices by the company—the selling prices, I mean?

A. I would like to understand that question. Do you mean——

Q. Outside of the company and its officers?

A. To my knowledge, the prices of the company have never been fixed other than as I have stated.

Q. During the time that you have been an officer of the present Waters Pierce Oil Company, has it or not been managed by the officers of the company as an independent concern?

1578 A. To my knowledge, it has been managed entirely and absolutely as an independent concern by the officers of the company only.

Judge STEDMAN: Now skip to page 208, to the words, "by Mr. Johnson."

Q. Mr. Pierce, when was Mr. Andrew M. Finlay made president of the present Waters Pierce Oil Company

A. I can't answer that definitely. I think he was first made president in the year—well, it was either 1899 or 1900, I am not positive of it at all.

Q. Mr. H. C. Pierce was made president of the present company when it was organized on the 29th of May, 1900, was he not?

A. That was my understanding.

Q. Do you recall how long he continued as president?

A. I don't recollect positively. I think he continued for upwards of a year.

Q. And who was vice-president?

A. Mr. Andrew M. Finlay.

Q. And then Andrew M. Finlay succeeded him?

A. He succeeded H. Clay Pierce.

Q. How long did Andrew M. Finlay continue as president of the company?

A. Until June, 1900, when I was elected to that office.

Q. When was Mr. Tinsley made vice-president of the company?

A. I think Mr. Tinsley was elected vice-president of the company in the latter part of the summer of 1903.

Q. 1904, wasn't it?

A. No, I think it was in 1903.

Q. I wish you would refresh your memory on that point.

A. I will do so.

1579 Q. The oils which the Waters Pierce Oil Company got from Corsicana refinery and has been getting in the past, are purchased like the company purchases from any other Standard Oil refinery, are they not?

A. Entirely.

Q. Or from any Standard Oil refinery?

A. Well, they are purchasing the same as the production made in any refinery, whether Standard Oil or not Standard Oil.

Q. And the purchases also go through the same routine as purchases elsewhere, so far as your company is concerned?

A. Entirely the same.

Judge STEDMAN: Now the last question on page 210.

Q. As to the prices, you say you don't know how those prices are fixed?

A. I know less clearly regarding the marine oil prices than any other detail of the business, as to the prices. It is my knowledge, however, as far as it goes, that the prices are fixed by our lubricating department on a minimum which they have for all lubricating oils, plus the profits, which is added thereto, and so far as I know and all that I know definitely enough to so state, the prices are definitely determined in our lubricating department.

Q. But the sales are made to the Standard Oil Company, the same as the company would sell to any other customer?

A. To any other customer.

Judge STEDMAN: Now, over to Mr. C. A. Pierce, recalled, on page 212.

Q. Have you the memoranda that you were to get, before we adjourned?

A. You wanted to know the date that R. P. Tinsley was elected vice-president. That was April 28, 1904. You also wanted 1580 to know the date that he resigned. That was June 22, 1905. You asked the date when Mr. A. M. Finlay was elected president. That was the 18th of February, 1904. He also served until June 22, 1905, as president.

Q. When were you made president,—at that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember, as a matter of fact, when it was that Mr. Tinsley came to the home office and assumed the duties of vice-president?

A. It was April, 1904.

Q. And when did he leave the home office entirely?

A. He left the home office very nearly the end of April, 1905. It was the last few days.

Q. And he left there for good, finally, before he tendered his resignation as vice-president of the company——

A. Very nearly two months before he tendered his resignation.

Q. Mr. Pierce, from the time that you have been connected with the present Waters Pierce Oil Company, in the different capacities which you have mentioned, what has been Mr. H. C. Pierce's connection with the company?

A. He was president up to February, 1904, and since that date he has been chairman of the Board of Directors.

Q. And what supervision or control has he exercised over the management of the business of the company while you have been connected with it?

A. Such matters as I have found advisable to refer to him for final decision, he has passed upon and advised me, and his decision in the matter has been final, and it was handled in accordance with his ideas entirely.

Q. That has been while you have been vice-president?

A. Yes, sir, while I have been vice-president.

1581 Q. How was it before that?

A. The same procedure was followed by Mr. Andrew M. Finlay, as far as I recall, and in addition, Mr. Pierce received copies of the minutes of the executive committee, and controlled the company through action taken there.

Q. State whether or not during the time you have been with the Waters Pierce Oil Company in the different offices that you have detailed, the Standard Oil Company,—I mean by that the one known as the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey—or any other Standard Oil Company, or the Standard Oil people, have anything to do with the general management of the business and affairs of the company, and the fixing of prices of its commodities?

A. You want a full answer, I presume.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. The Standard Oil Company, as a large stockholder in the company, received currently, from time to time, reports to which a stockholder was entitled. During my connection with the company they have, from time to time, offered suggestions in line with their ideas, as to the way the company should be managed, or in the way prices should be adjusted. Those were merely incidental, from time to time. Where their suggestions met with the management's views, they were sometimes followed. In the majority of cases they were not followed. They had nothing to do directly with the fixing of prices or controlling of the business in any manner, shape nor form.

Q. How was it prior to Mr. Tinsley coming to St. Louis, and subsequent to his departure from St. Louis?

A. Prior to Mr. Tinsley coming to St. Louis, it was as I have stated already. While Mr. Tinsley was there, I was not actively in touch with the management and I don't know. Since Mr. Tinsley left, it has been controlled entirely as stated.

1582 Q. You had nothing to do, as you have stated, with fixing the prices while Mr. Tinsley was here?

A. Nothing whatever, excepting during such period as Mr. Tinsley's stay here as the executive committee was in session, which was in in August, if I remember correctly, 1904—about three months. It was here in the latter part of April, May, June and July, and I left here on the 31st of July for the east. For those three months I had a great deal to do with the fixing of prices, through my position as a member of the executive committee.

Q. Well, how were the prices, that is the prices of the company fixed, up to the time of the dissolution of the executive committee?

A. By a sub-committee and finally by the executive committee.

Q. You say after that date, and until Mr. Tinsley left here, you don't know how the prices were fixed?

A. I do not.

Q. During that time, you yourself had no voice in the fixing of the prices?

A. None whatever.

Q. From the time the company was organized in 1900 down to the time that Mr. Tinsley came to St. Louis to take the position of vice-president, who was it that directed and carried out the general business policy of the company?

A. Mr. H. C. Pierce.

Q. Through the officers of the company, of course?

A. Through the officers of the company.

Q. Who was it after Mr. Tinsley left here?

A. Mr. H. C. Pierce.

Q. During the time Mr. Tinsley was here as vice-president, Mr. Andrew M. Finlay was the president and executive head of the company?

A. Yes, sir.

1583 Q. Mr. Andrew M. Finlay is a brother-in-law of H. C. Pierce, is he not?

A. Mrs. Pierce was his sister.

Q. Your mother was Andrew M. Finlay's sister?

A. My mother was Andrew M. Finlay's sister, yes, sir.

Q. Now, you speak of reports and information being given to the Standard Oil people. The Standard Oil Company of 26 Broadway, New York. Why were those reports—why was that information given, as you have understood it?

A. I have understood, without knowing, except through the testimony as it was presented through the Missouri case, that the Standard Oil Company owned about two-thirds of the stock of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, and as such owners I have always understood that the Standard Oil Company had the right to ask for such statements as a two-thirds stockholder or a majority stockholder would be entitled to, and for that reason statements were sent to them at their request.

Judge STEDMAN: Now, the next question refers to a letter; I don't see that letter.

Mr. ALLEN: The letter is attached. It is addressed to Mr. Backus, the controller of the company. It is attached to the deposition; it is defendant's Exhibit B.

Q. Have you refreshed your memory in regard to the manner in which deliveries were made by the Waters Pierce Oil Company for marine oils, etc., on account of the Standard Oil Company, and also in connection with contracts similar to the one that existed between the Central Coal & Coke Company and the Standard Oil Company?

A. I have. I recalled this morning, more or less indefinitely, regarding the marine oil prices, because that was a detail merely of the business. In general, they were fixed by the lubricating 1584 department upon instructions from myself. It was sometime back and I don't recall that specifically. I have since looked that up,—I find in December—December 6, 1905, if I recollect correctly, I have a copy of a letter in my book which I wrote the controller's department, fixing the price at which they have been billed.

Q. When was it you wrote that letter?

A. May I refer to the copy?

Q. Yes, to refresh your memory.

A. I think it was December 6, 1905. (After reference to paper.) Yes, it was, that is correct.

Q. Who was the letter addressed to?

A. To the controller at that time of the company.

Q. Have you made search for the original of that copy?

A. I have made search, and we have not yet located it. The time was short, and we made a great many changes in our filing space since this letter was written.

Q. And you found this letter since the adjournment for recess?

A. Yes, in my letter book.

Q. You remember the writing or dictating of that letter?

A. I remember it now. I remembered it in general this morning—that I had dictated a letter fixing the marine oil prices, but I could not recall specifically just when it was.

Q. That is a carbon of the original letter that you dictated, is it?

A. Yes; it was taken from my personal letter book.

Q. Can you refer to that and refresh your memory as to the manner in which those sales were made, beginning at the date of that letter, and how they have been made since?

Mr. ALLEN (not in this trial, but in record being read): I will agree that that letter may be introduced, the same as the original.

1585 (The letter referred to is marked "Defendant's Exhibit C, F. H. S." and is attached as an exhibit to the deposition of this witness, and it is agreed that it may be used as the original).

DECEMBER 6TH, 1905.

Marine Oil Prices.

Mr. R. B. Backus, Controller.

DEAR SIR: Effective December 1st, 1905, you will please charge the Standard Oil Company Marine Oil Department prices as below for all our deliveries to their customers.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Vacuum No. 1, Larine Engine | 36½ cts. | per gallon. |
| Vacuum Dark Marine Cylinder | 44½ cts. | " " |
| Vacuum Arctic Engine | 39½ cts. | " " |
| Vacuum Colza Burning Oil | 49½ cts. | " " |
| Vacuum Sea Oil | 27 cts. | " " |
| S. and F. Heavy Red Star Engine | 36 cts. | " " |
| Tunnel Bearing Grease | 10 cts. | " " |
| Mineral Seal | Market price to jobbers. | |
| Refined Oil | Market price to jobbers. | |

The above, you understand, supersedes former Vice President R. P. Tinsley's instructions to you of May 5th last.

(Signed) —— ——, President.

Q. Now, go on and state, your memory being refreshed, just how the matter is handled, and has been handled, since you wrote that letter?

A. After I wrote that letter?

Q. Yes.

A. The lubricating department received requisitions from time to time from the Standard Oil Company's marine department, to deliver to certain vessels certain marine oils. This was only at Galveston; that is the only point at which we handled marine 1586 oils—Galveston, Texas; they would state when the vessels would be lying at the port and the amount of oil that they would need. Those were vessels that the Standard Oil had contracts for the sale of marine oils to. We would make deliveries there, through our lubricating department, of the oils requested, and bill those oils against the Standard Oil Company, at the prices which I have named in this letter, which I have subsequently adjusted from time to time, the Standard Oil Company paying us in accordance.

Q. Then the matter of the price at which you delivered those oils is fixed by agreement between you and the Standard Oil Company? That is, you supplied the oil to the Standard Oil Company?

A. Yes, but those prices are not fixed by the agreement; the agreement is that we will supply the oil at the prices which we adjust from time to time here.

Q. You have nothing to do then, the Waters Pierce Oil Company has nothing to do, with the price that the Standard Oil Company charges the vessels?

A. Nothing whatever; we don't even know what price they are charging. That is a matter between the Standard Oil Company and the company that had this contract.

Q. You don't know anything about the terms of the contract as between the Standard Oil Company and the vessel owner?

A. Nothing at all.

Judge STEDMAN: Now, turn to page 221; the testimony of Andrew M. Finlay.

Q. You are vice-president of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. Vice-president of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, yes, sir.

Q. You are Mr. H. C. Pierce's brother-in-law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you first become associated with Mr. Pierce in the oil business?

1587 A. In 1878.

Q. Was that before or after the former Waters Pierce Oil Company was incorporated? It was incorporated in 1878?

A. It was incorporated in 1878, and I think I came with them the month it was incorporated.

Q. Where were you located first? What was your position?

A. I was manager at Marshall, Texas, in charge of what was known as the Marshall Division at that time.

Q. How long did you continue there?

A. I was there for three years.

Q. Then where did you go?

A. To Mexico.

Q. Old Mexico?

A. City of Mexico.

Q. What was your position there?

A. I went there with a brother, who died in the City of Mexico, and I organized the business of the Waters Pierce Oil Company there.

Q. How long did you remain there?

A. I was there only five months.

Q. Then where did you go?

A. I was called back and placed in charge of what was then called the Coast Division, with headquarters at Galveston, Texas, as manager.

Q. How long did you remain there?

A. Nine years, I think.

Q. In charge of that division?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And, then, what position were you transferred to?

A. I was called to St. Louis, as superintendent of divisions, all divisions, with headquarters at St. Louis.

Q. When was that?

A. That was twenty years ago this coming June.

1588 Q. That would be 1887?

A. 1887.

Q. How long did you occupy that position?

A. Until I was elected vice-president. I don't recollect the exact date.

Q. Of the old company?

A. Yes, of the old company.

Q. You continued as vice-president of the old company down to the date of its dissolution in May, 1900, with a short——

A. With a short period while I was president, from February, I think, until the dissolution of the old company.

Q. You were made president of the old company in February, and it was dissolved in the following May?

A. Dissolved the following May, yes, sir.

Q. While you were vice-president of the old company, you were general manager, were you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And had charge of the business details of the company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Especially the equipment department and the marketing?

A. Yes, construction, as well.

Q. Then when the new company was organized you were made vice-president under Mr. Pierce as president?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you continued as vice-president down to February, 1904, when you were made president?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You continued, then, as president until 1904, when Mr. C. A. Pierce became president, and you were made the vice-president?

A. Yes, sir.

1589 Q. Ever since the organization of the new company you have had direction, and supervising control over the marketing department, have you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know the different stations or agencies in Texas that were established from time to time by the old company, since its organization?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I don't want you to detail just how many, or when the new or increased stations were established, but I would like to have you state in a general way, as concisely as you can, the increase in the number of agencies in Texas and the increase in the volume of business, beginning with the time you went to Galveston, as manager of that division.

A. You mean as to the number of stations increased?

Q. Yes, agencies.

A. The growth has been rapid, since I went first to Galveston. It was then comparatively a small division. We have been continuously adding to the equipment and construction and everything in connection with the handling of the business ever since then. There was no stop, it is going on now, just the same as ever.

Q. You have had from time to time and from year to year, to meet the requirements of the new business, established new agencies—bulk stations, and adding tank wagons, and cans and iron barrels, and means of convenient and economical handling of oil?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many tank cars did the company own or operate when you first became division manager at Galveston?

A. About fifty.

Q. Has that number increased?

A. It has increased, now.

1590 Q. How was the increase; was it all done gradually?

A. It has been gradual.

Q. From year to year?

A. From year to year.

Q. How many tank cars does the company own and operate at this time?

A. We own and operate in the neighborhood of four hundred.

Q. Is that altogether in the United States territory?

A. Yes, the United States and Mexico together.

Q. How many does it own and operate in Mexico?

A. Seventy-five to a hundred.

Q. It owns and operates in its United States territory about three hundred tank cars?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they are in constant use?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Used in Texas?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. More than any other State, are they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What per cent. of the refined oil and gasoline sold by the Waters Pierce Oil Company is shipped in the tank cars?

A. I should say eighty per cent., or possibly eighty-five.

Q. Have you any idea of the number of tank stations in Texas at the time you went to Galveston as manager of that division?

A. If you will give me a little time to think of it, I will figure it out for you. I think there were not more than ten; I know I could count them on my fingers' ends.

Q. Do you remember the capacity—can you state approximately the capacity of the tanks at that time?

A. Fifteen hundred to two thousand barrels altogether.

1591 Q. Has that increased since?

A. Tremendously.

Q. Has that increased in a sudden or a gradual way?

A. Gradually; some years larger than others.

Q. How many tank or bulk stations have you in the State of Texas now?

A. I suppose a hundred and fifty.

Q. You know the capacity of those stations, or would that be merely a guess.

A. It would be merely guesswork, because a tank station may be from one to ten tanks, whereas in the early days if we had one tank, that was all.

Q. Well, the increase in tank wagons and cans for deliveries, etc., has been about the same ratio as the increase in tankage, and the number of stations?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Finlay, since the organization of the present company who has managed and controlled the business and affairs of the company, in an executive way, I mean?

A. Mr. Pierce.

Q. H. C. Pierce?

A. H. C. Pierce.

Q. What have you had to do with it?

A. I have been general manager, and took a very large part in the management under Mr. Pierce,—carrying out his instructions—the details of his instructions.

Q. You had other associate officers in the management?

A. Oh, of course, we had others during that time—doing their part of the work.

Q. I am speaking now of the present company?

A. Yes, sir.

1592 Q. Who has fixed the prices at which the company sold its oil to the trade?

A. We have here in the St. Louis office,—Mr. Ackert and myself, Mr. Pierce and Mr. C. A. Pierce.

Q. Do you remember when Mr. Tinsley came to the home office to assume the duties of vice-president?

A. Perfectly.

Q. Do you remember when he left?

A. Perfectly.

Q. You, during that time, were president of the company, were you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And during that interval who controlled the policy and business of the company, the business policy and affairs?

A. Mr. Tinsley attempted to interfere a good deal, but I was managing, and he was interfering against my objections.

Q. And, during the entire time, endeavored to perform your duties as president?

A. As president, yes, sir.

Q. And to run the company in an independent way?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who during that time, fixed the prices at which the company sold its oil to the trade?

A. Mr. Ackert, Mr. Tinsley and myself.

Q. Did any one of you do it, or did you act together?

A. We acted together.

Q. State whether or not the company was even during that time run as an independent concern?

A. It was.
Q. And in what way did Mr. Tinsley interfere or attempt to interfere?
1593 A. He would insist on things being done that I did not think was to the interest of the company, the Waters Pierce Oil Company. He was insisting on discharging old and tried employees and putting in new men, which was not to the interest of the company. He made himself generally disagreeable to me,—so much so that his continual nagging at me broke me down completely and I had to leave for Europe for a trip to be gone three or four months, on a day's notice, by order of my doctor.
Q. That was two months that you were away?
A. I was away from here three months. I sailed on the 4th of March, and returned to St. Louis about the first part of June.
Q. Who was general manager during that time, if you know?
A. Mr. Tinsley was the vice-president; Mr. Ackert was general manager.
Q. He remained as general manager?
A. He remained as general manager while I was away.
Q. What is Mr. Ackert's relation to Mr. H. C. Pierce?
A. Cousin.
Q. Who is Stephen Johnson?
A. A brother-in-law of Mr. Pierce.
Q. He was manager of the lubricating department of the present company, from the time of its organization down to what time?
A. When he was retired recently. Wasn't it the latter part of last year?
Q. He retired on account of age?
A. On account of age, and his health.
Q. He was succeeded by whom?
A. Succeeded by Mr. C. L. Harris.

Judge STEDMAN: Now, on page 259.

Q. Mr. Finlay, when Mr. McNall was first employed by the Waters Pierce Oil Company, he had his office at No. 26 Broad-1594 way, New York City, did he?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Established his office there?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. All communications were addressed to him at that number?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know when the change was made from 26 Broadway to 75 New Street?
A. I don't recollect the date.
Q. In 1904, was it?
A. I think it was about that time.
Q. Did you or the company have anything to do with the change, or know anything about it?
A. No, except a request from Mr. McNall to address all mail to him in the future to 75 New Street.
Q. Don't you recollect, Mr. Finlay, when you received that letter from Mr. McNall that you referred that to the general counsel of the company, who advised against any such change being made?

A. I remember that.

Q. You advised Mr. McNall of the decision of the general counsel of the company, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Notwithstanding, Mr. McNall insisted on having his mail addressed to that number?

A. Yes, sir.

Judge STEDMAN: Now, page 262.

Q. You know while you were president of the present company, that the books and accounts of the Company were audited from time to time by auditors sent here by Mr. Wade Hampton, of New York?

A. Yes, sir.

1595 Judge STEDMAN: We offer the deposition of S. K. WHEELER, page 162.

Q. What is your age?

A. Forty.

Q. What is your occupation?

A. Assistant general manager of the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Q. Who is the general manager at this time?

A. C. P. Ackert.

Q. Where were you first employed by the Waters Pierce Oil Company, and in what capacity?

A. In May, 1902, in charge of the fuel oil business at Beaumont.

Q. How long were you in that employment?

A. One, year, until May, 1903.

Q. You severed your connection at that time with the company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, when were you again employed?

A. In November, 1903.

Q. In what capacity?

A. As a general representative of the home office.

Q. Have you continued in that employment down to the present time?

A. Well, I continued in that employment until June, 1905; since June, 1905, to date I have been assistant general manager.

Q. From November, 1903, until June, 1905, what were your duties?

A. I visited the more important agencies in Texas.

Q. You visited the more important agencies in Texas?

A. Yes, sir, in Texas, and looked into the local conditions, and made such improvements as conditions seemed to justify.

Q. In the plants?

A. Yes, sir, in the plants and methods of doing business.

Q. In the work of the agents?

A. Yes, sir.

1596 Q. Do you recall now how often that occurred?

A. During the time that I was president?

Q. Yes, since the organization of the new company?
A. It would be, I guess, four or five times, possibly may be less.
Q. They did not come here oftener than once a year, or eighteen months, or two years, did they?
A. No, sir, I think more likely a year and a half or two years.
Q. And they made a general audit of all the books and accounts of the company covering the period beginning at the date of their last audit and running up to the date of the audit that you were making currently?
A. Yes sir.
Q. That was not done at the instance of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. Never.
Q. Why did you concede to him the right and privilege to do that, Mr. Finlay, as president of the company?
A. They came, if I remember, with a letter from Mr. McNall.
Q. It was done for the information of the majority of the stockholders?
A. Certainly.
Q. It had no relation to the management or control of the business of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, had it?
A. None whatever.
Q. Well, what relation had it to the management and control of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, or to the Standard Oil Company or the Standard Oil people?
A. It had no relation to the management; it simply showed that the books and accounts were in a proper condition and correct.
Q. For the information of whom?
A. For the information of the majority of the stockholders in New York.

1597 Q. And since you were transferred to the home office here, what have been your duties?

A. A general oversight, under Mr. Ackert, of the marketing of all our products.
Q. In Texas?
A. In Texas.
Q. Also in the other divisions in which the company does business?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You know the general organization of the company's business, do you not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In these divisions?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. State what it is, briefly.
A. The chief of division is known as manager.
Q. Well, it is divided, there are territorial limits in which the company does business, divided into what is called divisions?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. There is the Missouri division and the Arkansas divisions?

A. Yes, East Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Central Texas, and South Texas division.

Q. And the Republic of Mexico is a division by itself?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What comprises the East Texas division?

A. The East Texas division comprises a portion of the State of Louisiana and the northeastern portion of the State of Texas.

Q. Where are the headquarters of that division?

A. At Shreveport, Louisiana.

Q. Who is the division manager?

A. J. H. Littlefield.

1598 Q. Where was the division headquarters prior to this transfer to Shreveport?

A. Marshall, Texas.

Q. When was the change made?

A. In June, 1906.

Q. What comprises the South Texas Division?

A. The South Texas division takes in the southern part of Texas.

Q. Where are the headquarters?

A. At Houston.

Q. Who is division manager?

A. Louis Fries.

Q. What comprises the Central Texas division?

A. The Central Texas division comprises the central and northern portion, the portion of the western part of the State.

Q. Who is the division manager of that?

A. W. C. Cahoon, at Dallas, Texas.

Q. What is the Oklahoma division?

A. The Oklahoma division comprises Oklahoma and Indian Territory and some little part of the Panhandle of Texas.

Q. Where are the division headquarters?

A. Oklahoma City.

Q. Who is the division manager?

A. A. P. Ebie.

Q. The division headquarters used to be at Denison?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was it transferred to Oklahoma City?

A. I think it was in June in 1905.

Q. Do you know why the transfer was made?

A. Well, to locate their headquarters more centrally.

Q. That is the business in Oklahoma north of Denison had increased to such an extent that it was a good business policy 1599 to locate the headquarters at Oklahoma City?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you state who the division manager was?

A. Yes, sir, Mr. Ebie.

Q. Now, the company has a large number of agencies in each of these several divisions of Texas that you have spoken of, have they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom do the agents report? Under whose direction or supervision do they carry on the company's business at the different agencies?

A. They report to the division manager and work under his instructions.

Q. That is to the division manager——?

A. In the division in which they are located.

Q. Under whose supervision or direction do the division managers work and operate? To whom do they report?

A. They report to the general manager. Work under his direction.

Q. The general manager is located at the home office of the company in St. Louis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long has the organization you speak of continued, to your knowledge? That was the case when you went into the company first, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir, that was the same organization.

Q. You have visited in your employment, in the employment of the company, the agencies, have you not?

A. No. Well, most of the important agencies.

Q. Your agencies consist of what is known to the company as the tank wagon stations, tank can agencies and commission agencies, do they not?

1600 A. Yes, in order to divide the agencies into different headings of salaries and commission; that depends upon the manner in which the agents are paid. We subdivide the agencies into two headings, being bulk agencies where oil is delivered in bulk, and others.

Q. What do you mean by bulk agencies,—oil delivered in bulk?

A. Bulk agencies are where they maintain teams and tank wagons or can wagons, and deliver the oil in bulk to the merchants.

Q. That is, you have storage tanks, large storage tanks in which the oil is delivered from the tanks, cars, and is distributed from those agencies to the customers of the company through the tank wagons and cans?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know or can you state from recollection the number of agencies in the State of Texas that the company has?

A. It has about 216 agencies.

Q. Practically the company has agencies of one kind or another all over the country—in every county and town of any consequence, in the State of Texas?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many bulk agencies are there at which the company has storage tanks in which it handles the oil in bulk?

A. One hundred and ninety-two, I believe.

Q. Can you mention the particular ones?

A. Dallas, Sherman, Denison, Gainesville, Fort Worth, Waco, Houston, Galveston, Beaumont, San Antonio, Austin, El Paso, Eagle Pass, Laredo, Brownsville, Corpus Christi, Bryan, Mineral Wells, Jacksonville, Bluffton, San Angelo, Brownwood, Calvert, Marshall, Rutherford, Seymour, Wichita Falls, Amarillo, Belton, Temple, San Augustine, Huntsville, Palestine, and others.

Q. And others?

A. Yes, sir.

1601 Q. Now, the particular commodity dealt in by the company and handled at these bulk agencies in bulk, is refined oil and gasoline?

A. Refined oil and gasoline,—stove gasoline and engine naphtha.

Q. Any others? Do you handle any lubricating oils in bulk in Texas?

A. At some of the agencies, at some of the larger agencies.

Q. Do you handle any fuel oil in bulk?

A. No fuel oil; we handle at the larger agencies lubricating oils and turpentine and linseed oil, in bulk.

Q. How are the oils that you mention shipped to those bulk agencies or stations?

A. They are shipped in tank cars and unloaded into storage tanks.

Q. Your company has storage tanks for unloading it in that way, at all of the bulk stations you have mentioned or which you have enumerated, and others, in addition?

A. Well, we do not carry lubricating oil, linseed oil or turpentine in a great many, but the majority.

Q. Well, take refined oils, gasoline and engine naphtha. How are the illuminating oils and gasoline distributed from those bulk stations to the retail trade—to the customers of the company? Just give the details in a general way.

A. To the local merchants and nearby towns, the deliveries are made in either tank wagons or can wagons, and the merchant is delivered whatever quantity that he wants, whether large or small,——

Q. What do you mean by a tank wagon?

A. A tank wagon is a tank, a steel tank.

Q. But on wheels, mounted on wheels?

A. Mounted on wheels, which has compartments to hold refined oil and gasoline.

Q. All of them have separate compartments for that?

A. They have separate compartments for each, yes, sir.

1602 Q. Some of them you use for gasoline alone? That is, some have not the compartment, have they? Some of them have two compartments, and some have three. All the compartments are used for either refined oil or gasoline, as the trade requires?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. These wagons you move around with horses?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The wagon is pulled direct from the storage tank with oil or gasoline to be delivered to the customer directly into the tanks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is driven to the customer's place of business, and it has convenient facilities for drawing the oil from the tanks—what are the facilities, buckets?

A. Five gallon buckets.

Q. In that way are the deliveries made to the customer?

A. The driver carries the buckets to the storage tanks of the customers and empties them in.

Q. And the customer, as a rule, is supplied with what you call storage tanks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What are the capacities of those tanks?

A. Usually about sixty gallons.

Q. Those are located in the stores of the retail dealers, are they?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The driver drives up to the store and finds out what the customer wants and takes the order and fills the order by drawing the fluid from the tanks, or from the wagon, into the bucket?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Carrying the bucket into the store, he dumps it into the store tank?

1603 A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, those store tanks are kept in a way so that the retail dealer can readily draw out, can conveniently draw out whatever quantity the customer may want?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the oil passes from the refinery—that is, the oil handled by the company—passes from the refinery to a car tank, and from the car tank to the bulk station of the Waters Pierce Oil Company in Texas, and is transferred from the car tank into one of the bulk tanks of the company, stationed at Texas, and transferred from there into the tank wagon and taken from there to the purchaser's store,—it is transferred from the tank wagon by the buckets, into the customer's store tank and then the retail dealer or customer draws from that same tank into the vessel or receptacle of the purchaser,—consumer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is all handled in bulk?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What percentage of the oil and gasoline sold by the Waters Pierce Oil Company in Texas are handled in that way?

A. I should say about seventy per cent.

Q. Now, has the company any other means or facilities in Texas for handling oils and gasoline in bulk? You have cans, I suppose.

A. Yes, we have ten gallon cans.

Q. How are they handled?

A. Wagons with a specially prepared bed used, which usually hold 30 ten-gallon cans; those are used for deliveries of this kind.

Q. Those cans are made like milk cans, are they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they filled from the storage tank, and the driver empties then directly into the merchants' store tank?

1604 A. Yes, sir.

Q. He drives to the customer, retail dealer and transfers the contents of the can into the retail dealer's store tank?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are those cans used by the company at the stations where tank wagons are used?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they used also at the stations where the company has no tank wagons?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What area has any one agency to those tank wagons or those can deliveries cover? That is, deliveries are not made alone in the town in which the company is located, are they?

A. No, they go to points fifteen and twenty miles from the agencies.

Q. That is, they circle around the agencies fifteen or twenty miles?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And deliveries by tank wagons and cans are made in that way?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, is it not a fact that practically the company covers the entire area of Texas by deliveries of that character?

A. Yes,—well I don't know as I can make it quite as broad as that.

Q. Well, the thickly settled district?

A. The thickly settled district, yes, sir. That is so, yes, sir.

Q. Wherever the population is dense enough to justify deliveries in that way?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, how is the business done at agencies and stations in the State in which you had no bulk tank, no facilities to make 1605 bulk deliveries beyond the reach of deliveries from the bulk station?

A. Those agencies are supplied with oil and gasoline in iron barrels shipped from the nearest and most economical agency close by?

Q. That is, in iron barrels?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, you have agencies at that point, or warehouse, or place for keeping the stuff in iron barrels?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you keep the stock of oils and gasoline in the iron barrels at such stations for delivery?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those iron barrels are shipped to such stations from time to time from the most convenient and adjacent bulk stations?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are billed at the bulk station and shipped in that way?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How are the deliveries made to the retail trade, in iron barrels?

A. Our agent has an iron barrel which is drayed to the merchant's place of business, and it is unloaded wherever he designates.

Q. How is the contents of that barrel handled, by the retail merchant?

A. In some instances the merchant will use the barrel for storage purposes.

Q. He draws from that?

A. He draws from the iron barrel. In other instances, where he has store tanks, it is emptied from the iron barrel direct into the store tank.

Q. That is, where the tank—these iron barrels all belong to the company, and are returned by the purchaser when they are emptied?

1606 A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any other way in which the company handles and distributes its oils and gasoline in Texas? Do you use wooden barrels, or cans, or cases?

A. Yes, deliveries are made in wooden barrels also, and in cases, holding two five-gallon cans.

Q. At what stations, what kind of stations are deliveries generally made in wooden barrels and five-gallon cans?

A. Well, the demand for the oil in five-gallon cans is restricted pretty well to the western part of the State. In the more thickly populated parts of Texas they take their oils there in bulk, either that way or iron barrels.

Q. This other goes to localities where the population is not dense or large enough to justify sending in larger quantities, and the distances are so great as not to justify the deliveries in bulk through tank wagons or cans, or the iron barrels, is that the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in these different ways you practically reach every locality in the State of Texas?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Making sales and deliveries of oil in one way and another, as you have indicated?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In those localities?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that the method and system of doing business by the company when you were employed by it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the general manager's department?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how many stations or agencies the com-

1607 pany has in Texas, of which it owns its plants in fee?

A. No, sir, I don't.

Q. You don't know the capacity of the tankage in the State either, do you?

A. We have 444 storage tanks, aggregating a capacity of something over five million.

Q. That is 444 storage tanks? Those are distributed all over the State?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the bulk stations which you have mentioned, and elsewhere?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What, if anything, have you had to do with the fixing of prices at which the company has sold oil in Texas, since you went into the general manager's office?

A. The prices are all made by the general manager.

Q. You have had a great deal to do with carrying on the correspondence relative to prices, have you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As assistant to the general manager?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not a fact that the general manager, or you, representing him, always notified the agents where oils were being sold——?

A. Notified the manager, and the manager notified the agent.

Q. The manager of the division?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those matters are handled by directions from the General Manager's office to the managers of the divisions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has anybody else besides the manager, the General Manager, ever dictated or had anything to do with the fixing of prices at which the company sells oil in Texas, while you have been in the general manager's office?

1608 A. No. The price is usually determined by the general manager through consultation with other officials of the company.

Judge STEDMAN: Now, on page 190, last question.

Q. Go on and state then what prices those competitors have sold corresponding quantities of oil at, as compared to the prices at which the same qualities of oil are sold and have been sold by the Waters Pierce Oil Company in Texas?

A. As a general proposition, they sell their oils at the same prices that we do. In cases where they are not able to sell their oils for the same prices that we are asking for ours, they will offer a lower price as an inducement to the trade.

Q. And when they do that, what action has the company been in the habit of taking?

A. Of meeting the prices, if we thought it necessary to do so. In a great many cases the prices are not met.

Q. According to your observations and experience gathered during the time that you have occupied your present position with the company, what is the fact, so far as the obtaining of trade or selling of oil is concerned, or facilities which the company has in Texas for selling the oils, as compared with the facilities which its competitors have?

A. The Waters Pierce Oil Company have very superior facilities, while those of the competitors are very meager.

Q. And what is the fact as to the advantage that the company has in those superior facilities?

A. The advantage is that the Waters Pierce Oil Company is able to supply the oils to the trade in a manner that is very satisfactory to the trade, keeping them supplied at all times with any kinds of oil at any time of the day.

Q. And it supplies its customers promptly?
A. Yes, sir.
1609 Q. And in a clean, convenient way?
A. Yes, sir.

Judge STEDMAN: I believe that is all.

C. W. CAHOON, recalled by defendant, testified as follows:

Direct examination.

(By Mr. ODELL:)

Q. I wish you would look at that sign, Mr. Cahoon. (Counsel holds up a wooden sign before witness and jury.) Are you familiar with that sign, Mr. Cahoon?
A. I have seen it before, yes, sir.
Q. Where?
A. In Dallas.
Q. Who was it used by there?
A. A. M. Clem.
Q. During what time?
A. I don't know the exact date it was placed on his office, but sometime early in 1900, as I recall it.
Q. I wish you would hold it up so the Jury can see it, Mr. Cahoon.

(Witness holds sign up before Jury.)

That is all.

Cross examination.

(By Mr. BATTS:)

Q. When was the first time you saw that on Mr. Clem's office, you say this was on Mr. Clem's office?
A. Yes, sir, on Mr. Clem's office.
1610 Q. When was that?
A. I don't recall when I first saw it.
Q. The office down on the creek?
A. No, the office was in quite an elevated place.
Q. How far from the street railroad?
A. One hundred yards, I should say; possibly two hundred.
Q. One or two hundred yards from the railroad street?
A. The wagons drove up right in front of the office, though.
Q. Company wagons?
A. Company wagons and country wagons; they went to the plant for oil.
Q. You delivered all the oil, didn't you?
A. I had nothing to do with that.
Q. You didn't have anything to do with that?
A. With Mr. Clem's business?
Q. No, you were the manager there at Dallas?
A. Not when this sign was put up first.
Q. You weren't manager then?
A. No, sir.

Q. Well, was it the course of business for deliveries to be made both by Mr. Clem and by the other plant of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. We were making tank wagon deliveries, and I presume he was doing it also.

Q. Wasn't any occasion for anybody to go there with wagons?

A. I don't know; but I had a great many people come there for barrels.

Q. You don't know of any cases——

A. I don't know of any specific case.

Q. That wasn't the ordinary course of business?

A. Yes, sir, great many customers came in from the coun-

1611 try for iron barrels, iron barreled oil.

Q. Is that the ordinary method of putting up signs of the Waters Pierce Oil Company. For instance, "C. W. Cahoon" in big letters; "Agent of the Waters Pierce Oil Company," in little letters?

A. At my office in Dallas, if I remember correctly, the lettering of the Waters Pierce Oil Company and my name are about the same size.

Q. You have got your name on it, then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Waters Pierce Oil Company, A. W. Clem, Agent,—I mean—C. W. Cahoon, Agent"?

A. C. W. Cahoon, Manager, yes, sir.

Q. Now, those signs are made at St. Louis, are they?

A. My sign is painted on the marble slab at the entrance of the office in the hall.

Q. That is the up-town office?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, down at the warehouse,—is it "C. W. Cahoon, Agent for the Waters Pierce Oil Company"?

A. I don't recall a sign on the down-town office.

Q. No sign down there?

A. Not that I recall, no, sir.

Q. This sign was painted in St. Louis, wasn't it?

A. I don't know where it was painted.

Q. You don't know about that. Now, the marble slab you are talking about is the directory in the building, directory of the building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Put there by you or by the owners of the building?

A. Put there by the owners of the building.

1612 Q. Now, you say on your warehouse there is no sign at all?

A. At our warehouse there is no sign that I recall.

Q. There is no sign on the warehouse then, with your name on it?

A. No, sir.

Q. I will ask you if it isn't a fact that at the different agencies, that whatever sign is put up is "Waters Pierce Oil Company"?

A. As I recall it, yes, sir.

Q. And that is all?

A. Yes, sir. Over half of the warehouses have signs, however.

Q. Do you know any reason why this sign was sent down there on the creek and put up?

A. I do not, unless it was to indicate to the public that it was the property of the Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Q. Couldn't that have been better accomplished if the larger letters had been used in the "Waters Pierce Oil Company" rather than the "A. W. Clem"?

A. I wouldn't think so, no, sir.

Q. You wouldn't think so? Now, as compared with the words "Waters Pierce Oil Company," what is the difference in the size of the letters and the letters "A. W. Clem"? (Shows sign to witness.)

A. I should say "A. W. Clem" is about twice the size.

Q. About twice the size; and the words, "Agent of the" in still smaller letters than the "Waters Pierce Oil Company"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the only case you know of where the name of the agent of the Waters Pierce Oil Company is put up on an agency of the company?

A. I don't recall any other instances where local agents——

Q. Don't recall any other instances?

A. No, sir, my name, however, is as I stated, on the slab at the office, and at that time Mr. Clem was in very much the same position I am.

1613 Q. Well, as I understand you, that the name at your office—you are in an office building there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there are a number of other people who have offices there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the owner of the building has caused the name of each one of those persons having an office to be put on a directory?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the way your name is there?

A. Our sign, however, covers somewhat more space than the others, because we occupy more space in the building.

Q. Because you occupy more space the owner gave you a bigger sign?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you had no sign at all painted by the Waters Pierce Oil Company, or through instructions from the Waters Pierce Oil Company, at Dallas?

A. At my up-town office. I said at the warehouse we have a very large sign.

Q. Waters Pierce Oil Company, without mentioning your name?

A. "Waters Pierce Company" and a number of the brands of goods we handle.

Q. Without your name at all?

A. My name doesn't appear on it, no, sir. Sign was painted before I became manager.

Q. Well, was the name of the other manager put on it?

A. The name of the other manager was on the office at the time.

Q. But I am talking about your warehouse?
A. Not that I recall, no, sir.

Redirect examination.

(By Mr. ODELL:)

Q. State whether or not Mr. Clem's warehouse and office
1614 was all together.
A. Just a few feet apart, yes, sir.

LOUIS FRIES, recalled by defendant, testified as follows:

Direct examination.

(By Mr. ODELL:)

Q. Your name is Louis Fries?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where do you live, Mr. Fries?
A. In Houston.
Q. Texas?
A. Texas.
Q. How long have you resided in this State?
A. Very nearly fifty-five years.
Q. How old are you, Mr. Fries?
A. Nearly fifty-five years.
Q. In what part of the State were you born and raised?
A. In San Antonio; raised in San Antonio and west of San Antonio.
Q. You are now in the employ of the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. I am.
Q. In what business were you engaged prior to the time of entering their employment, Mr. Fries?
A. Well, I was in the gin business in San Antonio; as clerk with Charley Hummel; I was a clerk in the dry goods business; I was bookkeeper and cashier of an oil mill; I was a stockman for about ten years; I farmed for seven years; and I did several other things.
Q. When did you commence working for the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. It will be twenty years on the 15th of August of this year.
1615 Q. In what capacity did you first enter their employ?
A. As agent.
Q. At what place?
A. At Laredo, Texas.
Q. How long did you serve in that capacity?
A. About three years; three years and three months.
Q. To what point were you then transferred?
A. San Antonio, Texas.
Q. In what capacity there?
A. As agent, local agent.
Q. Covering what period of time?

A. I was local agent about three years.
Q. In what capacity did you next serve them?
A. As assistant manager.
Q. Where?
A. San Antonio.
Q. For about how long?
A. About one year, about twelve months.
Q. During the twelve months that you have mentioned, Mr. Fries, when you were assistant to the manager, or assistant manager,—twelve months you stated.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where was the division headquarters of the company located then?
A. At Galveston.
Q. Well, in what capacity did you next serve them?
A. I was made manager with headquarters at San Antonio.
Q. How long did you serve them in that capacity?
A. I am still with them as manager.
Q. At what point?,
A. Houston, Texas. I was transferred from San Antonio in September, 1903.

1616 Q. Your headquarters were changed, were they?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Mr. Fries, do you know Roy Campbell?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long have you known him?
A. Well, I have known him since he came to Texas. I don't remember exactly how long that is.
Q. Where did he come from?
A. His home is in Ohio
Q. Where did you know him, Mr. Fries?
A. I knew him in San Antonio.
Q. What business was he engaged in there?
A. Well, he went into the oil business; that is where I became acquainted with him; he went in as a retailer of oil.
Q. About when, Mr. Fries?
A. I can only say about.
Q. Well, do the best you can.
A. I think it must have been about '94.
Q. You remember the circumstances of the Waters Pierce Oil Company—the then Waters Pierce Oil Company, buying him out?
A. I remember the company buying him out, yes, sir.
Q. Well, about how long had he been engaged in business when they bought him out?
A. Well, he and a man by the name of Scover were partners for about six months; I think they were in business—or Roy, after he bought him out, was in business about a year or year and a half.
Q. During that time what were your relations with Campbell with reference to being friendly or intimate or otherwise?
A. We were very intimate; I think he was about the most intimate friend I had, Roy Campbell.

1617 Q. Now, at that time, in what capacity were you serving the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. As agent.

Q. State whether or not you associated much or little together?

A. Much.

Q. After the company bought him out, Mr. Fries, what did he then do?

A. He operated the retail department at San Antonio for the Waters Pierce Oil Company, under the name of the Texas Oil & Gasoline Company.

Q. Now, do you remember how long he continued to operate that agency for the Waters Pierce Oil Company under that name?

A. March 1, 1904, or about that time.

Q. Do you remember when the former Waters Pierce Oil Company was dissolved, Mr. Fries?

A. Yes, sir, I remember.

Q. Now, about what date was that?

A. May, 1900. Some time between the 20th and 30th, I believe.

Q. You recall what notices—notice was given of the dissolution of the former company and the organization of the present company?

A. I don't remember the wording of it.

Q. Well, as an agent of the company, state whether or not you received any notice.

A. I received notice of the dissolution of the company.

Q. Have you got that notice that you received?

A. I may have it in my files; I am not positive; I haven't my files with me.

Q. You remember who it was received from?

A. The notice of dissolution, I believe, was signed by H. C. Pierce.

Q. Well, in the first place, were you employed by the present company?

1618 A. I was notified of the fact—I was notified of the organizing of the new company and my employment by them, by the new company.

Q. Now, Mr. Fries, would you recognize the copies of the two notices that you received with reference to the former company and the present one?

A. Yes, sir; I don't know whether they would be the ones I received.

Q. Well, look at this one and see whether it is? (Hands witness paper.)

A. Substantially the same.

Q. Notice you received?

A. It is.

Q. (Hands witness another paper.) Well, I will get you to look at this one?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. ODELL: We now offer these notices, Your Honor.

Mr. BATTS: We have no objection.

Mr. ODELL: I will read to you, gentlemen, the notices identified by this witness:

"Waters Pierce Oil Company.

ST. LOUIS, MO., May 29, 1900.

Managers, Agents and Representatives of the Waters Pierce Oil Company:

The Waters Pierce Oil Company, incorporated May 7, 1878, was on the 28th day of May, 1900, by unanimous vote of its stockholders dissolved, and you are hereby respectfully notified that your services will not be required and will cease and terminate upon the afternoon of May 31, next. This company has this day sold and arranged to transfer on May 31, 1900, all of its property to the Waters Pierce Oil Company, incorporated at St. Louis, Missouri, May 29, 1900, and after May 31, 1900, you will hold all of this company's property in your charge subject to the order of H. C. Pierce, president of 1619 the Waters Pierce Oil Company. And in the meantime you will continue making sales and remittances as heretofore, up to the evening of May 31, 1900. On behalf of the stockholders and officers of this company, I desire to thank you for your faithful attention to its interests.

Very truly yours, A. M. FINLAY, President."

"Waters Pierce Oil Company. Incorporated May 29, 1900.
Office of President.

ST. LOUIS, MO., May 29, 1900.

Mr. Blank.

DEAR SIR: The Waters Pierce Oil Company, incorporated May 29, 1900, has purchased all of the property of the Waters Pierce Oil Company which was incorporated May 7, 1878, and dissolved by unanimous resolution of its stockholders May 28, 1900. Referring to the notice sent by Andrew M. Finlay, president of that company, you are advised that you are hereby employed by this company in the same capacity as you were employed by the old Waters Pierce Oil Company and at the same salary, and your services on behalf of this company will commence upon the morning of June 1, 1900. As soon as possible you will be advised concerning the details of the conduct of this company's business in your charge.

Yours truly, H. C. PIERCE, President."

Q. Did I understand you to say that you remember approximately the date when Mr. Campbell ceased his connection with the present Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. March 1, 1904.

MR. ALLEN: Your Honor, I don't know exactly what the habit of the Court is with reference to documents that have been introduced in evidence. Are they marked and filed by the Clerk?

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

MR. BATTS: We should like to have the documents——

1820 MR. ODELL: We would like to have all of the letters and documents that are offered in evidence, turned over.

MR. BATTS: We want the Clerk to have the documents just read.

Mr. ODELL: We would like to have all the letters that have been read, filed with the Clerk.

Mr. ALLEN: They have been filed.

The COURT: Yes, all documentary evidence that has been introduced is in the custody of the Clerk, and the Clerk is the proper custodian.

Q. (Hands witness paper with handwriting on it). I wish you would look at that contract, Mr. Fries. Did you ever see that contract before, Mr. Fries?

A. I don't recall having seen it.

Q. Sir?

A. I don't recall having seen it.

Q. Do you recall at any time seeing what purported to be a duplicate of a copy of the contract made between the Waters Pierce Oil Company and Roy Campbell?

A. Yes, sir, I have seen it.

Q. In whose possession was it at the time?

A. In Roy Campbell's.

Q. Where and under what circumstances did you see that contract?

A. At the request of Mr. Finlay, I called on Roy Campbell.

Q. Where did you see Roy Campbell, Mr. Fries, at the time you saw this contract in his possession?

A. In the Waters Pierce Oil Company's office in San Antonio on Navarro Street.

Q. Under what circumstances, that is to say, did he come to see you, or did you go to see him?

A. I went to see him. You want me to go on?

1621 Q. Yes.

A. I asked him to bring the contract to my office, that I wanted to erase a certain clause or paragraph, second clause, I believe.

Q. Did he do that, Mr. Fries?

A. Yes, he consented to it; if he hadn't consented, I couldn't have done it.

Q. Well, when did he bring the contract to your office?

A. He brought the contract to my office on the 7th of April, 1900.

Q. When was paragraph 2 erased from this Campbell copy of the contract, Mr. Fries?

A. On that date.

Q. State to the jury whether it was with or without his consent.

A. With his consent.

Q. You remember the manner in which it was erased?

A. I do.

Q. Well, I wish you would describe that.

A. The copy was in typewriting and the erasure was made all the way through with the capital "X" which covered all of the small letters in the — line for line; each letter was covered with the capital "X."

Q. Was that made, this capital "X" that you are speaking of, with the typewriter or was it——

A. With the typewriter.

Q. Who made it?
A. I am not positive; I think my stenographer did, in his presence.
Q. Well, now, after this paragraph 2 was erased from the Campbell contract, what became of the contract?
A. It was handed back to Mr. Campbell.
Q. You say that was on April 7, 1900?
A. 1900.
Q. What do you refresh your memory from that enables you to fix the date, Mr. Fries?
1622 A. Well, Mr. Johnson wrote me from St. Louis when Roy Campbell brought suit against the Waters Pierce Oil Company, for me to look up my correspondence, and that was about two years ago, and refresh my memory on some dates, and that was among the letters, a copy.

Mr. BATTS: We have a right to see the data from which the witness refreshes his memory and we shall ask that it be produced or that the testimony be excluded.

Q. (Hands witness letter.) I wish you would look at that letter, Mr. Fries.
A. This is dated April 9, 1900; I said April 7th; my memory wasn't very good.
Q. Now, the letter you received is in Houston, is it?
A. No, sir, I have no letters dated that far back.
Q. Sir?
A. I have no letters dated back to 1900.
Q. Referring to the letter that you received from Mr. Finlay, you know where it is, that that was in reply to?
A. The letter I received, it was destroyed; it was destroyed with a lot of old correspondence and old records when we moved into our present warehouse office building.
Q. I wish you would read that letter to the jury.

Mr. BATTS: Let me see it first, please. (Witness hands letter to counsel for State)
Mr. BATTS: I shall at the proper time ask for all the correspondence from which the witness refreshes his memory.
The COURT: Read the letter to the Jury.
The WITNESS:

"Waters Pierce Oil Company.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, April 9, 1900.

Mr. A. M. Finlay, President, St. Louis, Mo.
1623 DEAR SIR: The instructions as per your favor of April 2nd, personal, have been complied with.
Your- truly, LOUIS FRIES, Manager."

The COURT: What is the date of that letter?
The WITNESS: April 9th.

Q. You know what that letter referred to, Mr. Fries?
A. My letter?

Q. Yes.

A. Referred to Mr. Finlay's letter of instructions to me to call on Mr. Campbell and get his consent to cancel paragraph 2.

Q. Of this contract?

A. Of this contract.

Q. Mr. Fries, where did you say Mr. Campbell's warehouse was located in San Antonio?

A. It was located on the Aransas Pass tracks, west of the city; I don't know the name of the street.

Q. You remember anything about Mr. Campbell receiving a sign at any time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?

A. I can't recall the date.

Q. You remember when it was with reference to the dissolution of the old company and the organization of the present company?

A. I believe it was just prior to the dissolution, prior to the change. I am not positive though.

Q. Have you seen this Clem sign?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When that was exhibited here to the jury?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. A little while ago. I wish you would state to the Jury how the sign that Mr. Campbell received compared to this Clem sign.

1624 A. In size it was about the same, and it was black, gold letters on black ground.

Q. You remember the wording of that sign?

A. No, sir, I do not; it indicated that Roy Campbell or the Texas Oil & Gasoline Company were agents of the Waters Pierce Oil Company; one of the two, I don't remember which.

Q. Did you or not see this sign after it was put up?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was it?

A. It was over Roy Campbell's office door, and afterwards I saw it at his warehouse; I don't know whether there were two separate and distinct signs or one and the same sign transferred; I don't remember that.

Q. Where was his office?

A. On the ground floor of one of the Maverick buildings on Navarro Street.

Q. You remember how long that sign remained on his office door, over the door?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. You remember how long the sign remained on the warehouse?

A. I do not know; it may still be there.

Q. Was or not this warehouse located in a public place, Mr. Fries?

A. Well, it was located on the Aransas Pass right-of-way, I believe, and it was on a street corner; it wasn't much of a warehouse; it was an old shack on Mexican jacal and he kept his horse-feed in there and I believe a pump that he used in transferring oils, and his equipment consisted of two tanks out in the yard.

Q. Was there or not a considerable passing to and fro by this warehouse?

A. Not much, no, sir.

1625 Q. Mr. Fries, what capacity were you serving the defendant in at the time that Campbell ceased his San Antonio agency?

A. As manager, South Texas division.

Q. I wish you would state to the jury, Mr. Fries, what his feelings toward the company were at the time that he left the service of the company?

A. The very best; he was seeking employment with the company at the time; he wanted a position in Mexico.

Q. State whether or not he made any complaint of the company having violated any agreement or contract with him, to you as manager of that territory?

A. None at all; none of any kind; in fact, he said that he was glad he had the thing out of the way; that he knew he hadn't done the company or his business justice for a number of years, and he could not do so without sacrificing more in the other direction than his salary would amount to; he was a merchant, broker. During the last five years that he was with the Waters Pierce Oil Company, I don't think he knew what was going on; the business of the company was turned over to a second-rate bookkeeper and a stenographer; the bookkeeper was square and remitted the proceeds of the sales all right, but Campbell never knew what was going on.

Q. What was his habit with reference to being out of the city for a considerable part of the time?

A. Oh, he was gone for months at a time; his business called him out of the city; he handled the cabbage crop at Corpus Christi, which held him down there for three months; he was in the elevator and grain business at Fort Worth until the elevator was destroyed by fire; that kept him out of town for six months; he traveled in Mexico for the Rosenbaum Grain Company, and remained in Mexico for six months of the time; he handled the Cuero onion crop——

1626 Q. Was his salary going on all the time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. His salary and his office expenses, his office rent?

A. I don't know whether he paid part of the rent or not; anyhow the company paid more than its share, and I believe they paid the stenographer.

Q. When did you first hear of any complaint that he had against the company?

A. I never heard of any complaint against the company; the first complaint that I heard—I don't know whether it was—would call it a complaint or not, but he came back from St. Louis and told me that he had a good notion to bring suit against the Waters Pierce Oil Company for damages. Damages for what? Well, he said, for checking me out, discharging me. What put that into your head at this late date, it was done with your consent? That is all right, he says, I had a talk with Mr. Gruet, and Mr. Gruet told me that I had good cause for damages and said I was a damn fool if I didn't bring it.

Q. That Gruet, the former secretary of the Company?

A. J. P. Gruet.

Q. Now, if you know, about how long after that was it before he brought the suit against the company?

A. The thing rocked along for some time; he asked me several times how it would affect me personally, that if it would affect me personally he would rather sacrifice this thing and not bring suit. I told him if that was the only thing that stood in his way, to go ahead and crack his whip; that I wouldn't have my personal feelings to stand in the way; to go ahead, if he thought he had cause for action, and he went.

Q. Mr. Fries, have you been familiar with the company's business in Austin since the organization of the present company?

1627 A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has it or not maintained and kept a local agent here all the time?

A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. Prior to that time, did or not the former Waters Pierce Oil Company have a local agent in Austin, for a period, say, of ten years?

A. Yes, sir.

Cross-examination.

(By Mr. Batts:)

Q. Mr. Campbell hasn't got any feelings against the company, so far as you know?

A. No, not against the company; he has some against some of the officers of the company.

Q. Do you get all of your signs from St. Louis?

A. All my signs?

Q. Yes.

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the company in the habit of sending signs out to Texas to be put up?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sir?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. From St. Louis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What character of signs?

A. Well, we have a very nice blue enameled sign, white raised lettering on a blue field.

Q. Metal sign?

A. Yes, sir, steel.

1628 Q. Indicating the name of the agent?

A. No, sir.

Q. Just, "Waters Pierce Oil Company"?

A. Yes, sir, and sometimes we have "Eupion oil best on earth" on it, something of that kind.

Q. Down there at Houston, the name is general manager or division manager?

A. No, sir, my name is on my office door—no, it isn't there, it is on the stenographer's door; my office is, "Private".

Q. In an office building there?

A. In the company's office building, yes, sir.

Q. At your tank station, "The Waters Pierce Oil Company, Louis Fries, Agent"?

A. There is no sign.

Q. On your warehouse, "Louis Fries, Agent for the Waters Pierce Oil Company"?

A. No, there is no sign on the warehouse.

Q. No sign at all on your warehouse?

A. No, sir.

Q. Any of your wooden signs sent down from St. Louis?

A. I don't think we have a wooden sign outside of probably Austin; I think I had one painted here about ten years ago.

Q. Did you ever have any sign to be sent from St. Louis except the one to Roy Campbell?

A. I don't even know positively that that was sent from St. Louis.

Q. If that was sent from St. Louis, that is the only one you have heard of being sent from St. Louis?

A. The only wooden sign?

Q. Yes.

A. I couldn't say.

1629 Q. The only other signs are these metallic signs, were made and enameled at St. Louis—at San Antonio, I mean, at the time the sign was sent down?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have any correspondence with reference to the sign?

A. The sign, no, sir.

Q. You don't know then, the reason why that particular sign should have been prepared in St. Louis?

A. No, I really don't know, except that I had no direct dealings of any kind with Roy Campbell; he was working under St. Louis, as an independent agency, you might say.

Q. He didn't even refer to you?

A. I checked up their equipment for the company and I bought the equipment for the company, but I never bought anything for Roy Campbell.

Q. Why not?

A. Because he was operating as a separate agency; the only retail agency we had in the territory, in my territory.

Q. He didn't sell to merchants or jobbers?

A. Well, he didn't make a strong effort to sell to them. He had one or two personal friends that bought from him. Before he went to work for the Waters Pierce Oil Company he found it impossible to sell to them, and he quit; went to work for the company and drew his salary.

Q. And the company didn't object to his doing business and drawing his salary?

A. No, they objected and checked him out when it got too bad.

Q. How many years did he work for them?

A. For about ten years.

Q. Well, most of the time giving his attention to other business?

A. Yes, sir, increasing his gallonage, though, his sales.

1630 Q. And was supplying some merchants all the time?

A. Yes, sir, I suppose that he had one or two men that he supplied.

Q. What was the reason for buying him out?

A. I suppose because it was a good investment.

Q. What was the reason for keeping the business up in that name or the name of the Texas Oil Company?

A. That is a very good retail name.

Q. Anything to prevent you from going into the retail business there, if you wanted to, at the other office?

A. Yes.

Q. What?

A. I don't think that St. Louis wanted me to go into the retail business.

Q. That is the reason; they didn't want you to?

A. Yes, sir; if I had had my way about it I would take the whole thing and put it in retail.

Q. And the only reason you know for maintaining Campbell there, was that the St. Louis office wanted it done that way?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The St. Louis office knew all about the matter?

A. What matter?

Q. The Waters Pierce Oil Company maintaining this separate business over there in the name of the Texas Oil & Fuel Company or Roy Campbell?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had no responsibility for it, at all?

A. No, sir, not for Roy Campbell and his doings, no, sir.

Q. Paid him how much?

A. If I had been responsible for Roy Campbell, in spite of personal friendship, I would have checked him out a whole lot earlier.

Q. Now, at the time you brought out Roy Campbell, you 1631 had been running another little concern there in another name, hadn't you?

A. Retail concern?

Q. Retail concern and seller to jobbers?

A. Yes, sir, no, he wasn't selling to jobbers directly.

Q. What was the name of that concern?

A. Consumers Oil & Gasoline Company.

Q. Did you have an agency for selling to retailers when you bought Roy Campbell out?

A. Well, when Roy Compbell went to work for us there was no use in having two.

Q. Did you put up over the Consumers Oil & Gasoline Company, whatever it was, "Agent of the Waters Pierce Oil Company"?

A. I don't think we had any sign on it at all, I don't remember; I know we had a long sign showing what we handled.

Q. Did you disclose to the people that that was a concern of yours?

A. We didn't run around and advertise it; we had that to push our goods. It was known that we had an interest in them; I know it was pretty well known because there was a roast from the retail merchants——

Q. They got to suspecting that fact?

A. Yes, sir, I suppose they knew it.

Q. Now, you stated that you remembered independently of these letters the date upon which you had that conference with Roy Campbell?

A. What conference?

Q. With reference to drawing lines through certain part of the contract.

A. The 7th of April.

Q. I say, do you remember it independently of the letters and data etc., that you have looked at?

A. No, I know it from the copy of the letter which is on file; I have that copy in my office, I believe I have that copy; I know I have it.

1631½ Q. When did you first see the letter?

A. Which, this letter?

Q. Yes.

A. I saw it here; I have the copy of it.

Q. Well, do you remember having seen it before?

A. No, sir.

Q. That was in the possession of counsel here, was it?

A. Which?

Q. That letter.

A. This letter that is here now?

Q. Yes.

A. I saw the Judge take it out of the——

Q. You hadn't seen it prior to that time?

A. No, sir.

Q. You recognized it as the letter you had written?

A. Yes, sir, it is my signature and I recognize the wording.

Q. You say the other letter, the letter you got from Mr. Finlay, is destroyed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you destroy it?

A. I destroyed it when we moved into our new office building, about a year ago last February.

Q. About the time the suit was instituted?

A. I don't know; I destroyed all of the old correspondence I had; the chief clerk and myself went through the old correspondence, took us a couple of days, and destroyed a number of old stock books and other records we had no further use for.

Q. Did you receive instructions to burn this up?

A. No, sir; Oh, no; we had more of theirs than we could store in the new warehouse.

1632 Q. Didn't you get any personal letters with reference to that matter?

A. No, sir.

Q. This letter you did?

A. This was a personal letter, yes.

Q. A personal letter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not written to you in your capacity down there as agent of the company?

A. Yes, sir, it was addressed to me as manager.

Q. Well, how did it become personal?

A. Well, the personal cover.

Q. What do you mean by that?

A. The usual cover is an envelope, and that was addressed "Personal" "Louis Fries, Manager," and then "Personal" written across the face of it.

Q. And in that you got the information to get the contract with Roy Campbell and mark lines through a certain part of it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was all?

A. Through the second paragraph.

Q. Mark lines through the second paragraph, and that was all the letter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You told Roy Campbell you wanted his contract?

A. Yes, sir, I told him I had been requested——

Q. Now, wait a minute; you had been requested to get hold of that contract and mark lines through the second paragraph or clause in that, and that is all that took place between you as to that?

A. Yes, sir, that is all.

1632½ Q. Now, Mr. Fries, talking about signs, I will ask you to state whether or not C. W. Robinson also secured a sign from the company painted in the same way?

A. I don't know C. W. Robinson.

Q. Well, H. P. or H. K. Cochran?

A. I don't know him; I don't how of him.

Q. Well, isn't it a fact that those men were running sham concerns like Clem?

A. I don't know anything about them.

Q. Those facts were not disclosed to you?

A. No, sir, if they are facts, they were not.

Q. Now, down at Houston, the lampstore there, did they get a sign of the same sort from the Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. I din't know, sir, I wasn't in Houston at that time; I was in San Antonio; that wasn't in my territory.

Q. It is now, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir, it is now.

Q. And is the store now run in the name of the company?

A. No, sir.

Q. The company owns a store there which it runs in somebody else's name?

A. The Lamp Store.
Q. Yes, sir.
A. No, sir.
Q. The Oil & Lamp Store, when did it close out?
A. I think it was January, 1904; shortly after I came there. I went there in September, 1903.
Q. You closed it out?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. It had been theretofore run in the name of what?
A. Texas Lamp & Oil Company.
1633 Q. Belonged to the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did they send them down a sign?
A. I couldn't tell you.
Q. Don't know about that?
A. No, sir.
Q. Same concern at Galveston?
A. Was or is there?
Q. Was or is?
A. There was a Texas Lamp & Oil Company there.
Q. Run by the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In another name?
A. Well, it was run as the Texas Lamp & Oil Company.
Q. Don't know about the signs down there?
A. No, sir.
Q. Are there any businesses at this time run by the Waters Pierce Oil Company that you have been informed about, in the name of somebody else, in the State of Texas?
A. No, sir.
Q. If there are businesses of that kind, the fact is kept concealed from you?
A. I don't know it.
Q. Now, about what time did this change of policy take place?
A. What policy?
Q. Policy of running concerns in somebody's else's name in a kind of a sham competition?
A. I don't know anything about that policy.
Q. Those concerns down at Houston and Galveston were discontinued about the time Mr. Tinsley came down from the Standard Oil Company to run the Waters Pierce Oil Company?
1633½ A. Prior to that time.
Q. You remember about when that was?
A. I know about when it was; I met Mr. Tinsley up there at the Fair, and this was before the Fair.
Q. How long did he stay up there at St. Louis, running the——
A. I don't know, I only saw him there on one visit.
Q. Now, Mr. Fries, I notice these letters—this particular letter here is dated April 9, 1900; you have written a letter here that didn't at all indicate what it is about; is it the ordinary course of business to write letters that didn't at all disclose what the letter is written abou?

A. I think the body of the letter always discloses what it is written about.

Q. This simply refers to a personal letter of a certain date. There is a place up here to name the subject, isn't there?

A. I see there is, yes, sir.

Q. Now, this is the only letter that we have got in regard to this particular transaction, you saying that this is in regard to this particular transaction, and upon the face of it, it don't at all indicate whether it is with reference to it or not?

A. No, sir, it doesn't.

Q. Now, I notice "Waters Pierce Oil Company, San Antonio, Texas," that was the stationery you had been using prior to the re-incorporation, was it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You subsequently got a rubber stamp, "Incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri" on May sometime—1900—and used that and used the same old stationery with that change?

A. I don't remember that; I know we used a rubber stamp on some stationery; I don't know whether I used it on my letter-heads or not.

1634 Q. And that is the only change made in your business, using a rubber stamp on your stationery?

A. We made a number of changes.

Q. As a result of that re-incorporation?

A. I don't know; there was lots and lots of instructions received from St. Louis.

Q. Well, when?

A. We received them daily.

Q. Well, you had been making changes all along prior to that time?

A. Yes, sir, still making them.

Q. Was the business conducted the same was as it had been before?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, in what respect was it different?

A. I couldn't go into details; the instructions were a little more specific than they used to be, and a good deal of authority was taken away from the agents and managers that they used to have.

Q. When was that?

A. About that time, about the reorganization.

Q. Well, wasn't that about the time Mr. Tinsley came down from——

A. No, sir, prior to his coming.

Q. Now, you had a lot of books in the company's office there at San Antonio?

A. We had a lot of books, yes, sir; all the records.

Q. You closed those up on May 31, 1900?

A. We close them up every month.

Q. Well, I mean did you close them up and put those books aside, and get new books?

A. Not all the way through, no, sir.

Q. Well, did you at all?

A. Yes, sir, we arranged for new ledgers.

Q. On May 31, 1900?

A. No, sir, on June 1st.

1634½ Q. On June 1st, 1900, you transferred the old accounts over to the new ledger?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And sent out statements?

A. We were paid a good many of the accounts, and the balance we transferred to the new ledger.

Q. And then you sent out notices to them, to the persons with whom you had accounts, and said, "the account owned by you to the Waters Pierce Oil Company has been transferred to us, and we ask that the account be paid to us?"

A. I don't remember sending any such notices.

Q. Did you communicate to your customers that there had been any change at all in the business?

A. No, sir, I don't remember that I did.

Q. You do not?

A. No, sir.

Q. Accounts just went right along, items from day to day, as theretofore?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you get those two notices in the same envelope that were read to you this morning?

A. No, sir, I don't believe I did; I think I got a package by one mail and a package by another.

Q. Don't know which came first?

A. I could mighty near guess it.

Q. You could guess from what you assume to be the course that would be pursued, which you got first?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did you get a batch of them and send out to your employees or did they send them out?

A. I sent them out.

1635 Q. They sent you down a batch to send out to your employees?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you get yours from them direct or did you deliver yourself one?

A. Mine was not in the batch; mine was addressed to me as the manager.

Q. Did you get that batch a week or ten days prior to the dissolution?

A. I think I got it about two days. Regular course of mail.

Q. I am talking about this batch you got by express?

A. That is what I am talking about.

Q. And then the other employees were not notified until you were actually doing business as the new Waters Pierce Oil Company?

A. That is about the size of it.

Q. They had been running along there for several days for the new corporation, doing business, corporation having $400,000.00 capital stock, and forty or fifty million capital, for three or four days and didn't know it?

A. I don't know anything about the capital stock, and so forth.

Q. Well, whatever this concern is, they were doing business for it and didn't know it?

A. I don't remember that distinctly.

The COURT: We will adjourn until half past two o'clock.

Court re-opened at 2.30 o'clock.

1635½ Counsel for defendant next introduced in evidence the charge of the Court in the case of the State of Texas vs. Waters Pierce Oil Company, et al., Cause No. 12,578, in the District Court of Travis County, Texas.

Judge PENN: If the Court please, it is agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant, that the annual franchise taxes required by the laws of the State of Texas have been paid by the defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company for the year 1900, and for each succeeding year up to this time

Mr. BATTS: This agreement is subject to the objection that it is irrelevant and immaterial. That is true is it not? (To Judge Penn). I suppose that if it is not material or relevant, that you could not get it in anyhow, and the objection is urged that it is immaterial.

The COURT: What is the purpose of this evidence?

Judge PENN: The purpose is, Your Honor,—We contend that at the time of the granting of the permit to this company, the State entered into a contract with this company, permitting it to do business in this State for ten years, one of the conditions, of course, being the payment of the annual franchise tax, and we introduce this for the purpose of showing the performance by the defendant of the contract, and the fact that the State has recognized it during these years as a corporation, and permitted it to do business in this State,—recognized the issuance of the new charter.

The COURT: The objection is sustained.

Judge PENN: The defendant excepts.

Resolved, That it is advisable to alter the Charter of this Company to read as below stated, and that a meeting of the stockholders be called to meet at the principal office of the Company at Bayonne, New Jersey, on the 14th day of June, 1899, at 11 A. M. to take action thereon, notice of such meeting to be signed by the President and Secretary and given to each stockholder in person or mailed to his proper post office address at least ten days previous to 1664 the time of meeting as provided by the By-Law.

First. The name of the Corporation is Standard Oil Company.

Second. The location of the principal office in the State of New Jersey is at the Company's Refinery in the City of Bayonne and County of Hudson. The name of the agent therein and in charge thereof and upon whom process against this company may be served, is J. H. Alexander.

Third. The objects for which this company is formed are: To do all kinds of mining, manufacturing and trading business; transporting goods and merchandise by land or water in any manner; to buy, sell, lease, and improve lands; build houses, structures, vessels, cars, wharves, docks and piers; to lay and operate pipe lines; to erect and operate telegraph and telephone lines and lines for conducting electricity; to enter into and carry out contracts of every kind pertaining to its business; to acquire, use, sell and grant licenses under patent rights; to purchase or otherwise acquire, hold, sell, assign and transfer shares of capital stock and bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of corporations, and to exercise all the privileges of ownership including voting upon the stocks so held, to carry on its business and have offices and agencies therefor in all parts of the world, and to hold, purchase, mortgage and convey real estate and personal property outside the State of New Jersey.

Fourth. The total authorized stock of the corporation is One Hundred and Ten Million Dollars, divided into One Million and One Hundred Thousand shares of the par value of One Hundred Dollars each. Of said stock the One Hundred Thousand shares now issued and existing shall be preferred stock, and the increase of One Million shares shall be common stock. Said preferred stock shall entitle the holder thereof to receive out of the net earnings a dividend of and not exceeding one and one-half per centum quarterly before any dividend shall be paid on the common stock. Common stock may at the discretion of the Company be issued in 1665 exchange for preferred stock, and all preferred stock so received by the Company shall be cancelled. Common stock may also be issued in payment for such property as the Company has authority to purchase. Holders of preferred and of common stocks shall have like voting power.

Fifth. The names and post office addresses of the incorporators and the number of shares subscribed for by each shall remain as set forth in the original certificate of incorporation.

Sixth. The duration of the Corporation shall be unlimited.

Seventh. The corporation may use and apply its surplus earnings, or accumulated profits authorized by law to be reserved, to the purchase or acquisition of property, and to the purchase or acquisition of its own capital stock from time to time, to such extent and in such manner and upon such terms as its Board of Directors shall determine; and neither the property nor the capital stock so purchased or acquired, nor any of its capital stock taken in payment or satisfaction of any debt due to the corporation, shall be regarded as profits for the purpose of declaration or payment of dividends, unless otherwise determined by a majority of the Board of Directors, or a majority of the stockholders.

The Corporation, in its by-laws, may prescribe the number necessary to constitute a quorum of the Board of Directors which may be less than a majority of the whole number.

The number of Directors at any time may be increased or diminished by vote of the Board of Directors, and in case of any such increase the Board of Directors shall have power to elect such additional directors, to hold office until the next meeting of stockholders, or until their successors shall be elected.

The Board of Directors shall have power to make, alter, amend and rescind the By-laws of the corporation, to fix the amount to be reserved as working capital, to authorize and to cause to be executed mortgages and liens upon the real and personal property of the corporation; and from time to time to sell, assign, transfer 1666 or otherwise dispose of any or all of the property of the corporation, but no such sale of all of the property shall be made except pursuant to the votes of at least two-thirds of the Board of Directors.

The Board of Directors, by resolution passed by a majority of the Whole Board, may designate three or more Directors to constitute an Executive Committee, which committeee, to the extent provided in said resolution or in the By-laws of the corporation, shall have, and may exercise, the power of the Board of Directors in the management of the business and affairs of the corporation, and shall have power to authorize the seal of the corporation to be affixed to all papers which may require it.

The Board of Directors from time to time shall determine whether and to what extent, and at what times and places, and under what conditions and regulations, the accounts and books of the Corporation, or any of them, shall be open to the inspection of the stockholders; and no stockholder shall have any right of inspecting any account or book or document of the corporation, except as conferred by statute or authorized by the Board of Directors, or by a resolution of the stockholders.

The Board of Directors shall have power to hold its meetings, to have one or more offices, and to keep the books of the corporation (except the stock and transfer books) outside of the State, at such places as may be from time to time designated by them.

I certify that the above resolution was adopted by the Board of Directors of the Standard Oil Company, at a meeting held on the 26th day of May A. D. 1899, a majority of Directors being present and voting in favor thereof. Witness the seal of said corporation.

[CORPORATE SEAL.] L. D. CLARKE, Secretary.

Standard Oil Company.

You are hereby notified that the Board of Directors of said company have passed a resolution declaring that it is advisable 1667 to change the charter of said company in several respects fully set forth in said resolution, and have called a meeting of the stockholders to take action thereon, which meeting will be held at the principal office of the Company in Bayonne, New Jersey, on Wednesday the 14th day of June, A. D. 1899, at eleven o'clock A. M. where you are requested to attend in person or by proxy. If unable to attend please sign and return the enclosed proxy.

1668 Be it remembers, that on this 14th day of June, A. D. 1899, before me the subscriber a Notary Public in and for said State & County personally appeared L. D. Clarke the Secretary of the Standard Oil Company, the corporation mentioned in and which executed the foregoing certificate, who being by me duly sworn, on his oath says that he is such secretary, and that the seal affixed to said certificate is the corporate seal of said corporation, the same being well known to him; that H. M. Flagler is president of said corporation, and signed said certificate and affixed said seal thereto, and delivered said certificate by authority of the board of directors and with the assent of at least two-thirds in interest of the stockholders of said corporation having voting powers as and for his voluntary act and deed, and the voluntary act and deed of said corporation, in presents of deponent, who thereupon subscribed his name thereto as witness.

And he further says that the assent thereto appended is signed by at least two-thirds in interest of the sockholders of said corporation having voting powers, either in person or by their several duly constituted attorneys in fact, thereunto duly authorized in writing.

L. D. CLARKE, Secretary.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 14th day of June A. D. 1899.

[L. S.] JOHN BENSINGER,
Notary Public for Kings Co.

Certificate filed in New York Co.
(10¢ Internal Revenue Stamp Cancelled.)

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of New York, ss:

I, William Schmer, Clerk of the County of New York, and also Clerk of the Supreme Court for the said County, the same being a court of record, do hereby certify, that John Bensinger has filed in the Clerk's Office of the County of New York, a certified copy of his appointment as Notary Public for the County of Kings with 1669 his autograph signature, and was at the time of taking the annexed deposition, duly authorized to take the same, and that I am well acquainted with the handwriting of said Notary Public, and verily believe that the signature to the annexed certificate is genuine.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the said Court and County, the 15th day of June, 1899.

[L. S.] WM. SCHMER, Clerk.

We, the subscribers, being over two-thirds in interest of the stockholders of the Standard Oil Company having voting powers, having at a meeting regularly called for the purpose, voted in favor of the alteration and amendment of the charter of said Company, as the same is above set forth, do now, pursuant to the statute, hereby give out written assent to said change.

Witness our hands this 14th day of June A. D. 1899.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, S. D. Dickinson, Secretary of State of the State of New Jersey, do hereby certify, That the foregoing are true copies of the certificate of incorporation of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, filed in this Department August 5th, 1882; and certificates of amendment of said certificate of incorporation, filed respectively March 19th, 1892, March March 19th, 1892, March 25th, 1892, March 31st, 1892 and June 16th, 1899, and the endorsements thereon, as the same are taken from and compared with the originals now remaining on file and of record therein.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal, at Trenton, this twenty-sixth day of February, A. D. 1907.

[SEAL.] S. D. DICKINSON,
Secretary of State.

1673 STATE OF NEW JERSEY:

I, Edward C. Stokes, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby certify that S. D. Dickinson, Esquire, who hath signed the annexed Certificate, and whose official seal is thereto annexed, was, at the doing thereof, and now is, Secretary of State of the State of New Jersey, duly appointed, commissioned and sworn, and that full faith and credit are to be given to his official attestations; that the said signature is in the proper handwriting of the said S. D. Dickinson, and the seal his seal of office, and that the said Certificate is in due form of law and by the proper officer.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of New Jersey to be hereunto affixed at the City of Trenton in said State, this twenty sixth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and seven and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty first.

By the Governor,

E. C. STOKES.

No. 1.

No. 24551.

STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

Suit Pending in the 26th Judicial District Court, Travis County, Texas.

1674 It is agreed, for the purposes of this case, only, upon the following facts, subject to all legal objections by either party:

First. That the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey is a corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey; that since its organization in 1882 it has not conducted any business in the State of Texas; that it has not applied for or been granted a permit to transact any of its corporate business in the State of Texas.

Second. That said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey did own in the Waters Pierce Oil Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, in May, 1878, 2,747 shares out of a total of 4,000 shares of the said company, and that since about the 24th day of September, 1900, it has owned 2,748 shares of the capital stock out of a total of 4,000 shares of the Waters Pierce Oil Company organized under the laws of Missouri, May 29, 1900.

Third. That the said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey owns a majority of the shares of the capital stock of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Indiana, on the 11th day of June, 1889, and that said Standard Oil Company of Indiana does business in Indiana, a part of Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Michigan, Kansas, South Dakota and North Dakota, but has at no time since its organization transacted any business in the State of Texas and has not applied for nor has it been granted a permit under the laws of Texas to do any business in said State of Texas.

Fourth. That the said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey owns a majority of the shares of the capital stock of the Standard Oil Company of New York, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, on the 10th day of August, 1882; that the Standard Oil Company of New York does business in the States of New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Vermont and New Hampshire, and it has at no time transacted any busi-1675 ness in the State of Texas and has not applied for nor has it been granted a permit under the laws of Texas to do any business in the said State of Texas.

Fifth. That the said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey owns a majority of the shares of the capital stock of the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Kentucky, on the 7th day of October, 1886, and that the said Standard Oil Company of Kentucky does business in the following states: Kentucky; Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and part of Louisiana; that the said Standard Oil Company of Kentucky has at no time transacted any business in the State of Texas and has not applied for nor has it been granted a permit under the laws of Texas to do business in said State of Texas.

Sixth. That the said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey owns a majority of the shares of the capital stock of the Continental Oil Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Iowa, in December 1884, and that the said Continental Oil Company has at no time transacted any business in the State of Texas and has not applied for nor has it been granted a permit under the laws of Texas to do any business in said State of Texas.

Seventh. That the said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey owns a majority of the shares of capital stock of the Republic Oil Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York on the 4th day of June, 1901; and that said Republic Oil Company has at no time transacted any business in the State of Texas and has not applied for nor has it been granted a permit under the laws of Texas to do any business in said State of Texas.

Eighth. That said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey has owned the said majority shares of the capital stock of the Standard Oil Company of New York, and of the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, and of the Continental Oil Company of Iowa, and 1676 of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, and of the Republic Oil Company of New York, since practically the dates of their respective organizations.

WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

Suit Pending in the 26th Judicial District Court, Travis County, Texas.

It is hereby stipulated and agreed by and between the counsel in this cause that the agreement signed and entered into by the Eagle Refining Company, S. S. Drake, President, S. S. Drake, A. G. Carpenter, W. A. Smith, William H. K. Rose and A. W. Clem, on the 5th day of October, 1894, and the memorandum of agreement dated St. Louis, Missouri, September 13, 1894, and signed by H. C. Pierce, President, and William H. K. Rose, and the acceptance signed by W. A. Smith, Secretary, dated Cleveland, Ohio October 1, 1894, and the memorandum of agreement made and entered into in the City of St. Louis on the 5th day of October, 1894, and signed by the Waters Pierce Oil Company, by H. C. Pierce, P. T., and A. W. Clem, all of which are attached to plaintiff's first original amended petition in this cause and marked exhibit C, are true copies of each of said documents and may be offered in evidence in this cause with the same force and effect as if they were originals and properly proven up.

1677 It is further stipulated and agreed that the said agreements and contracts were executed and carried out; that if the defendant shall produce the originals of said documents, as set forth in exhibit C as aforesaid, upon the trial of said cause, that said originals may be substituted in lieu of said copies, and this stipulation and said original documents or this stipulation and the copies herein agreed to, in the event defendant does not so produce said originals, shall be offered in evidence in said cause subject to all legal objections that may be offered against the originals if the same were introduced.

STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

Suit Pending in the 26th Judicial District Court, Travis County, Texas.

In lieu of the testimony of Mr. John D. Archbold and to avoid the expense of taking his testimony, it is agreed between the respective counsel for plaintiff and defendant in the above cause as follows:

That the copy of the agreement commonly called the Standard Oil Trust Agreement, entered into as of the date of January 2, 1882, and the supplemental argeement dated the 4th of January, 1882, marked respectively Exhibits A and B of plaintiff's 1678 first amended original petition in said cause and set forth therein, are true copies of said agreements and may be read in evidence in this cause with the same force and effect as the originals of said agreements if properly proven up, subject to all objections that could be urged against the originals if offered in evidence, except the proof of its execution, and the correctness of the copy and the production of the original is waived. All other objections may be urged against the introduction of this copy that could be urged against the introduction of the original.

It is further stipulated and agreed that the Waters Pierce Oil Company, as a corporation, did not sign either the agreement or the supplemental agreement; that Mr. Henry Clay Pierce, who at that time owned substantially 40 per cent. of the stock of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, did not sign either of said agreements nor deposit any part of his stock under either of them.

It is further stipulated and agreed that Mr. Horace A. Hutchins and Mr. W. P. Thompson, at the date of said agreement, owned substantially 40 per cent. of the stock of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, signed said agreement and deposited their stock thereunder; that the Chess-Carley Company, at said date, owned substantially 20 per cent. of the stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, did not sign said agreement, but deposited said shares under said agreement.

It is further stipulated and agreed that from the date of the organization of the Standard Oil Trust, in accordance with the agreements herein referred to, the Trustees of the Standard Oil Trust owned and held substantially 60 per cent. of the capital stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and continued to hold and own the same until the year 1892.

It is further stipulated and agreed that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company alluded to in this stipulation is the corporation organized under the laws of Missouri in May, 1878.

This stipulation and the original trust agreements, as set 1679 forth in plaintiff's first amended original petition, shall be offered in evidence with the same force and effect and subject to all the objections as if the same were the testimony of said John D. Archbold and given in accordance with law in this cause.

Suit Pending in District Court, Travis County Texas, 26th Judicial District.

It is hereby stipulated and agreed for the purposes of this case only, that the letters attached hereto and marked with the initials "J. P. L." and "J. D. J.," being the initials of Mr. Lightfoot counsel for the State and Mr. Johnson counsel for the defendant, bear the genuine signature of Wade Hampton, said letters being generally designated as follows:

Letter dated New York, July 7th, '99, addressed to Mr. H. C.

Pierce, Pres't Waters Pierce Oil Company, St. Louis, Missouri, and signed "Wade Hampton, Jr.," and marked Exhibit "A."

Letter dated New York, February 8, 1901, addressed to Mr. J. P. Gruet, Vice Pres., Waters Pierce Oil Company, St. Louis, Missouri, and signed "Wade Hampton" and marked Exhibit "B."

Letter dated New York, November 7th, 1902, addressed to Mr. J. P. Gruet, Waters Pierce Oil Co., St. Louis, Missouri, signed "Wade Hampton" and marked Exhibit "C."

1680 Letter dated New York, November 12th, 1902, addressed to Mr. J. P. Gruet, Waters Pierce Oil Company, St. Louis, Missouri, signed "Wade Hampton" and marked Exhibit "D."

Letter dated New York, November 24th, 1902, addressed to Mr. J. P. Gruet, V. P. Waters Pierce Oil Co., St. Louis, Missouri, signed "Wade Hampton" and marked Exhibit "E."

Letter dated New York, November 10th, 1903, addressed to "My dear Mr. Gruet" and signed "Wade Hampton" and marked Exhibit "F."

It is further stipulated and agreed that said letters were written and the respective persons therein mentioned were sent at the instance of the Standard Oil Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey, and commonly referred to as the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, which at the time said letters were written and said parties were sent, was the owner of shares of stock of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, and for the purpose of getting such information as would be revealed by an audit of the books and accounts of the Waters Pierce Oil Company by the respective parties designated in the respective letters.

It is further stipulated that the letters made an exhibit to this stipulation may be offered in evidence subject to such legal objections as may be made to them as evidence.

It is further stipulated that either party may use the deposition of Wade Hampton heretofore taken on interrogatories propounded by the State in the trial of this cause, subject to all legal objections as to competency and relevancy, &c.

Mr. J. P. Gruet, Waters Pierce Oil Company, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: Our Mr. C. W. Norman bears with him a letter of introduction to you from Mr. McNall. Mr. Norman will be assisted in the work of auditing the books and accounts of the General Office of your company by our Messrs. W. H. Henderson and W. J. Higgs. I will give them letters of introduction to Mr. Norman, who in turn will introduce them to you.

Please place Mr. Norman's name on your pay roll at the rate of $2500.00 per annum, beginning with the time he leaves his 1682 home for St. Louis, and also pay his expense bills monthly as he renders them to you.

Yours very truly, WADE HAMPTON.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12th, 1902.

Mr. J. P. Gruet, Waters Pierce Oil Company, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of 10th inst. Answering your inquiry. Please place Mr. Henderson's name on your pay roll when he arrives in St. Louis, also that of Mr. Higgs, treating them the same as Mr. Norman, so far as salary and expenses are concerned, during their stay in St. Louis. The full names are—

| | Salary per annum. |
|---|---|
| W. H. Henderson | $1800.00 |
| W. J. Higgs | $1800.00 |

Mr. Henderson should arrive in St. Louis in a few days, but Mr. Higgs will probably not reach there for 10 days or so.

I have instructed the gentlemen named above to date their commencement with your company from the time they buy their tickets, and to include the railroad fare &c., to St. Louis in their expenses to your company.

Trusting you are in good health, and with kind regards, I remain.

Yours truly, WADE HAMPTON.

MY DEAR MR. GRUETT: I am sending our Mr. R. B. Backus to St. Louis to take up the audit of the books and accounts of the General office of W. P. O. Co. Please place his name on your pay roll at $3000 per annum, to begin with date he leaves Pittsburg for St. Louis. I have said to him also to commence his expense acct. for your company with the purchase of his railroad tickets for St. Louis, from Pittsburg.

I will send two other men to assist Mr. Backus as soon as they are relieved at other points. Mr. Backus is a very intelligent and agreeable man, and has had a great deal of experience in his line of work. I have no doubt you will be pleased with him.

Yours very truly, WADE HAMPTON.

Mr. Backus will probably be in St. Louis about the 20th inst.

Certificate Filed in New York Co.

A special meeting of the stockholders of this company was held at the principal office of the company, No. 26, Broadway, New York City, on Thursday, March 17th, 1898, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, for the purposes of considering a proposition to extend the business and powers and rights of the corporation.

The meeting having been called to order, stockholders appeared in person or by proxy representing 42,731 shares of stock, being at least three-fifths of the capital stock of the corporation, and organized by electing John D. Archbold and Louis D. Clarke, stockholders of the corporation, as Chairman and Secretary, respectively, of said meeting.

The Chairman read the notice of the meeting, which notice stated the time, place and object thereof, and the proposed extension of the business and powers and rights of the corporation, and also read the proof that such notice was published once a week for at least two successive weeks in the New York Law Journal, a newspaper of the County of New York, the County where the principal business office of the corporation is located, and that a copy of such meeting was duly mailed to each stockholder at his last known postoffice address at least three weeks before the meeting.

1718 Upon motion, duly seconded, Messrs. Alfred H. Brainard and Frederick Fischer were appointed Inspectors of Election and duly sworn to faithfully perform the duties devolving upon them as such Inspectors.

Upon motion, duly seconded, a vote was taken upon the following resolution:

Resolved That the business and rights of the Standard Oil Company of New York be extended as follows: "The purchase and sale of the products of petroleum, and of all products entering into the manufacture thereof, and the purchase and sale of utensils and packages in which said products and materials are used, stored, and transported, and of the materials used in the manufacture of such utensils and packages, said business of buying and selling to be done in all countries in which markets may be found; also the purchasing, acquiring, holding and disposing of the stocks, bonds and other evidences of indebtedness of any corporation, domestic or foreign, engaged in a similar business, or engaged in the manufacture or sale of property useful in the business of this corporation, or in which the manufactured articles, product or property of this corporation are or may be used, with the right to establish branch manufactories in other states and countries", and that the board of Directors of this corporation be authorized and instructed to execute and file proper certificates, as provided by law, and and to take such other steps as may be necessary to carry out and effect the objects and purposes of this resolution.

The Inspectors having counted the ballots reported that forty-two thousand seven hundred thirty-one (42,731) shares of stock, being more than three-fifths of the capital stock of the company, had voted in favor of the adoption of the resolution, and that no vote had been cast against its adoption, and thereup- the resolution was declared duly adopted, and the meeting adjourned.

STATE OF NEW YORK, City of New York, ss:

We, J. D. Archbold, Chairman, and L. D. Clarke, Secretary, of a special meeting of the stockholders of the Standard Oil Company of New York held for the purpose of increasing the capital stock do hereby certify:

That the Standard Oil Company of New York is a stock corporation formed under the laws of the State of New York, and that the capital stock of said company was fixed by its certificate of incorporation at Five Million Dollars and was divided into fifty thousand shares of the par value of One Hundred Dollars each.

That the said Company desiring to increase its capital stock the Directors thereof did publish a notice signed by a majority of them in the Evening Sun, a newspaper in the City of New York, in which said City the principal business office of said Company is situated, once a week for three successive weeks prior to the date of the meeting called thereby, which said notice was in the words following:

NEW YORK, March 18th, 1892.

A special meeting of the stockholders of the Standard Oil Company of New York will be held at the office of the said Company at No. 26 Broadway, New York City, on the 31st day of March, 1726 A. D. 1892, at 11 o'clock A. M. to determine whether the capital stock of the Company shall be increased to the total amount of Seven Million Dollars to consist of seventy thousand shares of the par value of One Hundred Dollars each.

WILLIAM ROCKEFELLER,
JOHN D. ARCHBOLD,
W. H. TILFORD,
Directors.

That at least three weeks before said meeting a copy of said notice was personally served upon each stockholder.

That at the time and place specified in the notice published and served as aforesaid there appeared in person and by proxy stockholders representing at least two-thirds of all the shares of stock of the said Company, and that the meeting organized by choosing from among their number the said J. D. Archbold as Chairman, and the said L. D. Clarke, as Secretary thereof.

That the call for the meeting having been read, and the proof of the proper publishing and service thereof having been presented, the following resolution was adopted.

Resolved: That the Standard Oil Company of New York does increase its capital stock from the present amount thereof, viz, the sum of Five Million Dollars consisting of fifty thousand shares of the par value of One Hundred Dollars per share, to the amount of Seven Million Dollars to consist of seventy thousand shares of the par value of One Hundred Dollars per share, and that the officers of this meeting are hereby instructed to perfect such increase of capital.

That the note of those present in person and by proxy upon said resolution being duly canvassed, it appeared that 49,998 shares of the capital stock of said Company being more than two-thrids of all the stock thereof voted in favor of said resolution.

And we do further certify:

That the amount of the capital of the said Company actually paid in is Five Million of Dollars; and that the whole amount of 1727 the debts and liabilities of the corporation is $1,856,639.23 dollars; and that the amount to which the capital stock of said company is increased in Seven Million Dollars.

In witness whereof We have made and signed this certificate this 31st day of March A. D. 1892.

Amendment to Charter.

The Atlantic Refining Company.

To His Excellency, Robert E. Pattison, Governor of Pennsylvania.

SIR: In compliance with the authority and requirements of an act of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, entitled "A supplement to an act entitled 'An Act to provide for the incorporation and regulation of certain corporations.' approved April 29, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four, providing for the improvement, amendment and alteration of the charters of corporations of the second class and authorizing the incorporation of traction motor companies," approved June 13, 1883, and known as the Corporation Amendment Act of 1883, The Atlantic Refining Company hereby certifies under its corporate seal that it is a corporation organized originally under the Act of Assembly entitled "An Act relating to corporations for mechanical, mining and quarrying purposes," approved July 18 1863; That it subsequently, to-wit, on the eighth day of October, A. D. 1889, by certificate filed in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth at Harrisburg, accepted the Constitution of 1874 and the General Corporation Act of 1874 and its supplements, as by reference to the records of the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth will more fully appear; that said corporation hereby applies for an improvement, amendment and alteration of its charter by adding thereto the following provision, to-wit:

The Directors may authorize the lease or sale and conveyance by deed under the seal of the corporation of any real estate of said company or interests therein which in their opinion is at the time of such lease or sale not necessary for the carrying on of the business of the company.

In Witness Whereof the said corporation hereunto affixes its corporate seal attested by the signature of its President and Secretary this tenth day of June, A. D. 1893.

PENNSYLVANIA, ss:

Rob't E. Pattison.

[SEAL.] In the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Rob't E. Pattison, Governor of the said Commonwealth to all to whom these presents shall come, sends Greeting:

Whereas, In and by an act of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, approved the thirteenth day of June, Anno Domini one thousan- eight hundred and eighty-three, entitled,

"A Supplement to an act entitled 'An Act to provide for the 1743 incorporation and regulation of certain corporations,' approved April twenty-ninth, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four, providing for the improvement, amendment and alteration of the charters of corporations of the second class," &c., the Governor of this Commonwealth is authorized and required to issue letters patent to all companies now incorporated, or which may hereafter be incorporated, under the provisions of the said act of twenty-ninth of April, 1874, or its supplements, for any of the purposes named in the second class of section two of said act, or embraced in that class by any of the supplements thereto, or to any corporation of the second class which has heretofore or may hereafter accept the provisions of said act, and the several supplements thereto, and the Constitution of this Commonwealth, in the manner provided by law, who shall desire to improve, amend or alter the article and conditions of the charter or instrument upon which said corporation is formed and established, in the manner and at the time therein specified.

And whereas, The Atlantic Refining Company, a corporation of the second class duly incorporated under the laws of this Commonwealth, being desirous of availing itself of the privileges of said act, has made application to me by certificate, under its corporate seal, acknowledged by the President and Secretary thereof, setting forth the character and objects of the proposed improvement, amendment or alteration of its charter or instrument upon which said corporation is formed or established, in the following words, viz:

The Directors may authorize the lease or sale and conveyance by deed under the seal of the corporation of any real estate of said company or interest therein which in their opinion is at the time of such lease or sale not necessary for the carrying on of the business of the company, and has in all respects fully complied with the requirements of the first above recited act of Assembly in relation thereto, and which certificate has been duly recorded 1744 in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Now know ye, That in pursuance of the power and authority given to me by law, I, Robert E. Pattison, Governor of the said Commonwealth, do by these presents, which I have caused to be made Patent, and sealed with the Great Seal of the State, extend the rights and powers of the said corporation in accordance with the terms and provisions of said amendment, alteration or improvement, with full power and authority to use and enjoy all the rights and privileges of the said corporation under its original charter, as amended, altered or improved as aforesaid, by the name, style and title of The Atlantic Refining Company and by the said name, the said corporation shall have successession for the period designated in said original charter, subject to all the provisions and restrictions of the above recited acts of the General Assembly, and all other laws of this Commonwealth relating thereto.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State, at Harrisburg, this twenty-fourth day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-three and of the Commonwealth the one hundred and seventeenth.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

Now on this the 15th day of June, A. D. 1897, came on to be heard this cause and both parties having appeared and announced ready for trial, there was then and there presented to the court the general and special exceptions of defendant to plaintiff's first amended original petition and the Court after hearing argument of counsel, considers that said exceptions are not well taken, and,

It is therefore ordered that said general exceptions and all of said special exceptions be and the same are hereby overruled to which the defendant excepts; and then came on the cause to be further heard and came a jury of good and lawful men, to-wit: W. T. McGregor and eleven others, who being duly empanelled and sworn, and who after hearing the pleadings read and after hearing the evidence and argument of counsel and receiving the charge of the Court retired to consider of their verdict and returned into Court the following verdict:

"AUSTIN, TEXAS, June 15th, 1897.

"We the jury find for the plaintiff the State of Texas, against the defendant Waters Pierce Oil Company and in favor of the individual defendants Hathaway, Austin, Grice, Keenan and Fries.

W. T. McGREGOR, Foreman."

It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the Court, that the defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, be and is hereby denied the right and prohibited from doing any business within this State and that its permit to do business within this State heretofore issued on July 6th, 1889, by the Secretary of State of this State be and the same is hereby cancelled and held for naught and that said defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, its managers, superintendents, agents, servants and attorneys be and are hereby perpetually enjoined and restrained from doing business within this State.

1758 Nothing herein shall be construed to in any way effect or apply to or prohibit said defendant's right to engage in interstate commerce within this State;

It is further ordered that the plaintiff, the State of Texas, recover of the defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company all costs in this behalf incurred for which let execution issue.

It is further ordered that the Clerk of this Court shall issue all necessary papers to enforce this judgment.

It is also ordered that the defendants, E. T. Hathaway, William Grice, F. A. Austin, J. W. Keenan and Lewis Fries go hence without day and that plaintiff take nothing as to said defendants and that they recover of plaintiff their costs in this behalf expended.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, ss:

[Seal U. S. Sup. Court.]

The President of the United States of America to the Honorable the Judges of the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District of the State of Texas, Greeting:

Whereas, lately in the said Court of Civil Appeals, before you, or some of you, in a cause between The Waters Pierce Oil Company, Appellant and the State of Texas, Appellee No. 1974, wherein the judgment of Said Court of Civil Appeals, entered in said cause on the 9th day of March, A. D. 1898, is in the following words, viz: "This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record, and the same being inspected, because it is the opinion of the Court that there was no error in the judgment, it is therefore considered, adjudged and ordered that the judgment of the court below be in all things affirmed; that the appellee, The State of Texas; E. T. Hathaway, William Grice, F. A. Austin, J. W. Keenan and Lewis Fries do have and recover of and from the appellant, The Waters Pierce Oil Company, principal and its sureties, J. G. Palm, Geo.

1767 Clark and Wm. B. Abaide, all costs in this behalf expended, and this decision be certified below for observance," as by inspection of the transcript of the record of the said Court of Civil Appeals which was brought into the Supreme Court of the United States by virtue of a writ of error agreeably to the act of Congress, in such case made and provided, fully and at large appears.

And whereas in the present term of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety nine, the said cause came on to be heard before the Supreme Court of the United States on the said transcript of record, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, It is now here ordered and adjudged by this court that the judgment of the said Court of Civil Appeals in this cause be, and the same is hereby affirmed with costs; and that the said appellee, The State of Texas, recover against the said appellant for its costs herein expended and have execution therefor.

March 19, 1900.

And the same is hereby remanded to you the said Judges of the said Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Judicial District of the State of Texas, in order that such execution and proceedings may be had in the said cause, in conformity with the judgment and decree of this court above stated, as, according to right and justice, and the Constitution and laws of the United States, ought to be had therein, the said writ of error notwithstanding.

Witness the Honorable Melville W. Fuller, Chief Justice of the United States, the 20th day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand, nine hundred.

Shipments of Refined Oil from San Francisco to Mexican Ports.

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 6th, 1903.

J. P. Gruet, Esq., Sect. W. P. O. Co., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your favor of the 20th ulto., in regard to price of Refined Oil for shipment from San Francisco, Cal., to Mexican Ports, beg to say, that I have obtained the following information from San Francisco: The rate of freight from San Francisco via Pacific Mail Steamship Co., to Acapulco, Manzanilla (for Colima), San Blas is $7. per ton of 40 cubic feet, with a lighterage charge which the P. M. S. S. Co., were unable to get, which they assume will be from $1. to $1.50 per ton. They could not get the rate from Manzanilla to Colima. The P. C. S. S. Co. quote rates to Culiacan, Guaymas and Lapaz at $7.75 per ton, with a lighterage charge of about $1.75 per ton. The lighterage is for 2,200 pounds; the rate per ton is for 40 cubic feet. The price of Refined Oil 1774 in cases f. o. b. San Francisco would be from 20 to 20½ cents per gallon in reasonably large quantities, the drawback to accrue to seller. The custom charges on each shipment would be from $4 to $6 which would be charged to the W. P. O. Co. Trusting that this will give the information you require, I remain,

Yours truly,
R. H. McNALL.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 4th inst., enclosing Cyclopædia Reports of various points. It was the intention to get this information for all points where competitors have plants. If there are any other points beside those given where outside plants are located would be glad to have such information in Cyclopædia form as you can get.

On report of the S. W. Oil Company, at Ft. Worth, Texas, I note that they commenced business in November, 1901, but in giving receipts of petroleum products you specify that it is for nine months making a total of 1677 barrels. Will you kindly advise 1776 whether these parties commenced business in November, 1901. If so, should not the receipts be given for the year 1902?

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 11th, 1903.

J. P. Gruet, Esq., Sect. W. P. O. Co., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: In your telegram of May 8th giving total sales of Refined Oil and Naphtha for the month of April, I notice that you have included in the Naphtha sale 20 bbls. of Engine Naphtha. Is this material purchased from the Guffy or other Texas Refiners? If so, will you kindly report such purchases each month on 1777 blanks which I believe you have for that purpose so that I will be fully informed as to the quantity purchased, from whom, price paid, etc.

Cost of Barreling and Marketing.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Dec. 7, 1903.

J. P. Gruet, Sec'y, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: I beg to give below memo. of the average cost of barreling and of marketing oil at Stations in your various divisions during the first six months of 1903, to be used in preparing cost and selling price statements during the first six months of 1904.

On account of recent advances in paying prices for empty packages, there has been added by me to the average cost of empty packages, first six months of 1903, an amount sufficient to cover recent advances of price of empty barrels.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your favor of the 10th inst., beg to say that I am sending to you, by accompanying mail, Refinery Blanks, for your information and guidance.

It is possible that similar blanks could be used at your Mexican Refineries to advantage, in fact Mr. Edwards, soon after his arrival in Mexico last year, wrote direct to one of the refinery superintendents, with whom he was acquainted, asking for copies of these Blanks as he preferred Blanks which he had been using to those he found in Mexico. The letter was referred to me, and I got a set of the Blanks in question and sent them to Mr. Finlay, with a letter, under date of January 24th, 1902, and I presume Mr. Finlay sent these Blanks to Mr. Edwards in Mexico. Mr. Edwards, however is still using the old Blanks, which are not conveniently arranged for making his reports, and which must necessitate a good deal of extra work.

Will you kindly look over the Blanks which I am sending you and, if possible, have your Mexican Refinery Reports conform to them in a general way, and oblige,

Yours truly, R. H. McNALL.

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 28th, 1902.

J. P. Gruet, Esq., Sec'y Waters Pierce Oil Co., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: I hand you with this letter some blank Forms 41-D and 41-N. Kindly have these reports prepared and sent to me each month, and have the June report rendered regularly.

You will understand that I have a report showing Deliveries of Lubricating Oil, but have never received any report from Mexico of the Deliveries of refined oil and Naphtha.

You will please note that these blanks call for the number of gallons, amount of money, and the average price received by the Refinery on deliveries to the trade. This price should show the average price received after deducting all charges, such as freight, terminal charges, etc., etc., arriving at a bulk price received F. O. B. Refinery.

Cost of Milk Cans.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Jan. 15, 1902.

J. P. Gruet, Sec'y Waters Pierce Oil Co., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your favor of the 11th on the above subject I think your manner of having these milk cans numbered, 1787 and keeping a careful record of them, is certainly a most excellent and wise scheme. It is my feeling, however, that the cost of these milk cans should be charged in the first place, as a B. & M. Expense, it not being considered desireable to carry them as a plant item. This would, in no way, interfere, with your way of carrying this account, except that you charge the cost of cans to B. & M. expense.

DEAR SIR: Referring again to my letter on the above subject beg to say that, according to the last encyclopedia report dated Jan'y 1st, 1902, you showed the tank wagons mentioned below at your City of Mexico plant, and in a recent letter from you, on this subject, you stated that you had only 12 tank wagons at this point, and out of that 12 only 6 of the number shown as being in operation during the month of October correspond with the numbers of the wagons shown on your encyclopedia report. I also have a record that, on February 15th, 1902, an appropriation was passed for running gear, wheels, etc. for wagon 289 and on June 18 you report appropriation No. 298 for a tank wagon transferred to the City of Mexico from St. Louis, the number of which is not stated. Will you kindly advise me if your encyclopedia report of January 1st, 1902, showing wagons as per list below at the City of Mexico is correct, if so, will you kindly send me a memorandum of transfers and additions so that I can make corrections on my records here, and oblige.

Marine Insurance.

NEW YORK, N. Y., March 13, 1903.

J. P. Gruet, Esq., Sec'y W. P. O. Co., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: You may remember that in November, 1900, I took up with you the question of Marine Insurance on petroleum merchandise, also, material for Mexico Refineries. In your letter received this morning, in refernce to the goods lost on lighter alongside S. S. "Havana" last October, you stated that all goods at Vera Cruz, Mexico, are lightered for your account, therefore, I am of the opinion that the insurance companies are not liable for loss of goods from the lighter alongside the S. S. "Havana".

On looking over the policy with the Federal Insurance Company (R. C. Rathbone & Son) on which your refinery supplies are covered, I only find provision for loss during natural voyage of the 1789 steamer on which the goods are shipped. It does not cover lighterage from steamer to final destination, neither does the policy with the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company on which your petroleum merchandise is insured, cover lighterage at Mexican Ports.

I believe it would be a good time to go over this insurance question and arrange policy so as to cover all the risks to which goods are subjected. The rate charged us by R. C. Rathbone & Son is 35 cents per $100., from which there is no rebate. And open policy can be taken out with the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co., for about 40 cents per $100 say, possibly a little higher if goods are insured on lighters, and, at the end of the year, a rebate of 40 per cent. is given, payable in script bearing 6%, running for four or five years. This script can always be sold at par, perhaps a little better. This would be a better rate than now obtained through R. C. Rathbone & Son, and there is considerable advantage in having all the goods insured in one company, so that losses would not have to be divided, as in the present case in the S. S. "Havana".

If you think well of making some change and taking out an open policy in the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co., I will do so on the best terms possible. In doing so, we will take out a policy for, say $1000 on six months insurance, for which the insurance Company would ask us to sign a note for the total premium on same. This can either be allowed to mature, or can be discounted, the latter is the usual course pursued. I should then want to know just what risk you will want covered for goods shipped from New York to any port in Mexico, including all ports, and would like you to state at what ports you would wish the goods insured for delivery by lighter.

I will advise you within a short time as to whether the Insurance Companies consider themselves liable for the loss of the goods on the S. S. "Havana".

Yours truly,

R. H. McNALL.

Fuel Oil Shipments for January.

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 24th, 1903.

J. P. Gruet, Esq., Sec'y W. P. O. Co., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of Report from "23 D," Receipts and Purchases for month of January. I am inclined to think that the names of some of the parties given, from whom Oil was purchased during the month, do not agree with the notices sent me by Mr. Finlay when he reports current purchases. For instance, there are two items on the report which I cannot check with my records, namely, Galveston—Beaumont Oil Co., 2,000 bbls., at 51 cts., and W. E. Brice, 2951 bbls., at 50 cts. However, I have entered these two items as current purchases during the month.

I should like to have each month, as I have written you before, a report showing the Fuel Oil purchased during the month from the Corsicana Refinery, giving the number of barrels, and the prices paid for same. Will you kindly arrange so that this report will come to me regularly, and oblige,

Yours truly, R. H. McNALL.

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 18th, 1902.

J. P. Gruet, Esq., Sec'y Waters Pierce Oil Co., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 15th inst. enclosing semi-annual statement No. 1, showing value of sales and bad accounts charged to Profit and Loss for the first six (6) months of 1902.

I note that the bad debts charged to Profit and Loss in East Texas and Louisiana Division and North Texas Division are very much greater than at other points, amounting to nearly 1% of the credit sales.

Will you kindly advise me how you account for this large increase in bad debts in East Texas and Louisiana and North Texas Divisions, and oblige,

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 20th instant in regard to bad debts charged off during the month of June, and the amount of indemnity insurance which you will probably be able to collect on such losses. If I remember correctly you paid a considerable premium for this insurance, and it does not seem to me good policy to continue this Credit Insurance. I am glad that you have been more fortunate than you anticipated, in collecting your accounts in Texas and Missouri. It would appear, from reports we have here, that the South and Southwest are in a prosperous condition, that is, from the crop standpoint.

H. A. Dennett, Cashier, Dallas, Texas.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 25th inst., received. If you have not done so, please send regular slip, showing advance in your case Eupion price at Dallas.

Of course in Mngr. Grice's absence, you appreciate the necessity of close attention to the Eagle Refining Company's efforts at Dallas and surrounding territory; and as we have understood from Mngr. Grice, Mr. Taylor is to give his time to this particular trade.

We are very glad to know that you are on such good terms with the railroad people, that Mr. Clem gains nothing by mark-1798 ing his shipments by numbers, instead of names.

We want to make prices at Dallas, and in the neighborhood on Brilliant and Water White oil, that will prevent Clem doing any business.

Hope you will make it a point to be present at the next meeting of the City Council tomorrow night and do everything possible to prevent granting of permit to build within city limits, unless building similar to ours is constructed; for it would not be fair to us, to allow some one else to put up construction for the storage of oil, when they had compelled us to put up such an expensive building, as we have done. Of course we appreciate, however, that you will cover these points, without our calling your attention to them.

Would be glad to have you advise us, when Clem's first two tank cars have been emptied and returned; also the second two, to which you refer as having been in the yard, nine and sixteen days, that we may know how long they have been held in Dallas. The movement of tank cars, enters into the cost of the oil; so it is necessary to have this information, that we may know what we are competing with.

No. 12589.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
THE WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY ET AL.

GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY:

This is a suit by the State of Texas, as plaintiff, against the Waters Pierce Oil Company, a private corporation, and E. T. Hathaway, William Grice, F. A. Austin, J. W. Keenan, and Lewis Fries, as defendants, to cancel the permit of said Waters Pierce Oil Company to do business in this state, and to enjoin all of said defendants from further transacting the business of said company in this state, on account of an alleged violation of the laws of this state against trusts by said company, its agents and employés.

The plaintiff alleges that the defendant Waters Pierce Oil Company is a private corporation, incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri, for the purpose of dealing in petroleum and its products and in selling the same in the state of Missouri and other states, and that on July 6, 1889, said company filed its articles of incorporation in the secretary of state's office in this state, and secured a permit to transact its said business in the state of Texas for a term of ten years, as provided by the laws of this state, and that since said date defendant company has been transacting its said business in this state, and has divided this state into five general divisions for the purpose of transacting its said business, and that the defendants E. T. Hathaway, F. A. Austin, William Grice, 1801 J. W. Keenan, and Lewis Fries are the respective managers of defendant company in said general divisions of this state, and have appointed various local agents throughout this state for the transaction of its business.

Plaintiff further alleges that the defendant company has violated the law of this state against trusts, by making and entering into a contract with, and becoming a member of, the Standard Oil Trust; which contract and agreement is set out in full in plaintiff's petition, and for doing certain other acts in connection with said Standard Oil Trust agreement.

Plaintiff also alleges that the defendant company has violated the law of this state against trusts by entering into a contract with the Eagle Refining Company, with C. W. Robinson, with J. L. Lewis and Stilwell Bros., as set out in plaintiff's petition and introduced in evidence before you.

Plaintiff further alleges that since July 6, 1889, said defendant company has been, and still is, engaged in dealing in and selling the products of petroleum in this state, and that during that time said company has made, and is still making, through its agents in this state, contracts and agreements, by and between said company and other parties dealing in, buying, and selling similar oils, in this state, by the terms of which agreements said parties, for a valuable consideration paid them by defendant company, agreed and contracted that they would not buy any oils from any other person or corporation, but would deal with and buy and sell oils obtained from said defendant company exclusively; that said company has further contracted with certain of said persons, as aforesaid, for a valuable consideration, paid by defendant company to said parties, by the terms of which said parties contracted and agreed to buy from and sell the oils of defendant company exclusively, and not to sell the oils so bought, as aforesaid, to any one buying from, or dealing with, any other person or corporation dealing in such oils in competition with said defendant company, and, further, that said 1802 company, since July 6, 1889, has made and entered into other contracts and agreements, by and between it and various others dealing in, buying, and selling oils, by the terms of which said parties agree with said company to purchase its said oils, and to sell the same to others desiring to purchase the same, at prices fixed and established by it or its agents and officers. The names and dates and contracts above referred to are set out in plaintiff's petition.

Plaintiff further alleges that prior to July 6, 1889, and also since that date, the defendant company entered into certain contracts in writing, with certain parties in Brownsville, Tex., by the terms of which said parties bound themselves to buy all their oil from defendant company, for a fixed period, in consideration of certain rebates allowed them by defendant company, and also agreed to sell such oil at a price fixed by defendant company, and that such contracts as were entered into prior to 1889 have been carried out and executed, and business done thereunder by said parties since that date to the present time. The parties with whom said contracts were made, and the terms thereof, are set out in plaintiff's petition.

Plaintiff alleges that all of said contracts above mentioned were made by the agents of said defendant company, and were authorized by it, and were fully ratified and carried out by it after same had been so made, and that the same were a violation of the laws against trusts of this state; that the products of petroleum are articles of prime necessity to the people of this state, and that, by reason of said acts and contracts, said defendant company has forfeited its right to transact business in this state; and prays for an injunction prohibiting the defendant company, its agents and employés, from further violating said statute, and for a decree canceling the permit of said company to do business in this state.

The defendants answer by a general denial of all the allegations of plaintiff's petition, and especially answer that the Waters Pierce Oil Company is the real defendant in this action, and that 1803 the other parties named as defendants are simply its agents in the state of Texas. It further says that the state of Texas is estopped from canceling defendant's permit to do business in this state, because that on July 6, 1889, through its proper officers, and in pursuance of the provisions of the law of this state, it did, for a sufficient and lawful consideration, issue to said company a permit to do business in this state for a term of ten years from that date, and that said permit was a valid and binding contract between it and the state of Texas.

Defendant further pleads that it is a foreign corporation of the state of Missouri, having its principal offices in said state of Missouri, and that the business transacted by it in the state of Texas was interstate commerce, and not subject to the laws of the state of Texas. Defendants denies that it ever became a member of, or a party to, the Standard Oil Trust agreement, or that it acted with said trust, or was controlled by said trust in any way; that said trust was dissolved March 21, 1892. Defendant denies that it ever entered into any of the contracts or agreements with the parties named in plaintiff's petition, for the sale of its oils, and that if any such contracts or agreements were entered into, as set forth in plaintiff's petition, with any one representing the defendant company, either as agent, attorney, employé, servant, or otherwise, the same was never known to the defendant company, nor did it ever san-tion or ratify such contract, either directly or indirectly; wherefore they pray that plaintiff take nothing by this suit.

Upon the law of the case, you are instructed as follows:

Under the laws of this state, a 'trust' is defined as follows: A trust is a combination of capital, skill, or acts, by two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any, or all of the following purposes: First, To create or carry out restructions in trade or commerce, or aids to commerce or to create or carry out restrictions in the full and free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of the state. Second. To increase or reduce the price of merchan-
1804 dise, produce, or commodities. Third. To prevent competition in manufacture, making, transportation sale, or purchase of merchandise, produce, or commodities, or to prevent competition in aids to commerce. Fourth. To fix at any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public shall be in any manner controlled or established, any article or commodity or merchandise, produce, or commerce intended for sale, use, or consumption in this State. Fifth. To make or enter into or execute or carry out any contract, obligation, or agreement of any kind or description, by which they shall bind or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of, or transport any article or commodity or article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce, or consumption below a common standard figure, or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity, or transportation at a fixed or graded figure, or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of any article or commodity or transportation, between them or themselves and others, to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, or by which they shall agree to pool, combine, or unite any interest they may have in connection with the sale or transportation of any such articles or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected.

Now, if you find from the evidence that the defendant company, acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents entered into and performed a contract, in the state of Texas, with any of the parties dealing in, buying, and selling oils, as named and sent out in plaintiff's petition, since July 6, 1889, by the terms of which contract it was agreed that said parties were to buy oil from the defendant company exclusively, for any specified time, and from no other source, in consideration of rebates allowed them by the defendant company, or for any other valuable consideration; or if you find that said company, so acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents, since said date, made, entered into, 1805 and carried out a contract in this state with any of the persons named and as stated in plaintiff's petition, by the terms of which said parties bound and obligated themselves, for a valuable consideration, to buy all their oils from defendant company, and not to buy oils from any other source for any specified time, and not to sell said oils so bought from defendant company to any person handling or dealing in oils in competition with defendant company; or if said defendant company, so acting since said date, made and entered into and carried out, in this state, a contract with any of the parties, as stated and named in plaintiff's petition, by the terms of which said parties, for a valuable consideration, bound and obligated themselves to said company, either verbally or in writing, to buy all their oils exclusively from defendant company, and from no other source, and to sell said oils so bought to other parties desiring to purchase the same at a price fixed by said company's officers or agents; and you further find that said sales of oils were not interstate commerce, as that is hereinafter explained to you, and that said officers or agents, so acting for said company in making said contracts, if any were so made, were acting in the scope of their employment and duty, and were authorized to make such contracts by the governing officers of said company, or that said governing officers with a knowledge that said contracts had been made, consented to and ratified or carried out the same after they were made,—then you are instructed that the defendant would be guilty of violating the law against trusts, of this state; and, if you so find the facts to be as above stated, you will return a verdict for the plaintiff against the defendant Waters Pierce Oil Company.

You are further instructed that a corporation can only act through its agents and servants, but a corporation is not liable for all the acts of its agents or servants. It is liable, however, for the acts of its agents, done in the scope of their employment and agency, 1806 and is also liable for the acts of its agents which it has authorized such agents to perform, and it is also liable for the unauthorized acts of its agents which have been acquiesced in, or ratified by, the governing body of said corporation.

Now, if you find from the evidence that any or all of the contracts mentioned in Section No. 10 of this charge were made and carried out by the defendant company, acting through its agents, with the parties therein named, but you do not find that said agents were authorized by the governing body of said corporation to make said contracts, nor that said contracts were made in the scope of the duty and employment of such agents, and do not find that said contracts, if any were made, were known to, or acquiesced in or consented to by, the governing body of said corporation, after being made by said agents, then you will return a verdict for the defendant company.

But if you find said contracts mentioned in section No. 10 of this charge were entered into by the defendant company, acting through its agents, and that said agents were acting in the scope of their employment and agency in making said contracts, or, if said contracts were not authorized by the governing body of said corporation, that it acquiesced in or consented to or ratified said acts, after knowing the same had been entered into, then said defendant company would be liable for such acts.

You are further instructed that this court has no jurisdiction over, and the laws of this state do not apply to, interstate commerce; that is, to commerce between the different states of the United States. Shipments of oils or other products, made by the Waters Pierce Oil Company from points without this state to its agents within this state, is interstate commerce, until such oils are sold by said company in the original packages in which it was shipped into this state and as such is not subject to the laws of this state regulating the sale thereof; and if the evidence introduced before you 1807 shows any of the contracts set out in plaintiff's petition were made in reference to any state commerce, then you will not consider such contracts further, as the laws of this state do not cover such transactions; but, on the other hand, if the Waters Pierce Oil Company shipped oils from points beyond this state to its agents to points within this state, and, after their receipt in this state, the same were sold by said agents in this state, to parties in this state, in broken packages, or by retail, and not in the original packages in which said oils were shipped into this state, then such business is not interstate commerce and is subject to the laws of this state. You are further instructed that, even though the contracts may have reference to interstate shipments of oils, yet if the parties go further, and contract that such oils, after being sold by said Waters Pierce Oil Company to parties in this state, shall be sold, by said parties at a price, fixed by the duly-authorized agents of defendant company then you are informed that such dealing with said oils, after its sale to parties in this state, is not protected by the interstate commerce laws, but such contracts, if made, are subject to the laws of this state.

You are instructed that the law against trusts in this state became a law on March 30, 1889, and was amended in 1895, and the defendant company obtained its permit to do business in this state on July 6, 1889, and all transactions in evidence before you of date prior to July 6, 1889, are immaterial in this case, except where such contracts were continued and carried out subsequent to July 6, 1889, and for the purpose of showing the course of dealing of said company in this state, and such transactions prior to July 6, 1889, are no ground for forfeiture of defendant's permit to do business.

There has been certain evidence introduced before you tending to show efforts and inducements offered by the agents of the 1808 defendant company to parties to handle oils of defendant company exclusively, and tending to show refusal of the agents of said company to sell parties handling other oils than those of defendant company, and of discrimination in prices against parties handling other oils than those of defendant company, and of cutting of prices by defendant company to break down competition. None of these things are unlawful, and was only admitted as bearing upon the question of the course of dealing of defendant company in this state, and as bearing upon the question whether or not the defendant company made or entered into the contracts, or any of them, as set out and mentioned in section No. 10 herein, and as to whether or not such contracts or course of dealings, if any such there was, was known to the governing officers of t-e defendant company or was authorized by them.

There has been introduced in evidence before you a certain contract, known as the 'Standard Oil Trust Agreement,' and certain evidence tending to show that the defendant Waters Pierce Oil Company became a member of and entered into said agreement. You are instructed that the evidence is not sufficient to show that defendant became a member of said organization, if at all, in a manner that violates the trust laws of this state, and you will therefore disregard all testimony upon this branch of the case.

There has also been introduced in evidence before you certain evidence in regard to a contract made by the defendant company with the Eagle Refining Company, and also with C. W. Robinson, with J. L. Lewis, and Stillwell Bros., in the state of Texas, by which they purchased the business of such concerns. You are instructed that such transactions as these are not believed to be in violation of the laws of this state, and the evidence in regard to these transactions will only be considered by you as bearing upon the course of dealing of defendant company in this state.

1809 The questions for you to determine in this case are: First. Were any of the contracts mentioned in section 10 of this charge made and entered into and carried out by the defendant company in this state since July 6, 1889, acting through its agents? Second. Whether such agents were acting in the scope of their authority and employment in making such contracts, or, if not, whether same were ratified or acquiesced in by defendant company after they were so made. Third. Whether said contracts, if any, related to interstate commerce or to business within this state.

In determining whether or not the agents of defendant company were authorized to make the contracts alleged, if any were so made, or whether same were known to or acquiesced in by defendant company's governing officers, the same does not necessarily have to be shown by positive or direct testimony, but may be shown by circumstances; and you will take into consideration all the facts and circumstances in evidence before you in determining this question.

You will return a verdict for the defendants Hathaway, Austin, Grice, Kennan, and Fries, as they are only the agents of defendant company, and not liable in this suit. If you find a verdict for the plaintiff, you will say: 'We, the jury, find for all the defendants, and that Plaintiff take nothing by this suit.'

The burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show, by a preponderance of the evidence, the facts necessary to entitle it to recover.

The jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses, the facts proven, and the weight to be given the testimony, but are bound to receive the law from the court and be governed thereby.

Walker Smith Gro. Co., Brownwood.

CWC 1. FEB. 10*th*, 1906.

Mr. C. P. Ackert, Gen. Mgr., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 8th received and noted.

We have not as yet, been able to arrive at a satisfactory understanding with the Walker Smith Gro. Co. at Brownwood, Texas. I went into matters very thouroughly with them when in Brownwood last week but they did not seem at that time disposed to accept a 10% proposition. Their Buyer suggested that we could have their business if we would allow them a discount of 15%, but I do not feel that conditions at the present time warrant our offering them such a liberal arrangement.

Our making an arrangement with these people would probably shut the R. G. O. Co. out in this particular territory and would likely enable us to advance our schedules from ½ to 1¢ per gal. at several points, and, after carefully considering the matter, I have reached the conclusion that it would pay us to allow them a discount of 12½%, as a last resort, and I am rather inclined to think they would accept this arrangement.

If you agree with me in the matter kindly authorize us to arrange with them on this basis.

Yours truly, —— ——, Manager.

1811 Mr. C. P. Ackert, Gen. Mgr., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of the 5th inst. on the above subject.

The Southwestern Oil Co. and R. G. O. Co. Corsicana, appear to be getting all the Gasoline they want from the Texas Co. and the Climax Ink & Oil Co., Clem Oil Co. and Oriental Oil Co. are being kept well supplied by the G. R. Co.—Can't you arrange in some way to get gasoline which the G. R. Co. and Texas Co. are selling in a wholesale way to the concern referred to above?

With these small concerns out of the road we could obtain a much more satisfactory price for our gasoline than is possible under present conditions.

Yours truly, —— ——, Manager.

Discount Rotan Grocery Co., Waco.

CWC-1. MARCH 7, 1906.

Mr. C. P. Ackert, Gen. Mgr., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: I have recently had some correspondence with the Rotan Gro. Co. of Waco, Texas relative to supplying them with what refined oil they have occasion to market, and for your information I hand you herewith, copy of a letter received from them under date of the 6th, inst.

As you will no doubt remember, the Rotan Gro. Co. have been working with the R. G. O. Co. during the past two years, and while they have not done very much of late they were at one time placing quite a number of cars.

We have the territory in which the Rotan Gro. Co. are doing business well covered by our tank wagons and I do not believe they will be able to do much business, however, our having an 1812 arrangement with them on refined oil will assist us in holding their trade on axle grease, lubricating oils and other lines which they handle and they will also assist us in preventing the sale of a car of refined oil here and there which the R. G. O. Co. might put in with the assistance of the Rotan Gro. Co. Salesman.

I would suggest that you authorize us to allow them a discount of 10% on their purchases at Waco, Temple, Hico, Hillsboro, Cameron and Rockdale, (The latter agency is in South Texas Division)—I also think it a good idea to concede them a 2% discount for cash to protect them to cover the taxes which they will pay the State of Texas on their refined oil sales.

Kindly let me hear from you hereon promptly

Yours truly, —— ——, Manager.

Discount Snyder Brokerage Co., San Angelo.

MARCH 27, 1906.

Mr. C. P. Ackert, General Manager, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: Since our last advance of 1¢ per gal. on Eupion Oil at San Angelo, Texas, the Snyder Brokerage Co. have become dissatisfied, and it will be necessary for us to increase their allowance on iron barrel and case Eupion; also case Brilliant 1¢ per gal. to 10% in order to satisfy them and prevent their buying from others in car lots.

The Snyder Brokerage & Storage Co. do a wholesale Grocery and Grain Business, and as they are traveling several men in the San Angelo territory, they are in a position to render us considerable assistance in holding the trade, and I would strongly recommend increasing their discount to the extent asked.

1813 The purchases of this concern during the past six months have averaged $124.66 per month.

Mr. C. P. Ackert, General Manager, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: I will thank you to authorize us to allow B. L. Morris Ft. Worth, Texas a discount of 1¢ per gal. on Eupion Oil.

Mr. Morris' purchases will average about 600 gals. per month. He has been buying exclusively from the Gulf Ref. Co. for the past three months and claims they have been making him some special concessions. However, he has always been disposed to favor competitors at equal prices. The concession asked for will give us his trade in future.

Conditions at Dallas.

DEC. 9*th*, 1905.

Mr. C. P. Ackert, Gen. Mgr., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: As stated in my letter of the 29th, ult. the 1814 Southwestern Oil Co., Clem Oil Co. and Oriental Oil Co. have been offering the better trade at Dallas, discounts varying from ½¢ to 1¢ per gal. on refined oil and gasoline, ever since the last two advances went into effect, and matters have now reached a point where it is going to be necessary for us to either put in effect a reduction of ½¢ on both oil and gasoline or allow a number of discounts, and while as a general proposition I do not favor discounts, I would advise using them in this particular case, at least until rebate offers being made by competitors affect a larger percentage of the total gallonage than at present.

I attach hereto, a list of 19 Dallas Merchants with name of concern from whom they are at present buying, estimate monthly purchases of both refined oil and gasoline, and discounts which it will probably be necessary to allow in order to hold those we are now selling and regain all or a part of the trade of those who are buying from others.

Prior to our putting in effect the first advance of ½¢ on Refined and 1¢ on gasoline Sept. 29th, 1905, we were selling every merchant whose name appears on list with the exception of Sonnenthiel-Holbrook Co. but competitors now have eight out of the 19 and we will gradually lose the others unless we meet offers made by competition which as stated above, vary from ½¢ to 1¢ off schedule on Oil and gasoline and I will be obliged if you will authorize us to allow the discounts noted opposite each merchant's name on enclosed list in case we find it absolutely necessary to do so in order to protect our interests.—We will, of course put in Brilliant against competitors best grade at regular schedule when possible and allow discounts on gasoline only, and all special arrangements will be made subject to change at any time so that in case a reduction in schedule becomes necessary, the discounts can be cut off.

Our total sales, bulk and Bbls. from Dallas in Nov. 1905 were about 56,800 gal. refined and gasoline, while total gallonage affected by proposed discounts, if all are allowed, would be but 12,450 or 22% of the total.

1815 Our total sales from Dallas in Nov. 1905 show a decrease of 98 Bls. as compared with the same month 1904 and practically all of this decrease occurred on City tank Wagon sales, a greater portion of it being due to increase in sales by others, consequently, you will appreciate the importance of at once taking steps to improve conditions.

Yours truly,

Gasoline Prices.

CWC-1. MARCH 7*th*, 1907.

Mr. C. P. Ackert, General Manager, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: I have your wire this date authorizing an advance of 1¢ per gal. on gasoline at Sherman and Ft. Worth if conditions warrant.

We will probably be able to make these advances in the course of the next day or two.

In reference to advancing our gasoline prices at other points. There are a few agencies where it will possibly be safe to make advance, after the advance at Sherman and Ft. Worth are put in effect; I would not, however, advise a general advance until we can find out to what extent the advances being made by the South Texas Refineries will affect such concerns as the Climax Ink & Oil Co., the Southwestern Oil Co., Clem Oil Co., Oriental Oil Co. and the R. G. O. Co.

At the present time the Climax Ink & Oil Co. are naming a flat price of 12¢ per gal. on stove gasoline fob all points to which they are making shipments in car lots, and as they — ma-ntaining agencies at Waco, Greenville Dublin and one or two other convenient 1816 distributing points trade to a more or less extent now, and our advancing at this time would turn a larger per centage of the trade to them then we can afford to let them have. If I find latter that the Climax Ink & Oil Co. are disposed to advance their gasoline prices I will probably take advantage of it at points where we now have ten cent schedules.

I infer from your wire that it will be satisfactory to go ahead and advance our gasoline prices wherever conditions warrant. If I am not correct, please advise.

CWC-1. JAN'Y 10, 1906.

Mr. C. P. Ackert, Gen. Mgr., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our two telegrams of the 9th relative to refined oil shipments from Corsicana.

I was in Corsicana yesterday and on investigation found that the Refinery did not have any finished W. W. 120 on hand that date, and only had two cars of finished P. W. 150, both of which were shipped out yesterday morning on orders from South Texas Division.

Agent Angus will probably get today four or five cars of W. W. 120 but no P. W. 150 and we are promised four cars each of W. W. 120 and P. W. 150 on Saturday the 13th, but if the bad weather we are now having continues throughout the week, it is possible we may not get these last eight cars until next week.—You will understand from the above that we have exhausted the surplus stock of P. W.
150 which the Refinery had on hand, and from now on we 1817 will have to depend on their daily output for our supply of this grade of oil as well as W. W. 120.

As near as I can figure, we can probably depend on getting about 6000 42 gal. barrels of W. W. 120 and 1500 barrels of P. W. 120 or a total of 7500 42 gallon barrels during the remainder of January, and this estimate includes the oil which we will get today.

We will require at Dallas, Ft. Worth, Waco, Corsicana and other points in Central Texas Division, taking less than a 25¢ rate, about 3000 barrels of W. W. 120 between now and February 1, and the remaining 3000 of W. W. and 1500 barrels of P. W. 150 which we can depend upon getting would hardly be enough to supply other Central Texas Agencies during the balance of this month, even though you are agreeable to our getting it off, consequently, you will appreciate the importance of at once arranging to obtain a supply of a satisfactory grade of refined oil from some other source.

I noticed when in Corsicana that South Texas Division is drawing very heavily on Corsicana and in view of the rate to the larger agencies in Central Texas Division being less than 25¢ per cwt. I would suggest that you shift Houston, San Antonio, Austin and other points in South Texas Division where the large gallonage is marketed, to some other supply point.

Please see my letter of Jan'y 8th, to Vice President Finlay and call his attention to this letter.

Corsicana Oil.

CWC-1. JAN'Y 13, 1906.

1818 Mr. C. P. Ackert, Gen. Mgr., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: As you of course understand, the Corsicana Ref. had on hand January 6th, about 5200 barrels finished, and 4000 barrels unfinished, or a total of 9200, 42 gal. barrels of S. W. 112, which is equivalent to 386,400 gals.—Add to this 6000 barrels or 252,000 gals. of W. W. 120, and 4000 barrels of 168000 gals. P. W. 150 which is the estimate output of the Refinery for January, would make a total of 806,400 gallons.

We should mark it in C. T. Division in Jan. very close to 600,000 gals. of Refined oil and as the South Texas Division continues to draw on Corsicana as heavily during the next three or four weeks as they have recently been doing, it is probable the entire stock of all grades of refined oil at Corsicana will be exhausted early in February.

This for your information.

Orders No. 294 and No. 304.

CWC-1. FEB. 15TH, 1906.

Mr. C. P. Ackert, Gen. Mgr., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of the 13th inst. in reference to the above mentioned orders which called for gasoline for shipment to Big Sps. and San Angelo.

1819 As we are forced to sell more or less of this gasoline on basis of engine naphtha prices, I think it would be advisable to have the shipments made from Chaison, account of the gasoline which we are obtaining there costing less than the Corsicana gasoline.

As you no doubt appreciate, the demand for gasoline will increase from now on, and if the Security people are now behind to the extent of 16 cars with their orders, and we are not likely to get cleaned up within the next 30 days, we will certainly be in a very bad shape as the summer advances if we are forced to depend upon them for supplies and their out put is not materially increased. Can't you arrange to obtain a price from the Texas Co. or Gulf Ref. Co. on stove gasoline that would justify your drawing on them for that part of our supplies which cannot be obtained from the Security people.

The Corsicana Refinery have on hand to-day 6 tank cars of gasoline, and Agent Angus has on file the following orders for Corsicana gasoline to be shipped to points in this Division:

|---|---|
| For Dallas Station | 4 cars |
| For Corsicana Station | 3 cars |
| For Ft. Worth Station | 1 car |
| For Waco Station | 1 car |
| | 9 cars |

We will send in at an early date orders for one car each of gasoline to be shipped to the following points:

Cleburne Ennis
Hillsboro Sherman
Weatherford

When sending in orders for the first 4 mentioned agencies, we will specify Corsicana gasoline and they can be sent there for shipment. These orders together with the gasoline which we will require at Dallas, Ft. Worth Waco and Corsicana will probably consume the present stock and out put of the refinery for some time to come.

Estimate Output of Refinery.

CWC-1. FEB. 17TH, 1906.

Mr. C. P. Ackert, Gen. Mgr., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your wire of the 16th.

Supt. Plumley of the Corsicana Ref. Co. advises that it will be impossible for him to give us an estimate of their probable future out put until about the middle of next week. I will advise you promptly as soon as I obtain this information.

The Refinery had on hand at the close of business to-day: the following stock:

W. W. 120..... 300 Bbls.
P. W. 150..... 1200 Bbls.
S. W. 112..... 2500 Bls.
Gasoline..... 1200 Bbls

The 300 Bbls. of W. W. would have been shipped out to-day had we been able to get the cars placed for unloading. This oil will be loaded Monday and shipped on our orders for Mexia and Albany.

The refinery will not be able to give us any more W. W. oil until Thursday or Friday of next week, at which time, we will likely get seven or possibly eight cars all of which should be applied on orders which we now have on file at Corsicana.

Reduction at Commerce.

CWC-1. Dec. 1st, 1905.

Mr. C. P. Ackert, Gen. Mgr., St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Sir: Your letter of the 29th inst. received.

Present selling prices of W. P. O. Co. and Competitors, and proposed schedule as given in our letter of Nov. 27th should have read as follows:

| W. P. O. Co. Present Schedule | Schedule maintained by |
|---|---|
| P. W. Bulk & Bbls.—12½¢ | G. R. Co. and Wyse Oil Co. |
| Eupion Bulk & Bbls. 15¢ | Low grade Oil Blk. & Bbls.—10¢ |
| | High grade Oil Bulk & Bbls. 12¢ |

Proposed schedule W. P. O. Co.
P. W. Bulk & Bbls.—11½¢
Eupion Bulk & Bbls. 12¢

The 1¢ reduction on refined oils asked for will still leave us 1½¢ on low grade and 2¢ on high grade oil, above competitors, and I would strongly advise making this decline at once and later, 1822 we may be forced to make a further reduction.

The Gulf Ref. Co. agent at Commerce, also the Wyse Oil Co. at Greenville are naming a price on 12¢ per gal. on gasoline delivered at Commerce. While our schedule is 15¢ The Commerce gasoline trade does not amount to very much, and so far, these cuts have not materially affected the situation, tho if they continue to maintain a 12¢ price, it is probable we will have to reduce our schedule.

I will be obliged if you will authorize me by return mail to put in effect a reduction of 1¢ per gal. on both grades of refined oil, as asked for in our letter of the 29th.

No. 4212.

THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
THE STATE OF TEXAS, Appellee.

Appeal from the District Court of Travis County.

This case involves alleged violations of the anti-trust laws of this State, and as the charge of the able judge who tried the case sufficiently states the nature of the suit as it was submitted to the jury, and correctly defines the provisions of the anti-trust statutes applicable to the case, and states the issues that were decided by the jury, it is deemed proper to set out the charge in full, which is as follows:

"GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY: In this case the State of Texas, as plaintiff, has sued the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, a private corporation chartered under the laws of the State of Missouri and doing business in Texas by virtue of a permit issued to it by the State of Texas on May 31, 1900, as defendant, to cancel said permit and to recover penalties for violations of the anti-trust laws of Texas which the State alleges the defendant has committed on each and every day from May 31, 1900, to April 29, 1907.

"The State alleges that on or about January 1st, 1870, John D. Rockefeller, John P. Archbold, H. H. Rogers, Henry M. Flagler, and a number of other persons conceived the scheme of monopolizing and controlling the business of refining, transporting and selling petroleum and the products thereof throughout the United States, including the State of Texas, and that said persons to that end and for that purpose entered into a conspiracy among themselves and with other individuals and corporations, including the defendant corporation, which conspiracy the State alleges continued in force 1832 and effect from the date of its formation until the date of the filing of the State's second amended petition in this case, and the State further alleges that in pursuance of said alleged conspiracy the defendant has done various acts and entered into various agreements which constitute violations of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"The State further alleges that the defendant's predecessor, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company incorporated in 1878, on or about the 5th day of October, 1894, entered into a contract with the Eagle Refining Company, A. W. Clem and certain other individuals named in its petition, by the terms of which defendant acquired the property of said Eagle Refining Company, situated in the city of Dallas, Texas, and the right to operate its business under the name of the said Eagle Refining Company. It further alleges that the defendant did, subsequent to May 31, 1900, operate said Eagle Refining Company and maintain the plant thereof at Dallas, as an apparently competing concern for various purposes prohibited by the anti-trust laws.

"The State further alleges that in the year 1896, the defendant's said predecessor bought out the business of the Texas Oil & Gasoline Company and of one Roy Campbell, who were at that time doing business in the city of San Antonio, Texas, and elsewhere, and entered into contracts and agreements with the said Texas Oil & Gasoline Company and Roy Campbell, whereby said Texas Oil & Gasoline Company was thereafter to be operated under said name by defendant as an apparently competing concern with defendant at San Antonio, in the sale of the products of petroleum. It further alleges that said Texas Oil & Gasoline Company was operated by defendant as a concern apparently competing with it at San Antonio subsequent to May 31st, 1900, for various purposes in violation of the anti-trust laws of the State. For full particulars of the 1833 State's allegations you are referred to its second amended original petition.

"The defendant denies all and singular the allegations of the State, and in addition to various of her special defenses, pleads specially that, if it has entered into any of the agreements or committed any of the acts alleged by the State, none of same constitute violations of the anti-trust laws of Texas, because said agreements were made and said acts done (if at all) solely with reference to subjects of interstate commerce. For full particulars of defendant's allegations, you are referred to its third amended original answer.

"As the law of the case you are instructed as follows, viz:

"I. The burden of proof rests upon the State to establish the affirmative of the issues which will hereafter be submitted in this charge for your consideration by a preponderance of the evidence, and you will find in favor of the defendant on each issue so submitted for your consideration, except such issue or issues, if any, as you find that the State has established by a preponderance of the evidence, and you will return a general verdict for the defendant, unless you find that the State has established by a preponderance of the evidence some combination or combinations of facts which will entitle it to recover under the law as it is given you in charge by the court.

"II. The statute known as the anti-trust law of 1899 was in force on May 31, 1900, and thereafter remained continuously in force until March 31st, 1903.

"For the purposes of this charge you are instructed that this act made it unlawful for any corporation transacting or conducting any kind of business in this State to enter into, or become a party to, any agreement or understanding with any other corporation or individual to fix or regulate the price in Texas of any article of manufacture or merchandise or to control or limit in Texas the trade in any article of manufacture or merchandise.

1834 "You are further instructed that said statute also made it unlawful for any corporation transacting or conducting any kind of business in this State to bring about or permit any union or combination of its capital, property, trade or acts with the capital, property, trade or acts of any other person or corporation, whereby the price in Texas of any article of manufacture or merchandise would be fixed or sought to be fixed, regulated or sought to be regulated; or whereby the price in Texas of any article of manufacture or merchandise would be reasonably calculated to be fixed or regulated, or whereby the trade in such article of manufacture or merchandise in Texas would be sought to be controlled or limited, or would be reasonably calculated to be controlled or limited.

"The statute known as the anti-trust law of 1903, became effective on March 31st., 1903, and has since continued in force. For the purposes of this charge you are instructed that this statute defines a trust to be a combination of capital, skill or acts, by two or more persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any or all of the following purposes, viz:

"1. To create or which may tend to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce in Texas, or to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit in Texas of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this State.

"2. To fix, maintain or increase the price of merchandise in Texas.

"3. To prevent or lessen competition in Texas in the sale of merchandise.

"4. To abstain from engaging in business or in the sale of merchandise in Texas, or any portion thereof.

"Said statute of 1903 further defines a monopoly to be a combination or consolidation of two or more corporations when effected in any of the following methods, viz:

"1. When the direction of the affairs of two or more cor-1835 porations is in any manner brought under the same management or control for the purpose of producing, or where such common management or control tends to create, a trust as above defined.

"2. When any corporation acquires the shares or certificates of stock, franchise or other rights, or the physical properties or any part thereof of any other corporation for the purpose of preventing or lessening, or where the effect of such acquisition tends to affect or lessen competition, whether such acquisition is accomplished directly or through the instrumentality of trustees or otherwise.

"III. Oil, all other products of petroleum, and goods, wares or merchandise of any character which the defendant or its agents may have purchased or acquired in any manner outside of the State of Texas and caused to be transported to its agents or others within the state, are the subjects of interstate commerce when they enter this State, and so remain until such commodities are removed from the original tanks, vessels or other packages in which they are imported into the State and become mixed with the common mass of property of similar character in this State. The anti-trust laws of Texas have no reference to agreements or pools or arrangements of any character concerning subjects of interstate commerce, and no agreement, pool or other arrangement, if any, which the defendant may have entered into with reference to the sale of any subject of interstate commerce can be considered by you as violating any anti-trust law of Texas. But neither oil purchased by the defendant from the Corsicana Refinery or elsewhere in Texas, nor other merchandise purchased by defendant at points in Texas, nor such oil or other merchandise purchased by defendant at points outside the State and transported into the State and removed from the original packages or vessels in which it was brought into the State and mingled with other property of similar character in the State, is the subject of interstate commerce, but on the contrary is the subject of local commerce, and any 1836 agreement or pool or arrangement entered into by defendant with reference to such property or the sale thereof, if any such sale there were, would be unlawful, if in violation of the anti-trust laws of this State.

"IV. A corporation such as defendant can only act through its agents and servants, but such a corporation is not liable for all of the acts of its agents or servants. It is liable, however, for the acts done in the scope of their employment and agency, and is also liable for the acts of its agents which it has authorized such agents to perform, and it is also liable for the unauthorized acts of its agents, if any, which have been knowingly acquiesced in or ratified by the governing body of said corporation.

"V. Much evidence has been introduced before you relating to the doings and agreements of the agents of corporations other than defendant, and to the doings and agreements of defendant's predecessor's agents prior to June 1st., 1900, and to the doings and agreements of defendant's agents, and the agents of other corporations, outside the State of Texas, and to the doings and agreements of individuals both prior and subsequent to June 1st., 1900, and both outside and within the State of Texas. None of this evidence is competent or can be considered by you against the defendant, except within the limitations and for the purposes hereinafter stated, viz:

"If you find from a preponderance of the other evidence in the case, independent of all declarations or statements made by any person or persons, except their evidence given while testifying by deposition or personally as witnesses on the trial of this case, that on June 1, 1900, there was formed or existed an agreement between the governing officers of defendant and the governing officers of any of the other corporations alleged in the State's petition to be co-conspirators with defendant relating to the manag-ment of defendant's business, or between the governing officers of defendant and any of the individuals alleged in the State's petition to be co-conspirators 1837 with defendant relating to the management of defendant's business, then you may consider for what, if anything, you think it worth, such acts or declarations of all the parties to said agreement, if any, and such acts and declarations of their authorized agents, if any, as were done or made, as the case may be, during the existence of said agreement, if any, and in furtherance of its execution, for the purpose of determining the character of said agreement, and whether or not it contemplated a violation by defendant of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"You may further consider for what, if anything, you think it worth as tending to show or explain the course of defendant's dealing in Texas, said evidence, if any, of what it did through its duly appointed and authorized agents, if any, outside the State.

"None of said evidence can be considered by you against the defendant for any other purpose whatsoever, and none of it can be so considered by you against the defendant for said purposes, except such of it, if any, as you think proper to be considered when tested by the rules above stated relating to its competency.

"VI. No agreement made by the defendant outside the State of Texas, to violate the anti-trust laws of Texas, if any such there were, can be made the basis for forfeiting its permit to do business in Texas, or for imposing penalties upon it, unless such agreement was executed or attempted to be executed in Texas by the duly authorized agents of defendant; but inasmuch as the undisputed evidence in the case shows that the defendant has continuously maintained its agents in this State and prosecuted its business therein since May 31, 1900, you will be authorized to convict it of violating the anti-trust laws of Texas, if you find from a preponderance of the evidence in favor of the State on the issues submitted for your consideration in paragraphs VII, VIII, IX, X or XI of this charge.

1838 "VII. If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant company, acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents, entered into or became a party to an agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, on June 1, 1900, to fix or regulate the price in Texas of oil refined from petroleum, and if you further find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant company remained or continued to be a party to said agreement or understanding, if any, and persisted in carrying same out in Texas, if any, through its duly authorized agents on June 1, 1900, or on any other date or dates subsequent to June 1, 1900, and prior to March 31, 1903, and if you further find from a preponderance of the evidence that the oil with reference to which said agreement or understanding, if any, was so made and carried out, was the subject of local as distinguished from interstate commerce, you will return a verdict for the state and say by your verdict, we the jury find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph seven of the court's charge. You are instructed in this connection that if you find in favor of the State on the issue above submitted for your consideration in this paragraph of the charge, each day embraced between May 31, 1900 and March 31, 1903, during which the defendant remained a party to the agreement or understanding herein mentioned, if there were any such agreement or understanding, and if it remained a party to same on any of said days, would constitute a separate and distinct violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"If you do no- find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant was on June 1st, 1900, or on some date subsequent thereto and prior to March 31, 1903, through the action of its duly appointed and authorized agents, a party to an agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey to fix or regulate the price in Texas of oil refined from petroleum, and 1839 if you do not further find from a preponderance of the evidence that the oil with reference to which defendant entered into said agreement or understanding, if any such there were, was the subject of loca-, as distinguished from interstate commerce, you will say by your verdict, we the jury find for the defendant on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph seven of the court's charge.

"VIII. If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that on June 1st.,1900, or on any date subsequent thereto and prior to March 31st., 1903, the defendant acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents, had brought about or permitted any combination or union of its capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, whereby the price in Texas oil refined from petroleum, other than oil which was the subject of interstate as distinguished from local commerce, was sought to be fixed or regulated, or whereby the price in Texas of such oil would be reasonably calculated to be fixed or regulated, or whereby the trade in such oil in Texas was sought to be controlled or limited, you will return a verdict for the State and say by your verdict, we the jury find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph eight of the court's charge. In this connection you are instructed that if the defendant became a party to a pool of the character mentioned in this paragraph of the charge, each day between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, that it remained a party to such pool, if there were any such days, would constitute a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas. If you do not find from a preponderance of the evidence that on June 1, 1900, or that on some date subsequent thereto and prior to March 31, 1903, the defendant acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents had brought about or permitted a combination or union of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, and if you do not further find from a 1840 preponderance of the evidence that by said combination or union, if such there were, the price in Texas of oil refined from petroleum, other than oil which was the subject of interstate as distinguished from local commerce, was sought to be fixed or regulated, or that thereby the price in Texas of such oil was reasonably calculated to be fixed or regulated, or that thereby the trade in such oil in Texas was sought to be controlled or limited, you will say by your verdict, we the jury, find for the defendant on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph eight of the court's charge.

"IX. If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant, acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents, entered into a combination of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey for the purpose of creating in Texas, or which tended to create in Texas, or carry out in Texas, restrictions in the free pursuit in this State of the business of selling oil refined from petroleum, other than oil which was the subject of interstate as destinguished from local commerce, or to fix, maintain or increase the price of such oil in Texas, or to prevent or lessen competition in Texas in the sale of such oil, and that the defendant remained or was a party to and acted under such combination, if such there were on March 31st., 1903, or any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29th., 1907, you will return a verdict for the State and say by your verdict, we the jury find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph nine of the court's charge. In this connection you are instructed that if the defendant became a party to a trust of the character mentioned in this paragraph of the charge, each day between March 30, 1903 and April 29th., 1907, that it remained a party to and acted under such trust, if there were any such days, would constitute a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"If you do not find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant, acting through its duly appointed and authorized 1841 agents, entered into a combination of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, for the purpose of creating in Texas, or which tended to create or carry out in Texas restrictions in the free pursuit in this state of the business of selling said character and kind of oil, or to fix, maintain, or increase the price of such oil in Texas, or to prevent or lessen competition in Texas, in the sale of such oil, and that the defendant remained or was a party to, and acted under, such combination, if such there were subsequent to March 30, 1903, and prior to April 30, 1907, you will say by your verdict, we the jury find for the defendant on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph nine of the court's charge.

"X. If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the direction of the affairs of the defendant corporation and the affairs of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey were under the same management or control on March 31, 1903, or on any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29th., 1907, and that they were placed under such common management or control, if any, by their respectively authorized officers, under such circumstances, that such common management or control, if such there were, created or tended to create or carry out restrictions in the sale in Texas of oil of the kind and character mentioned in the last preceding paragraph of this charge, or to fix, maintain or increase the price in Texas of such oil, or to prevent or lessen in Texas the competition in the sale of such oil, you will return a verdict for the state and say by your verdict, we the jury find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph ten of the court's charge. In this connection you are instructed that if the defendant entered into a monopoly of the character mentioned in this paragraph of the charge, each day between March 30, 1903, and April 29th., 1907, that it remained a party to such monopoly, if there were any such days, constituted a separate violation of the anti-trust laws 1842 of Texas.

"If you do not find from a preponderance of the evidence that the direction of the affairs of the defendant corporation and the affairs of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey were under the same management or control on March 31, 1903, or on some date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907, and that they were brought under such a common management or control, if any, by their respectively authorized officers under such circumstances that such common management or control, if such there were, created or tended to create or carry out restrictions in the sale in Texas of such oil, or fix, maintain or increase the price in Texas of such oil, or to prevent or lessen in Texas the competition in the sale of such oil, you will say by your verdict, we the jury find for the defendant on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph ten of the court's charge

"XI. If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had on March 31, 1903, or on any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29th., 1907, acquired a majority of the capital stock of the defendant corporation and thereby effected a combination of said two corporations, and if you further find from a preponderance of the evidence that said stock was acquired and combination effected, if any, with the purpose and intention on part of the managing officers and directors of said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of preventing or lessening the competition in the sale in Texas of the character and kind of oil above mentioned, or that the effect of said combination, if such there were, tended to affect or lessen the competition in the sale in Texas of said oil, you will return a verdict for the State and say by your verdict, we the jury find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph eleven of the court's charge.

In this connection you are instructed that if the defendant
1843 entered into a monopoly of the character mentioned in this paragraph of the charge, each day between March 30, 1903, and April 29th., 1907, that it remained a party to such monopoly, if there were any such days, constituted a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"If you do not find from a preponderance of the evidence that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had on March 31, 1903, or on some date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907, acquired a majority of the capital stock of the defendant corporation, and if you do not further find from a preponderance of the evidence that said stock was acquired and combination effected, if it were at all, with the purpose and intention on the part of the managing officers and directors of said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of preventing or lessening the competition in the sale in Texas of said character and kind of oil, or that the effect of said combination, if such there were, tended to affect or lessen the competition in the sale in Texas of said oil, you will say by your verdict, we the jury find in defendant's favor on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph eleven of the court's charge.

"XII. The evidence introduced before you does not show with sufficient definiteness that the defendant has, since May 31st., 1900, acted under or persisted in the performance of either the contract with Clem and the Eagle Refining Company and others, or the contract with Roy Campbell and the Texas Oil & Gasoline Company, in such a manner as to violate the anti-trust laws of 1899 or 1903. You are therefore instructed to find in defendant's favor on the issues pleaded by the State with reference to said contracts.

"XIII. Evidence has been introduced before you tending to show that the defendant has given rebates and discounts in the course of its dealings; evidence has also been introduced before you tending to show that defendant has made contracts and entered into 1844 understandings other than those which have been submitted for your consideration in paragraphs seven to eleven, inclusive, of this charge. Evidence has also been introduced before you tending to show the general course of dealings of defendant in Texas and elsewhere, including some of its business methods in meeting competition. You are instructed that none of this evidence shows or tends to show any violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas, unless it tends in some degree to establish some one or more of the issues submitted for your consideration in the last above mentioned paragraph of this charge; and you are therefore instructed to acquit the defendant and return a general verdict for it,—notwithstanding any and all of said evidence, unless you find in favor of the State on the issues submitted for your consideration in some one or more of said paragraphs of the charge.

"XIV. If you convict the defendant under the foregoing instruction of any violation or violations of the anti-trust law of 1899, you will specify in your verdict the date or days for which it is convicted of having violated said law, and will further specify in your verdict that for said violation or violations, if any your find, that its permit to do business in Texas shall be forfeited, and the amount of money which shall be adjudged against it as penalties for said violations, if any. In fixing the penalties, if any, which you assess against the defendant for any violations of which you may convict it, of the anti-trust law of 1899, you will fix same at not less than two hundred dollars, or more than five hundred dollars per day for each day you find it has so violated the law. If you convict the defendant of any violations of the anti-trust law of 1903, you will specify in your verdict the date or days for which it is so convicted and further specify therein that as a result of said conviction, its permit to do business in Texas shall be forfeited, and the sum of money that shall be adjudged against it as a penalty for such violation, fixing said sum at fifty dollars per day for each and every day that you convict it of having violated said law.

1845 "XV. In order to aid you in preparing your verdict in proper form, when you have reached same, the following forms of verdicts are submitted for your consideration:

"1. If you find in favor of the State on all of the issues submitted to you and for the entire time for which penalties are claimed by the State against the defendant in its petition, you will say: 'We the jury find for the plaintiff against the defendant on each of the issues submitted to us for each of the days between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, being 1033 days, and for the penalties at —— Dollars; and we find for the plaintiff against the defendant on each of the issues submitted for each of the days between April 1, 1903, and April 29, 1907, being fourteen hundred and eighty eight days, and fix the penalties at Seventy Four Thousand Four Hundred Dollars. We further find that the permit of the defendant to do business in the State of Texas should be cancelled. We find for the defendant upon all the issues made by the pleadings and not submitted in the charge of the court.'

"2. If you find in favor of the State on some of the issues submitted for your consideration, relating to the alleged violation of the anti-trust law of 1899, and in favor of the State with reference to some of the alleged violations of the anti-trust law of 1903, you may use the following form of verdict:

"We the jury find in favor of the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in the following paragraphs of the court's charge—

"We further find that the defendant violated the anti-trust laws of Texas on the following days embraced between May 31, 1900 and March 31, 1903—

"We further find that on account of said violations, the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be forfeited, and that penalties should be imposed upon it in the amount of —— Dollars. We further find that the defendant violated the anti-trust laws of 1903, on the following days embraced between the 30th day of March, 1903, and the 29th day of April, 1907—

1846

"We further find that on account of said violations the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be forfeited, and that penalties should be imposed upon it in the amount of —— Dollars. On all other issues raised by the pleadings, we find in favor of the defendant.

"3. If you find in favor of the State with reference to some or all of the alleged violations of the anti-trust law of 1899, submitted for your consideration, and if you find in favor of the defendant on other of said alleged violations, and if you find in favor of the defendant on the issue of all of the alleged violations of the anti-trust law of 1903, you may use the following form of verdict:

"We the jury find in favor of the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in the following paragraph of the court's charge ——. We further find that the defendant has violated the anti-trust laws of Texas on each of the following days embraced between May 31, 1900 and March 31, 1903 ——; we further find that because of said violations the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be forfeited and penalties should be imposed upon it in the amount of —— Dollars. We further find in defendant's favor on all alleged violations of the anti-trust laws of 1903, and on all other issues made by the pleading.

"4. If you find in defendant's favor on all issues submitted for your consideration relating to its alleged violation of the anti-trust laws of 1899, but find in favor of the State on all or some of the issues relating to defendant's alleged violation of the anti-trust law of 1903, you may use the following form of verdict: We, the jury, find in defendant's favor on all issues submitted for our con-

1847 sideration relating to its alleged violation of the anti-trust laws of 1899, but find in favor of the State under the following paragraphs of the court's charge: ——, for alleged violations of the anti-trust laws of 1903. We further find that the defendant has violated said anti-trust laws on each of the following days embraced between March 30, 1903, and April 29, 1907, ——. We further find that on account of said violations the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be forfeited, and that penalties should be imposed upon it in the sum of —— Dollars.

"5. If you desire to return a general verdict for defendant you may use the following form of verdict: We the jury find for the defendant.

"XVI. You are the exclusive judges of the facts proved, of the credibility of the witnesses, and of the weight to be given to their testimony; but you are bound to take the law as it is given you in charge by the court, and to be governed thereby in arriving at your verdict."

All requested instructions were refused. The verdict of the jury reads as follows:

"We, the jury, find for the palintiff against the defendant on each of the issues submitted to us for each of the days between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, being 1033 days, and for penalties, 1,549,500.00 dollars.

"And we find for the plaintiff against the defendant on each of the issues submitted for each of the days between April 1, 1903, and April 29, 1907, being fourteen hundred and eighty eight days, and fix the penalties at seventy four thousand four hundred dollars.

"We further find that the permit of the defendant to do business in the State of Texas should be cancelled.

"We find for the defendant upon all issues made by the 1848 pleadings and not submitted in the charge of the court."

The court rendered judgment for the State in accordance with the verdict for $1,623,900, and a cancellation of the defendant's permit to do business in this State. The defendant has appealed and presents the case in this Court on one hundred and twenty-nine assignments of error.

There is evidence in the record which supports the findings of the jury, and we find the facts to be as found by the verdict.

Opinion.

1. Assisted by elaborate briefs and arguments submitted by able counsel on both sides, this Court has given to this important case earnest and careful consideration. The volume of business on our docket and the great number of questions presented preclude extended consideration in this opinion of many of the questions raised in appellant's brief. We therefore announce, in general terms, our conclusion to the effect, that it is not shown that error was committed in overruling appellant's application for a change of venue, in various rulings upon exceptions to pleadings, and as to admissibility of testimony.

A majority of the Court also hold that no positive error has been assigned upon the charge of the court. The writer of this opinion is of a different view concerning the 11th section of the charge, and concurs with counsel for appellant in their contention that it was calculated to mislead the jury into the belief that they could find against the defendant upon the issues therein submitted, regardless of whether it had any knowledge of, participated with, or aided or abetted the Standard Oil Company in the wrongful conduct therein referred to. The provision of the anti-trust statute of March 31, 1903, upon which the charge in question was evidently founded, seems to be addressed, in the main, against the corporation 1849 which acquires stock or other property of another corporation with the intention of using it for the purpose specified in the statute and it cannot properly be construed to include the corporation whose stock or property has been acquired, and subject it to the penalties prescribed by the statute, unless that corporation is, in some manner, responsible for the unlawful acts of the acquiring corporation.

These are my individual views, and the other members of the Court do not concur in the construction placed by me upon the charge. However, we are all agreed that if the charge in question be erroneous, it affords no ground for reversal, because the jury found that appellant had violated other provisions of the antitrust act of 1903, and awarded only one penalty for each day's violation. Having found for the State on these other issues, if the verdict had been in appellant's favor on the issue submitted by the charge under consideration, the judgment should have been the same; and therefore, if that section of the charge was erroneous, such error is now harmless and immaterial.

In reference to the assignments of error complaining of the order of the court appointing a receiver, it is sufficient to say that appellant has exercised its right to prosecute a separate appeal from that order, and this Court, in considering that appeal, has decided against appellant. It is not entitled to have the order appointing a receiver reviewed by this Court twice or in two distinct proceedings.

2. The constitutionality and validity of the anti-trust acts of May 25th, 1899, and March 31st, 1903, have been vigorously assailed in numerous respects. We overrule these objections and hold that these statutes authorize and sustain this suit. (State vs. Laredo Ice Company, 96 Tex., 467; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. vs. the State, 44 S. W., 936.)

The contention that these statutes are too indefinite and uncertain in the particulars involved in this case is not regarded as tenable.
The Sherman Anti-trust Law enacted by Congress is not more 1850 definite and specific than these statutes, and that Law has stood the test against similar objections in the Supreme Court of the United States. (United States vs. Knight Company, 156 U. S. 1; United States vs. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n. 166 U. S., 291; United States vs. Joint Traffic Ass'n, 171 U. S., 505; Hopkins vs.

United States, 171 U. S., 578; Anderson vs. United States, 171 U. S., 604; Addyston Pipe & Steele Co., vs. United States, 175 U. S. 211; Montague & Co. vs. Lowry, 193 U. S., 38; Northern Securities Company vs. United States, 193 U. S., 196.

3. This suit was instituted on September 22, 1906, and the defendant interposed a special exception to the petition in so far as it sought to recover penalties for alleged violation of the anti-trust laws of this State prior to the 22nd day of September, 1904, for the reason that it appeared from the face of the plaintiff's petition that the right to recover such penalties accrued more than two years before the suit was filed; and was therefore barred by the statute of limitation of two years, as prescribed in Art. 219, of the Code of Criminal Procedure of this State. That exception was overruled, and the court refused to give the jury a special instruction, requested by appellant, announcing and applying the same proposition of law. These rulings of the trial court are assigned as error, and present one of the most important questions in the case. Chapter 1 of Title 4 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is headed thus: "The time within which criminal actions may be commenced:" Art. 219 reads as follows: "For all misdemeanors an indictment or information may be presented within two years from the commission of the offense and not afterward."

By the Penal Code offenses which are punishable by pecuniary fine only are designated misdemeanors; and appellant's contention seems to be that the things condemned by the Act of May 25th, 1899, upon which this suit in part is based, constitute misdemeanors; and that, although civil in form, the suit is criminal in nature and 1851 barred by Art. 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is also contended that the pecuniary penalties imposed by the act of March 31, 1903, constitute part of the punishment prescribed by that act, and that the suit for the penalties accruing thereunder constitutes a criminal case, and is barred by Art. 218 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which bars prosecutions for felonies.

The second, third, fourth and sixth sections of the act of May 25, 1899, declare that all persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons who violate those sections "shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and shall be subject to the penalties prescribed in this act." The 11th section states that all who do the things therein condemned shall be "adjudged a monoply and be subject to all the pains and penalties provided in this act." The seventh section provides for the forfeiture of the charter of any domestic corporation and permit to do business granted to any foreign corporation for violations of the statute. The 5th section reads as follows: "Any person, partnership, firm or association, or any representative or agent thereof, or any corporation or company, or any officer, representative or agent thereof, violating any of the provisions of this act shall forfeit not less than two hundred dollars nor more than five thousand dollars for every such offense, and each day such person, corporation, partnership or association shall continue to do so shall be a separate offense, the penalties in such cases to be recovered by an action in the name of the State at the relation of the Attorney General or the district or County Attorney; the moneys thus collected to go into the State treasury, and to become a part of the general fund, except as hereinafter provided."

The pertinent part of the 9th section is expressed in these words: "It shall be the duty of the Attorney General and the prosecuting attorney of each district or county, respectively, to enforce the provisions of this act. The Attorney General and the prosecut-
1852 ing attorney shall institute and conduct all suits begun in the district courts, and upon appeal the attorney General shall prosecute said suits in the Courts of Civil Appeals and Supreme Court."

The first section of the anti-trust act of March 31st, 1903, defines a trust. The second section defines a monop-ly, and the third section prescribes what act shall constitute a conspiracy in restrain- of trade. The fourth section declares all trusts, monop-lies and conspiracies in restraint of trade to be illegal. The 5th, 6th and 7th sections make provision for the forfeiture of charters of domestic corporations violating that act, and the 8th section makes a similar provision in reference to the permit of foreign corporations to do business in this State. The 7th and 10th sections use the word "convicted", but the 7th relates to the subject of the forfeiture of charter rights, and the tenth to the subject of forfeiture of a foreign corporation's right to do business in the State, which shows that the Legislature did not have in mind a proceeding by indictment or criminal information. The 11th section reads as follows:

"Each and every firm, person, corporation or association of persons who shall in any manner violate any of the provisions of this act shall for each and every day that such violation shall be committed or continued, forfeit and pay the sum of fifty dollars, which may be recovered in the name of the State of Texas in any county where the offense is committed or where either of the offenders reside, or in Travis County, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General, or the district or county attorney, under the direction of the Attorney General, to prosecute for the recovery of the same, and the fees of the prosecuting attorney for representing the State in proceedings under this act shall be over and above the fees allowed him under the general fee bill."

The 13th section of that act reads as follows: "And in addition to the penalties and forfeitures herein provided for, every per-1853 son violating this act may further be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than one nor more than ten years."

We agree with counsel for appellant that these statutes are penal. They were enacted for the purpose of suppressing and preventing certain things regarded by the Legislature as detrimental to the public interest. The penalties prescribed were intended as punishment, but it does not follow that this is a criminal case within the purview of Art. 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. After a careful consideration of all their terms, we have reached the conclusion that it was the intention of the Legislature in enacting the two statutes under consideration to create a cause of action in behalf of the State for the pecuniary penalties therein prescribed, to be recovered in a civil suit. We reach this conclusion mainly from the language of the 5th section of the act of 1899, and the 11th section of the act of 1903. These sections declare that those who violate any of the provisions of those acts shall forfeit and pay, in the one instance not less than $200 nor more than $5000, and in the other instance $50, to be recovered in an action in the name of the State. It is true that in some places in these laws the procedure is designated "prosecutions", but in others they are spoken of as "actions" and "suits". In the 9th section of the act of 1899, it is declared to be the duty of the Attorney General and district and county attorneys "to institute and conduct all suits begun in the district courts, and upon appeal the Attorney General shall prosecute said suits in the Courts of Civil Appeals and Supreme Court."

Section 5 of that act, construed in connection with section 9, indicates with absolute certainty a legislative purpose to authorize civil suits for the recovery of the pecuniary penalties prescribed. The two sections together indicate that it was not intended that such penalties should be enforced by a criminal proceeding, because if 1854 that act creates a criminal offense such offense would be a misdemeanor, of which the district court would have no jurisdiction. The Constitution confers upon that court exclusive jurisdiction of suits by the State for forfeitures and penalties; and it must be presumed that in enacting that statute, the Legislature intended to provide for such suits as were authorized by that provision of the Constitution, and not to create criminal offenses of which the county court alone would have original jurisdiction, otherwise the Legislature would not have used the language, "shall institute and conduct all suits begun in the district courts."

It is true that both of these statutes contain some expressions common to criminal procedure, such as "offense", "guilty", and "convicted". The word "guilty" however, is frequently used in civil cases, as "guilty of fraud", "guilty of negligence". And the word "offense" as used in these statutes, has reference to violations of their provisions, and is not equivalent to the words "felony" or "misdemeanor". However, we do not hold that it is necessary to use either of the latter terms to create a criminal offense; nor, on the other hand, do we think that the words "offense", "guilty" and "convicted" necessarily determine that these are criminal statutes to be enforced exclusively by indictment or information. The word "suit" is very generally used to designate a civil case, and seldom if ever applied to criminal cases.

As these statutes do not, in terms, require a resort to criminal procedure for their enforcement, then, even if they do not direct any method of enforcement, we are of the opinion that the State had the right to proceed in a civil action for a recovery of the pecuniary penalties. In such cases it is a well established rule that an action of debt will lie for the recovery of statutory penalties. (5th Ency. Plead. & Prac. 907, and authorities there cited.) It has been so decided in this State in Davidson vs. Missouri Pacific Ry. Co.
1855 3 Tex. Crt. App., 173, where it was held that a suit to recover a statutory penalty was an action of debt, and barred by our statute of limitation, which requires actions for debt, where the indebtedness is not evidenced by a contract in writing, to be commenced within two years. That the State may also bring an action for debt for the recovery of statutory penalties, seems to be equally well settled. It was so held by the Supreme Court of the United States in Stockwell vs. United States, 13 Wall., 531. That was an action by the government to recover double the value of certain shingles, alleged to have been illegally imported into the United States. The act of Congress upon which the suit was founded, reads as follows: "That if any person or persons shall receive, conceal or buy any goods, wares or merchandise, knowing them to have been illegally imported into the United States, and liable to seizure by virtue of any act in relation to the revenue, such person or persons shall, on conviction thereof, forfeit and pay a sum double the amount or value of the goods, wares or merchandise so received, concealed or purchased." In that case, among other things, the court said:

"A verdict and judgment having been recovered against the defendants in the court below, the record has been removed into this court and four errors have been assigned.

"The first is that a civil action of debt will not lie, at the suit of the United States, to recover the forfeitures or penalties incurred under this Act of Congress, and that the court below erred in holding that such an action might be maintained. It is not contended that an action of debt will not lie to recover duties, if the defendant be the owner or importer of the goods imported, for it is conceded that by the act of importing, an obligation to pay the duties is incurred. The obligation springs out of the statutes which impose duties. Nor is it doubted that when a statute gives a private person a right to recover a penalty for a violation of law he may maintain an action of debt, but it is insisted that when the Government proceeds for a penalty based on an offense against law, it must be by indictment or by information. No authority has been adduced in support of this position, and it is believed that none exists. It cannot be that whether an action of debt is maintainable or not depends upon the question who is the plaintiff. Debt lies whenever a sum certain is due to the plaintiff, or a sum which can readily be reduced to a certainty—a sum requiring no future valuation to settle its amount. It is not necessarily founded upon contract. It is immaterial in what manner the obligation was incurred, or by what it is evidenced, if the sum owing is capable of being definitely ascertained. The act of 1823 (3 Stat. at L. 781) fixes the amount of the liability at double the value of the goods received, concealed or purchased, and the only party injured by the illegal acts, which subject the perpetrators to the liability is the United States. It would seem, therefore, that whether the liability incurred is to be regarded as a penalty or as liquidated damages for an injury done to the United States, it is a debt, and as such it must be recoverable in a civil action.

"But all doubts respecting the matter are set at rest by the fourth section of the act, which enacted that all penalties and forfeitures incurred by force thereof shall be sued for, recovered, distributed and accounted for in the manner prescribed by the act of March 2nd, 1799 (1 Stat. at L. 627) entitled 'An Act to regulate the collection of duties on Imports and Tonnage'. By referring to the 89th section of that act, it will be seen that it directs all penalties accruing by any breach of the act, to be sued for and recovered, with costs of suit, in the name of the United States of America, in any court competent to try the same; and the collector within whose district a forfeiture shall have been incurred, is enjoined to cause suits for the same to be commenced without delay. This manifestly contemplates civil actions, as does the proviso to the same section, which declares 1857 that no action or prosecution shall be maintained in any case under the act, unless the same shall have been commenced within three years after the penalty or forfeiture was incurred. Accordingly, it has been frequently ruled that debt will lie at the suit of the United States, to recover the penalties and forfeitures imposed by statutes. U. S. vs. Colt. Pet. (C. C.) 145; Jacob vs. U. S., 1 Brock., 520; U. S. vs. Bougher, 6 McLean, 277; Walsh vs. U. S., 3 Wood. & M. 342; U. S. vs. Lyman, 1 Mas. 482; U. S. vs. Allen, 4 Day, 474. It is true that the statute of 1823 imposes the forfeiture and liability to pay double the value of the goods received, concealed or purchased with knowledge that they had been illegally imported, 'on conviction thereof'. It may be, therefore, that an indictment or information might be sustained. But the question now is whether a civil action can be brought and, in view of the provision that all penalties and forfeitures incurred by force of the act shall 'be sued for and recovered' as prescribed by the act of 1799, we are of the opinion that debt is maintainable. The expression 'sued for and recovered' is primarily applicable to civil actions, and not to those of a criminal nature."

As to the point made in reference to the penalties being indefinite under the act of 1899, in addition to the case just cited, we refer to Rockwell vs. the State, 11 Ohio, 130, where the law fixed the penalty at not less than $5 nor more than $50, and the objection referred to was overruled, and it was held that an action of debt would lie. Other courts have held that statutes somewhat similar to those under consideration confer upon the State a cause of action to be maintained in a civil suit (Burgh vs. the State, 118 Ind., 133; Davis Admr. vs. State, 119 Ind., 555; State vs. Grove, 77 Wis., 448; Territory of New Mexico vs. Baca, 2 New Mex. 183.) Interesting discussions of the terms "fines", "forfeitures" and "penalties" will also be found in People vs. Nedrow, 122 Ill., 363; Gosselink vs. Campbell, 4 Iowa, 300.

Our conclusion is that the statutes under consideration vest
1858 in the State a civil right of action for the pecuniary penalties prescribed for violations of the provisions of those statutes. This being true, and as our statute of limitations applicable to civil cases does not include and bar the State, we hold that limitation is not available as a defense in this case. We do not rest this ruling upon the ground that the statutes under consideration do not create criminal offenses. If it be conceded that they create such offenses, criminal prosecutions for which would be barred within two years, it does not follow that the penalties which might have been recovered by such prosecutions cannot when authorized, be recovered in a civil action. Our Penal Code and Code of Criminal Procedure deal exclusively with criminal cases, and that portion of the latter which deals with the subject of limitation only purports to fix the time within which criminal actions may be commenced; and Art. 219, relied on by appellant, merely forbids prosecutions by indictment or information after two years from the commission of the offense.

It is argued on behalf of appellant that, even though a statute creating an offense may confer upon the State the right to maintain a civil action to recover a pecuniary penalty for violating the statute, still that right would be barred by Art. 219, which would bar the right to enforce the penalty by indictment or information. If Art. 219, or any other statute, declared that no right of action should exist or no sort of proceeding be instituted for the collection of a penalty after two years, appellant's contention would be correct; but that article is much narrower in its scope and merely prohibits prosecutions in the manner and by the means prescribed for the prosecution of criminal cases. It may be true that the same general result would be sought in the one case as in the other, viz: recovery of the penalty, and if that were the only thing to be considered, there would be force in the argument that in prohibiting criminal prose-
1859 cutions after a specified time the Legislature intended thereby to prevent any other character of procedure which had for its purpose the accomplishment of the same general result. If the two proceedings, civil and criminal, were not so essentially different the contention urged might be sustained; but the statutes under consideration apply to natural persons as well as corporations, and as to such persons, civil and criminal proceedings are widely different. In a civil action against an indivdual to recover a penalty he is notified of the suit by delivering to him a citation. When the case is tried, if he loses, the only result is a personal judgment against him for a specified sum of money to be collected by execution and not otherwise. But if he is proceeded against criminally for the enforcement of a penalty he is arrested and required to give bond or stay in jail until after the case is tried. Upon trial, if he is convicted, the judgment not only goes against him for the penalty, but unless he pays it, he is again incarcerated in jail. Thus it will be seen that in a criminal proceeding to enforce the penalty the defendant would necessarily be subjected to the ignominy of an arrest by a public officer; and, upon contingencies which often occur, would be incarcerated in jail. Now when the Legislature prescribed a time which would prevent a prosecution fraught with these serious consequences, does it necessarily follow that it intended to cut off any right the State might have to obtain a personal judgment for a pecuniary penalty, without resorting to a procedure that would bring about any such harsh results? We think not. In prescribing limitation for criminal proceedings we believe the Legislature had in mind cases criminal, both in substance and form, and had no intention of affecting any right the State might assert in a civil action.

Chief Justice Marshall, in Adams vs. Woods, 2 Cranch, 337, announced that if a law should merely declare that no indictment or information should be presented after a specified time, such 1860 law would be pleadable only in bar of indictments or informations, and would not bar a civil action for a recovery of the penalty prescribed for violating a statute.

An offense which is punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary absolutely or in the alternative, is a felony; and as the anti-trust act of 1903 fixes confinement in the penitentiary as an alternative punishment, appellant pleaded Art. 218 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in bar of the State's right to recover part of the penalties sued for under that act. Art. 218 is framed like Art. 219, and would apply to a criminal prosecution based upon the act of 1903 and bar such prosecution after three years. As we hold that it was the intention of the Legislature to confer upon the State the right to maintain a civil action for the pecuniary penalties therein prescribed, we hold that such right of action is not barred by Art. 218. In other words, while the penalties referred to were intended, in a certain sense, as punishment, they were not imposed as punishment to be inflicted through the onerous instrumentalities of a criminal prosecution.

Appellant also pleaded the statute of limitation of two and four years embodied in the Revised Statutes and applicable to civil cases. It is contended that the two years' statute has application upon the theory that if the State's suit is an action of debt, and not instituted for the preservation of the public rights, revenues or property, then the State should not be exempt from limitation, but should be treated as any other litigant. It is the rule of the common law of England that unless so expressly enacted, limitation does not run against the sovereign, and that is the rule in the American states. We are not prepared to place upon that rule the restriction urged, but if we should do so it would not be proper to apply it to this case. In seeking to recover the penalties here involved, the state is endeavoring to enforce statutes enacted for the protection of the public interest. One of the main objects of the suit is to protect and preserve public rights and promote a well established public policy.
1861 In view of what we have already said it is hardly necessary to add that we regard the four years' statute of limitation as equally unavailing. In Brown vs. Sneed, 77 Tex., 471, which holds that limitation does not apply to the State unless so expressly provided, the authorities are collated and reviewed. We also hold that no error was committed in refusing a charge to the effect that the state must prove its case beyond reasonable doubt. Being a civil case that rule does not apply.

4. It is contended on behalf of appellant that the anti-trust act of May 25th, 1899 was rendered unconstitutional by the passage of another statute at the same session of the Legislature entitled "An Act to protect workingmen in the right of organization and the purposes thereof," approved May 27th, 1899, wherein it was provided that from and after its passage it should be lawful for any and all persons engaged in any kind of work or labor, manual or mental, or both, to associate themselves together and form trades unions and other organizations for the purpose of protecting themselves in their personal work, personal labor and personal service in their respective pursuits and employments. By the third section it is declared that that act shall not apply to combinations or associations of capital or capital and persons natural or artificial formed for the purposes of limiting the production or consumption of labor's products, or for any other purpose in restraint of trade, and that nothing therein contained shall be held to interfere with the terms and conditions of private contracts with regard to the time of service or other stipulations between employers and employés, and "that nothing herein contained shall be construed to repeal, affect or diminish the force and effect of any statute now existing on the subject of trusts, conspiracies against trade, pools and monopolies." In view of these limitations placed upon that act, we are of the opinion that it was not the intention of the Legislature to authorize anything to be done that was prohibited by the act of May 25th, 1899. Hence we 1862 hold that this statute engrafts no exemptions upon the anti-trust statute referred to.

5. The anti-trust statute of May 25th, 1899, having been superseded and repealed by the act of March 31st, 1903, which diminished the pecuniary penalties, appellant sought to have the latter statute applied to the time before as well as after it went into effect. This was refused, and we think properly so, on account of this proviso in the latter act: "provided nothing in this act shall be held or construed to affect or destroy any rights of the State of Texas to recover penalties or forfeit charters of domestic corporations, or prohibit foreign corporations from doing business in this State, for acts committed before this act took effect." We are of opinion that this proviso preserved whatever rights the State had under the former law, including the right to enforce the penalties prescribed by that act. We are unable to concur in the proposition that it was merely intended to preserve the right to, but not the amount of, the penalties. Nor can we sanction the proposition that because of the location of a comma in the proviso quoted, it was the intention of the Legislature to protect and preserve the rights of the State to recover penalties from domestic corporations and not preserve such right as against foreign corporations. No reason existing for making such a marked discrimination, we are not willing to hold that it was the intention of the Legislature to do so, merely because a comma was so used as to render that construction plausible. In construing written laws courts are not bound by rules of grammar, and may disregard them in order to give effect to manifest legislative intention.

6. It is claimed that the trial court should have granted appellant's motion for a new trial based upon the ground that the judgment imposes excessive fines, and operates as a deprivation of property without due process of law. It is also contended that the 1863 act of 1899 should be declared void, because it authorizes excessive fines and forfeitures. That question has already been decided against appellant's contention in State vs. Laredo Ice Co., 96 Tex., 467. The verdict, while large, is much under the maximum permitted by the law. Its magnitude is mainly attributable to appellant's repeated and long-continued violations of the law, covering a period of six years. Hence we have reached the conclusion that the verdict is not so large as to render it manifest that the jury were actuated by prejudice or other improper motives.

7. In appellant's motion for a new trial in the court below, and in its presentation of the case here, the verdict of the jury has been challenged, the contention being that the testimony fails to show that appellant has violated any of the anti-trust laws of this State. The evidence is very voluminous, and it is not necessary that it be set out or epitomized in this opinion. It is sufficient, we think, to show that from the date of its permit to do business in this State, May 31, 1900, appellant has been a party to an agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, one object of which was to create a monopoly and control the price of petroleum oil and prevent competition in its sale in a large and specified territory, including the State of Texas; and that, to a large extent, such object has been accomplished. In so far as that agreement related to this State, appellant, acting by its agents, performed it within this State; and such performance within the limits of the State constitutes violations of Texas laws and renders appellant amenable to such laws, although the agreement between it and the Standard Oil Company may not have been made in this State. To a large extent the case rests upon circumstantial evidence; but we cannot say that the jury were not warranted in the conclusions drawn from it. Hence we hold that the verdict is supported by 1864 testimony, and no error was committed in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Upon the whole case our conclusion is that reversible error has not been shown, and therefore the judgment will be affirmed.

THE STATE OF TEXAS.

Appeal from District Court of Travis County

Opinion by Associate Justice KEY:

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record, and, the same being inspected, because it is the opinion of the court that there was no error in the judgment; it is therefore considered, adjudged and ordered that the judgment of the court below be in all things affirmed; that the appellee, The State of Texas, do have and recover of and from the appellant, The Waters Pierce Oil Company, principal and its sureties, The American Surety Company of New York and Jno. H. Kirby, the amount adjudged by the court below and all costs in this behalf expended and this decision be certified below for observance.

1865 Appellant's Motion for a Rehearing, Filed Dec. 24th, 1907.

No. 4212.

In the Court of Civil Appeals, Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas.

WATERS PIERCE OIL COMNANY, Appellant,
vs.
THE STATE OF TEXAS, Appellee.

Appellant's Motion for Rehearing.

Now comes the appellant, The Waters Pierce Oil Company, by its attorneys, and moves this court to set aside its judgment herein rendered on December 11th, 1907, affirming the judgment of the 1866 trial court, and to grant appellant a rehearing in this cause, for the following reasons:

1.

Because this Court erred in holding that it was not error for the trial court upon the hearing of appellant's motion for a change of venue, to refuse to permit appellant to prove by the witnesses C. J. Johnson and H. M. Metz that they were members of the grand jury of the District Court of Travis County for the Fifty-third Judicial District at the September Term, 1906, and that the indictment against H. C. Pierce charging him with false swearing in making the affidavit set out in plaintiff's petition, and therein alleged to have been made by him on May 31st, 1900, was returned by said grand jury without having any evidence before it other than the said affidavit, and without having any evidence before it showing, or tending to show that the statements contained in said affidavit were false.

Because, upon the hearing of appellant's motion for a change of venue in the trial court, it was shown by the preponderance of evidence and the manifest weight of the testimony that there existed in Travis County so great a prejudice against appellant that it could not obtain a fair and impartial trial of this cause in said county, and this court erred in not so holding.

3.

Because plaintiff's petition was, by reason of the matters complained of in appellant's assignments of error Nos. 5 to 19, inclusive, in violation of Article 1183 of the Revised Statutes and rule 2 of the rules for the district and county courts, in that it was, as shown by said assignments of error and appellant's statements and propositions thereunder, a statement of alleged facts so intermingled with irrelevant, impertinent, scandalous and inflammatory matter, arguments and legal conclusions as to produce confusion and uncertainty and unnecessary length in the petition, and was calculated to inflame the minds of the jury trying this case against appellant, and to prevent justice being done upon 1867 the trial of this case, and this court erred in not holding that it was error for the trial court to refuse to direct a repleader by plaintiff and the ommission from the petition of such irrelevant, impertinent, scandalous and inflammatory matter, arguments and legal conclusions, as contended by appellant in its 19th assignment of error, and propositions thereunder.

4.

Because this court erred in holding that the Anti-trust Act of May 25th, 1899, was not repealed by the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903.

5.

Because this court erred in not holding that the proviso contained in Section 17 of the Act of March 31st, 1903, whereby it was sought to preserve to the State the right to recover penalties and forfeit charters and permits on account of acts committed before said Act took effect, was in violation of Section 35, Article 3 of the Constitution of this State, in that the subject of said proviso was not expressed in the title of said Act, but was excluded by the provisions of said title, as contended in appellant's second proposition under its 20th assignment of error.

6.

Because, since it was shown by plaintiff's petition that appellant is a foreign corporation, this court erred in holding that Section 17 of the said Act of March 31st, 1903, preserved to the State the right to recover of appellant penalties on account of violations of the Anti-trust Act of May 25th, 1899.

7.

Because the court erred in holding that plaintiff's cause of action to recover penalties against appellant for acts committed more than two years before the institution of this suit was not barred by the provisions of Article 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of this State.

8.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its proposition under its 23rd assignment of error, that to 1868 hold that plaintiff's cause of action to recover penalties against appellant for acts committed more than two years before the institution of this suit, was not barred by the provisions of Article 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of this State, would result in taking appellant's property without due process of law and deny to appellant the equal protection of the laws, in violation of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

9.

Because this court erred in holding that plaintiff's cause of action to recover penalties of appellant for acts committed more than two years before the institution of this suit was not barred by the statute of limitation of two years, as prescribed in Article 3354 of the Revised Civil Statutes of Texas.

10.

Because this court erred in holding that plaintiff's cause of action to recover penalties of appellant for acts committed more than four years before the institution of this suit was not barred by the statute of limitation of four years, as prescribed in Article 3358 of the Revised Civil Statutes of Texas.

11.

Because this court erred in holding that plaintiff's cause of action to recover penalties of appellant for acts committed more than three years before the institution of this suit, in violation of the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, was not barred by the statute of limitation of three years, as prescribed in Article 218 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of this State.

12.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its proposition under its 29th assignment of error that to hold that plaintiff's cause of action to recover penalties of appellant for violations of the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, committed more than three years before the institution of this suit, was not barred by the provisions of Article of Article 218 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of this State, would result in denying to 1869 appellant the equal protection of the laws, as guaranteed to it by Section I of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

13.

Because this court erred in holding that that portion of Section 2 of the Anti-trust Act of May 25th, 1899, wherein a "monopoly" is defined as "Any union or combination or consolidation or affiliation of capital, credit, prpoerty, assets, trade, custom, skill or acts, or of any other valuable thing or possession, by or between persons, firms, or corporations, or associations of persons, firms or corporations, whereby any one of the purposes or objects mentioned in this Act is accomplished, or sought to be accomplished, or whereby any one or more of said purposes are promoted or attempted to be executed or carried out, or whereby the several results described herein are reasonably calculated to be produced", sufficiently defines an offense against the laws within the requirements of Article 3 of the Penal Code of this State, then overruling appellant's first proposition under its 30th, 31st, 33rd, 34th, 35th and 36th assignments of error, 14.

Because this court erred in holding that that portion of Section 2 of said Act of May 25th, 1899, defining a monop-ly as above quoted, sufficiently designates an offense within the requirements of Article 6 of the Penal Code of this State, thus overruling appellant's second proposition under its 30th, 31st, 32nd, 33rd, 34th, 35th and 36th assignments of error.

15.

Because this court erred in holding that that portion of Section 2 of the Anti-trust Act of May 25th, 1899, defining a monop-ly as above quoted, sufficiently defines an offense against the laws within the requirements of Article 9 of the Penal Code of this State, thus overruling appellant's third proposition under its 30th, 31st, 32nd, 33rd, 34th, 35th and 36th assignments of error.

1870 16.

Because this court erred in holding that that portion of Section 6 of said Anti-trust Act of May 25th, 1899, which provides, "If any two or more persons or corporations who are engaged in buying or selling any article of commerce, shall enter into any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association or understanding to control or limit trade in any such article or thing * * * it shall be a violation of this Act * * *" sufficiently defines an offense within the requirements of Article 3, 6 and 9 of the Penal Code of this State, thus overruling appellant's 4th 5th and sixth propositions under its 30th, 31st, 32nd, 33rd, 34th, 35th and 36th assignments of error.

17.

Because this court erred in holding that Section 1 of the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, purporting to define a trust sufficiently designates an offense against the laws within the rules prescribed by Articles 3, 6 and 9 of the Penal Code of this State.

18.

Because this court erred in holding that Section 2 of the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, wherein it purports to define a monop-ly, sufficiently designates an offense against the laws within the rules prescribed by Articles 3, 6 and 9 of the Penal Code of this State.

19.

Because this court erred in not holding that the provisions of Section 2 of the Anti-trust Act of May 25th, 1899, purporting to define a monop-ly, do not define an offense against the laws with such definiteness and certainty as is necessary to constitute due process of law under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and in thus overruling appellant's 44th assignment of error and propositions thereunder.

20.

Because this court erred in not holding that the 6th Section of said Act of May 25th, 1899, whereby it is provided, "If any 1871 two or more persons or corporations who are engaged in buying or selling any article of commerce * * * shall enter into any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association or understanding to control or limit the trade in any such article or thing * * * it shall be a violation of this Act * * *", does not define an offense against the laws with such definiteness and certainty as is necessary to constitute due process of law under the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as contended by appellant in its 44th assignment of error and propositions themselves.

21.

This court erred in not holding that the 1st Section of the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, does not define an offense against the law with such definiteness and certainty as it necessary to constitute due process of law under the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as contended by appellant in its 45th assignment of error and propositions themselves.

22.

Because this court erred in not holding that the 2nd Section of the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, does not define an offense against the laws with such definiteness and certainty as is necessary to constitute due process of law under the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as contended by appellant in its 45th assignment of error and propositions thereunder.

23.

Because this court erred in not holding that the 3rd Section of the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, does not define an offense against the laws with such definiteness and certainty as is necesasry to constitute due process of law, under the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as contended by appellant in its 45th assignment of error and propositions thereunder.

24.

Because this court erred in holding that the Anti-trust Act
1872 of May 25th, 1899, was not unconstitutional and not in violation of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, by reason of the fact that it provided that it should be cumulative of all laws then in force in the State, and the fact that the Anti-trust Act of 1899, by the 13th Section thereof, and the Anti-trust Act of 1895, by the 12th Section thereof, expressly exempted producers of agricultural products and the raisers of live stock from the pains and penalties therein imposed upon all other persons and classes of persons, thus overruling appellant's first proposition under its 46th assignment of error.

25.

Because this court erred in holding that the Anti-trust Act of May 25th, 1899, was not rendered unconstitutional and in violation of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States by the passage of another statute at the same session of the Legislature entitled, "An Act to protect working men in the right of organization and the purposes thereof", approved May 27th, 1899, wherein it was provided that from and after its passage it should be lawful for any and all persons engaged in any kind of work or labor, manual or mental, or both, to associate themselves together and form trades unions and other organizations for the purpose of protecting themselves in their personal work, personal labor and personal service in their respective pursuits and employments, and in thus overruling appellant's propositions under its 47th assignment of error.

26.

Because this court erred in holding that the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, is not unconstitutional and not in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, by reason of the fact that said Act of March 31st, 1903, did not repeal the Act of the Legislature of Texas of May 27th, 1899 entitled "An Act to protect working men in the right of organization and the purposes thereof", and in holding that the provisions of said statutes do not deny to appellant the equal protection of the law as guaranteed to it be said Amendment to the Constitution to the United 1873 States, and in thus overruling appellant's proposition under its 48th assignment of error.

27.

Because this court erred in holding that the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, is not in violation of Section 14, Article 1 of the Constitution of Texas, providing that no person for the same offense shall twice be put in jeopardy of life or liberty, nor shall any person again be put upon trial for the same offense after a verdict of not guilty in a court of competent juri-dcition, by reason of the fact that Section 11 of said Act provides that every person or corporation who shall violate any of the provisions of said Act shall, for each and every day that such violation shall be committed or continued, forfeit and pay the sum of Fifty Dollars, and Section 13 provides that in addition to the penalties and forfeitures therein provided for, every person violating said Act may further be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than one nor more than ten years, and in thus overruling appellant's proposition under its 49th assignment of error.

Because this court erred in not holding that in as much as an acquittal or conviction of a person prosecuted by an action civil in form brought by the Attorney General, or by the district or county attorney under his direction, for penalties under Section 11 of the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, is a bar to an indictment for a felony, authorized by the 13th Section of said Act, said Act does not guarantee to all persons within this State the equal protection of the law, nor does it secure the infliction of the same character of punishment upon all persons within the jurisdiction of this State who are guilty of violating its provisions, by reason of the fact that the Attorney General, or district or county attorney under his direction, may prevent the infliction upon the person of a greater punishment for the violation of the provisions of said Act than a fine of Fifty Dollars per day by the institution of a civil action against such person to recover penalties, while said officers may elect to have another person violating its provisions indicted and convicted of a fel-
1874 ony and confined in the penitentiary for a term of from one to ten years, and that, therefore, the said Act is in violation of that part of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States which provides that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, as contended by appellant in its proposition under its 50th assignment of error.

29.

Because this court erred in overruling the contention of appellant in its proposition under its 51st and 52nd assignments of error, wherein appellant contended that it was not within the constitutional power of the Legislature of the State of Texas to subject defendant to the penalties and forfeitures declared by the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, because of the fact that at the time of the passage of said Act the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey held, and continued to hold, a majority of the stock of appellant, and that to inflict penalties upon appellant because of such stock ownership would make the said Act of March 31st, 1903, an ex post fact- law, in violation of Sub-division 1, Section 10, Article 1, of the Constitution of the United States, providing that no state shall pass any ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, and would result in depriving appellant of its property without due process of law, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Because this court erred in not holding that the Anti-trust laws of the State of Texas are limited to agreements, combinations, etc. between persons and corporations actually engaged in business within the State, and in not holding that it could not be an offense against the laws of the State of Texas for the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, as a foreign corporation which had no permit to do business in the State, to hold stock in appellant company and to agree that it would not do business in the State in competition with appellant, as contended by appellant in its 53rd and 54th assignments of error,
1875 and the action of this court in not sustaining said assignments of error results in denying to appellant the protection of Sub-division 3, Section 8, Article 1, of the Constitution of the United States, which gives to Congress the power to regulate the commerce between the States, and also denies to appellant the protection of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no state shall deprive any person of property without due process of law nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.

31.

Because this court erred in not holding that since the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey was a manufacturing corporation, while appellant was a dealer and distributer of the manufactured articles, it could not be made an offense against the laws of the State of Texas for said Standard Oil Company to agree not to enter into competition with appellant as such dealer, as contended by appellant in its 55th and 56th assignments of error, and the action of this court in not sustaining said assignments of error denies to appellant the protection of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no state shall deprive any person of liberty or property without due process of law.

32.

Because this court erred in not holding that since appellant was a corporation created by the laws of the State of Missouri, it was not within the power of the State of Texas to prescribe who shall be qualified to own its stock, or make it a penal offense against appellant because of the fact that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey owns a part of its stock, as contended in appellant's 57th and 58th assignments of error violates Section 1, Article 4, of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that full faith and credit shall be given to the public acts of each state.

33.

Because this court erred in not holding that since the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey was the owner of a part of the stock of the old Waters Pierce Oil Company, and had acquired its 1876 stock prior to the passage of the Anti-trust Acts of 1899 and 1903, that the interest of said Standard Oil Company in the property of said old Waters Pierce Oil Company was a vested right, and upon its dissolution, that said Company, as a tenant in common with the other stockholders, had the legal right to acquire stock in the new Waters Pierce Oil Company, and that it could not be made an offense against the anti-trust laws of the State of Texas for said Standard Oil Company to acquire and hold stock in appellant company, as contended in appellant's 59th assignment of error, and the action of this court in not sustaining said assignment of error results in denying to appellant the protection of Sub-division 1, Section 10, Article 1, of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts, and also that part of the Fourteenth Amendment to said Constitution which provides that no state shall deprive any person of property without due process of law.

34.

This court erred in not holding that the offenses denounced under the Anti-trust Acts of 1899 and 1903 are made separate and distinct offenses for each day, and that each offense should have been made the subject of a separate count in the petition or bill of complaint against appellant, as contended by appellant in its proposition under its 60th assignment of error.

35.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its proposition under its 60th assignment of error, that since the State in this case has seen fit to prosecute appellant in one count under allegations that appellant had violated the said Anti-trust Acts of 1899 and 1903 on each and every day from May 31st, 1900, down to the time of the trial, the State was entitled to recover but for one day, or, at most, but for one day under each act.

36.

Because this court erred in not holding that the failure of the State to institute this prosecution for a period of seven years, and the imposition upon appellant of the accumulated penalties, was in violation of Section 13, Article 1, of the Constitution of the 1877 State of Texas, which declares that excessive fines shall not be imposed, and in not holding that such delay and the imposition of the accumulated penalties deprives appellant of its property without due process of law, in violation of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as contended in appellant's 61st assignment of error.

37.

Because this court erred in holding that the penalty which the State was entitled to recover of appellant for violations of the Act of May 25th, 1899, if any, was not reduced by the Act of March 31st, 1903, to the sum of Fifty Dollars per day, as contended by appellant in its proposition under its 62nd and 63rd assignments of error.

38.

Because this court erred in not holding that Sundays should be excluded in computing the amount which could be assessed against appellant as penalties, as contended in appellant's 64th and 65th assignments of error.

39.

Because this court erred in holding that evidence of the fact that appellant had sold oil at different prices in different parts of the State of Texas in competition with other dealers, not being of itself an offense against the laws of the State, could nevertheless be considered by the jury as evidence in support of the charge that appellant violated the anti-trust laws of the State by entering into combinations with the Standard Oil Company as contended in appellant's 66th, 67th and 68th assignments of error.

40.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its first proposition under its 69th assignment of error, that there was no evidence showing, or tending to show, that the defendant entered into or became a party to an agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey on June 1st, 1900, or at any time between said date and March 31st, 1903, to fix or 1878 regulate the price in Texas of oil refined from petroleum, and that, therefore, such issue should not have been submitted by the court to the jury, as was done in the seventh paragraph of the court's charge quoted in said assignment of error.

41.

Because this court erred in not holding that it was error for the trial court to instruct the jury, as it idd in the seventh paragraph of the charge, that they could, in any event, convict the defendant of violating the law for each day embraced between May 31st, 1903, during which it remained or continued to be a party to an agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey to fix or regulate the price in Texas of oil refeined from petroleum, as contended by appellant in its second proposition under its 69th assignment of error.

42.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its first proposition under its 70th assignment of error, that that portion of Section 2 of the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, wherein a monopoly is defined as, "Where any corporation acquires the shares or certificates of stock or bonds, franchises or other rights or physical properties, or any part thereof, of any other corporation or corporations, for the purpose of preventing or lessening competition, whether such acquisition is accomplished directly or through the instrumentality of trustees, or otherwise", if it defines any offense, makes the offense an offense by the corporation so acquiring such shares or certificates of stock, and not an offense by the corporation whose shares of stock are so acquired, and that, therefore, it was error for the trial court to instruct the jury, as it did in the 11th paragraph of the charge, to the effect that if they should find from preponderance of the evidence that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had on March 31st, 1903, or on any date subsequent thereto and prior to May 29th, 1907, acquired a majority of the capital stock of the defendant corporation, and thereby effected a combination of said two corporations, and if they should further find that such stock was acquired and combination effected, if 1879 any, with the purpose and intention on the part of the managing officers and directors of said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of preventing or lessening competition in the sale of oil in Texas, they would convict the defendant.

43.

Because this court erred in holding, as it did in overruling appellant's 70th assignment of error, and its second proposition thereunder, that the acquisition by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of a majority of the capital stock of defendant, "with the purpose and intention on the part of the managing officers and directors of said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of preventing or lessening competition in the sale of oil in Texas," constituted an offense by defendant without defendant knowing at the time of such purpose and aiding and encouraging such acquisition and purpose.

44.

Because this court erred in not holding that, since it was alleged in the petition that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had owned a majority of the stock of defendant since its creation as a corporation on May 29th, 1900, that portion of the 11th paragraph of the trial court's charge to the jury wherein the jury were instructed that the defendant would be guilty of an offense under the Act of March 31st, 1903, if the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had on March 31st, 1903—acquired a majority of the capital stock of defendant corporation and thereby effected a combination of said two corporations, with the purpose and intention on the part of the managing officers and directors of said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of preventing or lessening competition in the sale of oil in Texas, gave said Act of March 31st, 1903, an ex post facto operation, in that it made the question of defendant's guilt or innocence depend upon the purpose and intention of the managing officers and directors of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey in doing an act consummated long prior to the taking effect of said Act of March 31st, 1903, contrary to the provisions of Paragraph 1, Section 10, Article 1, of the Constitution of the United States, and contrary to Section 16, Article 1, of the Constitution of the State of 1880 Texas, and contended by appellant in its third proposition under its 70th assignment of error.

45.

Because this court erred in not holding that it was error for the trial court to refuse to instruct the jury, as requested in special charge No. 10, requested by defendant, to the effect that the defendant was presumed to be innocent until its guilt should be established by competent evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, and that unless they should believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty of some act in violation of the law, as submitted in the instructions of the court, they should return a verdict for the defendant, as contended by appellant in its 71st assignment of error, and proposition thereunder.

46.

Because this court erred in not holding that it was error for the trial court to refuse to give the jury special charge No. 18, requested by defendant and being as follows: "You are instructed that if you believe from the evidence that since the incorporation of defendant under the laws of Missouri on the 29th day of May, 1900, and its obtaining its permit to transact business in the State of Texas on the 31st day of May 1900, the defendant has, through its officers and agents, fixed and regulated the prices at which it has sold oil and other commodities handled by it in the conduct of its business, independently of any control by the Standard Oil Company, then, as to the alleged ground of the fixing and regulating of its selling prices by the Standard Oil Company, you should find for the defendant," as contended by appellant in its 72nd assignment of error and proposition thereunder.

47.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 73rd assignment of error, and propositions thereunder, that it was error for the trial court to refuse to give to the jury special charge No. 14 requested by appellant, relating to the right of the Standard Oil Company, as a stockholder in defendant com-
1881 pany, to examine and audit the books, records and accounts of defendant, and with reference to the effect of such stock ownership and such auditing and inspection of defendant's books, records and accounts.

48.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 74th assignment of error and proposition thereunder in its 74th assignment of error and proposition thereunder that it was error for the trial court to refuse to give the jury the special instruction No. 23 requested by defendant, relating to the right of the defendant to confine its business operations to any territory desired by it.

* * * * * * *

51.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 75th and 76th assignments of error, and propositions thereunder, that the trial court erred in that portion of the eighth paragraph of its charge in regard to the Act of May 25th, 1899, wherein it instructed the jury to find for the plaintiff if they should find from a preponderance of the evidence that on June 1st, 1900, or any date subsequent thereto, and prior to March 31st, 1903, the defendant, acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents, had brought about or permitted any combination or a union of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, whereby the trade in oil refined from petroleum in Texas was sought to be controlled or limited.

Because this court erred in not holding that the provisions of the Anti-trust Act of May 25th, 1899, and in regard to which the trial court instructed the jury in the eighth paragraph of its charge, and reading "If any two or more persons or corporations who are engaged in buying or selling any article of commerce * * * shall enter into any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, or understanding to control or limit the trade in any such article or thing * * * it shall be in violation of this Act," is of such doubtful construction as to be wholly inoperative, and in fur-
1882 ther holding that to inflict penalties upon this defendant for alleged violations of such provision would be to take the property of this defendant without due process of law, contrary to the provisions of the first Section of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as contended by appellant in its first and second propositions under its 75th and 76 assignments of error.

53.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its third proposition under its 75th and 76 assignments of error, that the Anti-trust Act of May 25th, 1899, made agreements, combinations or understandings between two or more persons or corporations to control or limit the trade in an article of commerce, unlawful, if at all, only when entered into between two or more persons or corporations engaged in buying or selling such article of commerce in this State, and in not further holding, as contended by appellant in its fourth proposition under said assignment of error, that, since it was admitted on the trial that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had never transacted any business in Texas, an agreement, combination or understanding between said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and defendant to control or limit the trade in oil could not, if made, have constituted a violation of said Act of May 25th, 1899, and that the trial court erred in so instructing the jury.

54.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its fifth proposition under its 75th and 76th assignments of error, that the trial court erred in instructing the jury, as it did in the eighth paragraph of the charge, that a combination or union of the capital of defendant with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey whereby the trade in oil in Texas was sought to be controlled or limited, constituted an offense, in that said instruction assumed as a fact that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey was engaged in buying or selling oil in Texas from June 1st, 1900, up to March 31st, 1903, contrary to the express admissions of the 1883 parties to this suit made upon the trial of this cause.

55.

Because this court erred in holding that it was not error for the trial court to instruct the jury, as it did in the eighth paragraph of its charge, that it could convict the defendant of violating the law for each day embraced between May 31st, 1900, and March 31st, 1903, during which it remained or continued to be a party to an agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey to fix or regulate the price in Texas of oil refined from petroleum, which error is presented in appellant's 75th assignment of error, and its sixth proposition thereunder.

56.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 77th and 78th assignments of error, and its first and second propositions thereunder, that that portion of the Anti-trust Act of May 25th, 1899, defining a monopoly, is of such doubtful and uncertain meaning as to be wholly inoperative, and that to convict defendant of a violation of said provisions would be to take the property of this defendant without due process of law, in contravention of the 1st Section of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and that, therefore, it was error for the trial court to submit to the jury, as it did in the eighth paragraph of its charge, the question as to whether or not the defendant was a party to a monopoly, as defined in said provision of said Act.

57.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its third proposition under its 77th and 78th assignments of error, that that portion of said Anti-trust Act of May 25th, 1899, whereby a monopoly is defined as "Any union, combination or consolidation of capital * * * between persons, firms or associations of persons, or corporations, * * * whereby the several results described herein are reasonably calculated to be produced," is too indefinite to define any offense, and that to convict defendant of an offense under said provisions would be to take the property of 1884 this defendant without due process of law and contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and that, therefore, the trial court erred in instructing the jury, as it did in the eighth paragraph of its charge, that they would convict the defendant if they found from the evidence that on June 1st, 1900, or any date subsequent thereto, and prior to March 31st, 1903, the defendant * * * had brought about or permitted any combination or union of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey whereby the price of oil * * * would be reasonably calculated to be fixed or regulated.

58.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 79th and 80th assignments of error, and propositions thereunder, that the trial court erred in instructing the jury, in relation to the Act of March 31st, 1903, as it did in the ninth paragraph of its charge, that a combination of the capital of defendant, entered into by defendant's duly authorized agent, with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey for the purpose of creating in Texas or which tended to create in Texas, or carry out in Texas, restrictions in the free pursuit in this State of the business of selling oil would constitute an offense.

59.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its first and second propositions under its 79th and 80th assignments of error, that that portion of the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, which defines a trust as "A combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons to create, or which may tend to create or carry out, restrictions in trade or commerce * * * or to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this State," is too vague and uncertain to define any offense, and that to convict this defendant of violating said provision would be to take its property without due process of law, contrary to the provisions of the 1st Section of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

60.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by ap-
1885 pellant in its third proposition under its 79th and 80th assignments of error, that the trial court erred in instructing the jury, as it did in the ninth paragraph of the charge, to convict the defendant if they found from the evidence "that the defendant * * * entered into a combination of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey for the purpose of creating in Texas, or which tended to create in Texas, to carry out in Texas, restrictions in the free pursuit in this State of the business of selling oil refined from petroleum * * * and that defendant remained or was a party to such combination * * * on March 31st, 1903, or on any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29th, 1907," for the reason that it gave the jury no instruction as to what facts would constitute "restrictions in the free pursuit in this State of the business of selling oil refined from petroleum," and left the jury to determine as a matter of law what facts would constitute such restrictions.

61.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its fourth proposition under its 79th and 80th assignments of error, that the trial court erred in instructing the jury, as it did in the ninth paragraph of the charge, that they would convict the defendant, if they found from the evidence that the "direction of the affairs of the defendant corporation and the affairs of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey were under the same management or control on March 31st 1903, or on any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29th, 1907, and that they were placed under such common management or control, if any, by their respectively authorized officers under such circumstances that such common management or control * * * created or tended to create or carry out restrictions in the sale in Texas of oil * * * ," in that said charge gave the jury no instruction as to what was meant by the term "restrictions in the sale in Texas of oil," and gave the jury no instructions as to what facts would constitute such restrictions, and left the jury to determine for themselves as a matter of law what facts would constitute such restrictions.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by ap-
1886 pellant in its fifth proposition under its 79th and 80th assignments of error, that it was error for the trial court to instruct the jury, as it did in the ninth paragraph of the charge, to convict the defendant if it entered into a combination of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey for the purpose of creating in Texas, or which tended to create in Texas, or carry out in Texas, restrictions in the free pursuit in this State of the business of selling oil refeined from petroleum in that by such instructions the court ignored the statutory requisite that the business refered to should be a business authorized or permitted by the laws of the State of Texas, since the uncontradicted evidence established and it was admitted on the trial that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had never applied for or obtained a permit to do business in Texas.

63.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 81st and 82nd assignments of error, and propositions thereunder, that the trial court erred in instructing the jury, as it did in the tenth paragraph of its charge, relating to the Act of March 31st, 1903, to the effect that they would convict the defendant if they should find from the evidence that the direction of the affairs of the defendant and the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey were under the same management or control * * * and that they were placed under such common management or control * * * under such circumstances that such common management or control * * * created, or tended to create, or carry out restrictions in the sale in Texas of oil.

64.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its third proposition under its 81st and 82nd assignments of error, that the trial court erred in instructing the jury, as it did in the tenth paragraph of the charge, as set forth in the immediately preceding grounds for rehearing, in that the court in said portion of the charge omitted to instruct the jury that in order to constitute the offense thereby sought to be defined, it was necessary that there should 1887 be a "combination or consolidation" of the two or more corporations in order to constitute a monopoly under Section 2 of the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903.

65.

Because this court erred in not holding that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence over the objections of defendant the certified copy of the articles of incorporation of the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, as contended by appellant in its 84th assignment of error, and proposition thereunder.

67.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 86th assignment of error, and proposition thereunder, that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence the copy of the Standard Oil Trust Agreement copied in plaintiff's petition, over the objections of defendant made to the admission thereof on the ground that the same was immaterial and irrelevant to any issue in the case, and was made prior to the passage of any anti-trust laws of this State, and on the further ground that defendant was not a party to said trust agreement.

68.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 88th assignment of error, and proposition thereunder, that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence that portion of the answer of the witness Ida M. Butts to the seventh interrogatory propounded to her by plaintiff, to the effect that while George Rice held certificates in the Standard Oil Trust a suit was brought by the Attorney General of the State of Ohio "to force the Standard Oil Company out of the Standard Oil Trust or cause it to cease doing business in the State of Ohio if it remained in the Trust, and that the decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio was in favor of the state," and which evidence was admitted by the court over the objections of defendant thereto made on the ground that the same was not the best evidence of said facts, and that it was not competent for the witness to 1888 state her conclusion as to the effect of the decision referred to of the Supreme Court of the State of Ohio, and on — further ground that said answer appeared to be hearsay, and on the further ground that said answer appeared to be but a conclusion of the witness.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 89th assignment of error, that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence that portion of the answer of the witness Ida M. Butts to the seventh interrogatory propounded to her, to the effect that after the decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the suit brought by the

Attorney General of that state, the Standard Oil Trust "pretended to go out of existence; and to this effect caused an order to be issued to all certificate holders, including George Rice, to exchange their trust certificates into certificates called assignments of legal title," over the objections of defendant made on the ground that said evidence appeared to be hearsay.

70.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its ninetieth assignment of error, and propositions thereunder, that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence, over the objections of defendant, the answer of the witness, Ida M. Butts, to the seventh interrogatory propounded to her, to the effect that, after the decision of the suit brought by the Attorney General of Ohio the capital stock of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey was increased and said Company made, to all intents and purposes, the same in effect as the Standard Oil Trust, and that they made it the holding company for all the companies of the Standard Oil Trust.

71.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 91st assignment of error, and proposition thereunder, that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence that portion of the answer of the witness Ida M. Butts wherein she referring to the Standard Oil Trust, testified "the Trust is not dissolved and could not be dissolved until all Trust certificates were surrendered.

72.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by 1889 appellant in its 96th assignment of error, and proposition thereunder, that the trial court erred in permitting the witness C. W. Cahoon, who was sworn as witness for the plaintiff, and testified to having been in the employ of defendant as its agent at Dallas for several years prior to the trial, and that the brand of oil as P. W. and S. W. oils were inferior grades to that known as Eupion oil, to testify over the objections of defendant, that for a period of about sixty days during the first part of the year 1906 defendant sold P. W. and S. W. oils as Eupion oil—the objection made by defendant to the admission of such evidence being that such fact did not constitute a violation of the law, and could only be used for the purpose of an inflammatory argument.

74.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 92nd assignment of error, and proposition thereunder, that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence, over the objections of defendant, that portion of the answer of the witness Ida M. Butts to the tenth interrogatory in which, after detailing, the corporations and persons originally entering into the Standard Oil Trust, she testified "that others were added until in the early part of 1906 there were twenty companies in the great grand division of the Trust," and naming the companies.

75.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 93rd assignment of error, and proposition thereunder, that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence, over the objections of defendant, that portion of the answer of the witness Ida M. Butts to the fourteenth interrogatory, wherein, in answer to the following question, "After the judgment of the Supreme Court of Ohio state what difference, if any, was made with reference to the conduct and control of the companies which had been in the Trust by the trustees of the Standard Oil Trust, and state what is the present method of controlling and managing the companies that went into the Trust?" she testified: "They made little or no change until contempt proceedings were brought in 1897, when they transferred more trust certificates into assignments of legal title certificates, and soon 1890 thereafter closed as many of — as possible into stock in the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, which is the present method of controlling and managing the companies now in the Trust, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey being able to hold stock of the other companies of the Trust, became the holding Company," and in not further holding that the witness was not shown to have had any personal knowledge of the matters testified to by her in said answer, and that said answer was but a conclusion of the witness.

76.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 94th assignment of error, and proposition thereunder, that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence, over the objections of the defendant, the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth paragraphs of the agreement between plaintiff and defendant, being Stipulation No. 1, as shown on pages 43 to 46 of the stenographer's report.

77.

Because this court erred, in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 97th assignment of error, and propositions thereunder, that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence, over the objections of defendant, and for the purpose for which the same was stated to be offered by plaintiff, to-wit, that the witness Wade Hampton, at the time that his deposition was taken, attempted to conceal the fact that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey audited the books of the Waters Pierce Oil Company through auditors sent by said witness, Wade Hampton, to the office of defendant for that purpose, wherein the witness, in answer to the following question "Please state whether or not the books and accounts of the Waters Pierce Oil Company of Missouri have ever been audited by you, or under your direction," the said witness answered, "Not the present organization."

78.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 98th assignment of error, and proposition thereunder, in permitting the witness, Royer Campbell, to testify, over the objections of defendant, that in the year 1894 when he quit buying oil

1891 from the original Waters Pierce Oil Company in San Antonio, Texas, and bought from other parties to supply his trade in San Antonio, said Waters Pierce Oil Company immediately cut the price of oil from 16¢ or 17¢ to 8¢ and 10¢ per gallon, as shown on pages 470-473 of the stenographer's report.

79.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 99th assignment of error, and proposition thereunder, that the trial court erred in permitting the witness, Royer Campbell, to testify, over the objections of defendant, as to the character of warfare and competition that the old Waters Pierce Oil Company carried on with him during the year 1894 at San Antonio, as shown on pages 472-475 of the stenographer's report.

80.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 100th assignment of error, that the trial court erred in permitting the witness, A. W. Clem, to testify over the objections of defendant, with reference to the old Waters Pierce Oil Company cutting prices of oil at Seymour and other places in Texas during the year 1891, as shown on pages 545-547 of the stenographer's report.

81.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 101st assignment of error, that the trial court erred in permitting the witness, A. W. Clem, to testify, over the objections of defendant, that the old Waters Pierce Oil Company in the year 1894, after it had bought out the business of the said A. W. Clem at Dallas, Texas, advanced its selling price of oil from 9½¢ per gallon to 22¢ per gallon, and in not holding that said evidence was irrelevant to any issue in the case and calculated to prejudice the jury against the defendant.

82.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 102nd as-ignment of error, that the trial court erred in permitting the witness, A. W. Clem, to testify, over the objections of defendant, that in the year 1904 he wrote the Security Oil 1892 Company for prices on naptha and lubricating oil, and that the prices quoted him by said Company were about 2¢ above the market price, and that in the year 1906 he wrote said Security Oil Company for prices on naptha, and that said Company quoted him about the market price he was selling at in Dallas, as shown on pages 581-583 of the stenographer's report.

Because this court erred in not holding that the trial court erred, as contended by appellant in its 103rd assignment of error, in permitting the witness, C. W. Cahoon, who was shown to be one of defendant's general agents in Texas, to testify, over the objections of defendant, that at some points in Texas where there was no competition defendant's prices at which it sold oil were higher than at points where there was competition, as shown on pages 650-651 of the stenographer's report, and in not further holding, as contended by appellant in its said assignment of error, and proposition thereunder, that the admission of said evidence was prejudicial to defendant in that it was calculated to prejudice the jury against defendant.

84.

Because this court erred in holding that there was any evidence adduced upon the trial sufficient to show that the defendant had, at any time, since June 1st, 1900, committed any act or did anything in violation of the Anti-Trust Laws of the State of Texas, and in not holding that the trial court erred, as contended by appellant in its 104th assignment of error, that the trial court erred in refusing to grant the defendant a new trial upon the ground that the verdict of the jury was not supported by the evidence, and that the evidence wholly failed to show any violation by defendant of such anti-trust laws.

85.

Because this court erred in holding that the action of the jury in assessing penalties against the defendant at the sum of $1,549,500.00 for alleged violations of law between May 31st, 1900 and March 31st, 1903, was not so grossly and shockingly excessive as to show passion and prejudice on the part of the jury against the defendant, and in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 109th as-1893 signment of error, and proposition thereunder, that the trial court erred in refusing to grant the defendant a new trial upon the ground, set up in its motion for a new trial, that the verdict was, in the respect above stated, so grossly and shockingly excessive as to show passion and prejudice on the part of the jury against the defendant.

86.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 110th assignment of error, that the trial court erred in not granting the defendant a new trial upon the ground, set up in its motion for a new trial, that the verdict of the jury in assessing penalties against defendant for alleged violation of the law between May 31st, 1900, and March, 1903, at the sum of $1,549,500.00 was so manifestly excessive as to amount to depriving defendant of its property without due process of law, in contravention of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

87.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 111th assignment of error, that the trial court erred in refusing to grant the defendant a new trial upon the ground, set up in its motion for a new trial, that the verdict of the jury in assessing penalties against the defendant for alleged violations of the anti-trust acts of May 25th, 1899, at the sum of $1,549,500.00, and in assessing penalties against the defendant for alleged violations of the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, at the sum of $74,400.00, is so manifestly excessive as to amount to the deprivation of its property, in contravention of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Because this court erred in holding that the verdict of the jury in assessing penalties against the defendant for the alleged violations of the Anti-trust Act of May 25th, 1899, at $1,549,500.00 was not so manifestly excessive as to amount to the imposition of excessive fines, in violation of Section 13, Article 1, of the Constitution
1894 of the State of Texas, and in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 112th assignment of error, that the verdict of the jury, in the respect above stated, amounted to the imposition of excessive fines within the meaning of said Article of the Constitution.

89.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 113th assignment of error, that the trial court erred in refusing to grant defendant a new trial upon the ground, set up in its motion for a new trial, that the verdict of the jury in assessing penalties against defendant for the alleged violations of the Anti-trust Act of May 25th, 1899, at $1,549,500.00, and in assessing penalties against the defendant for alleged violations of the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, was so manifestly excessive as to amount to the imposition upon defendant of excessive fines in violation of Section 13, Article 1, of the Constitution of the State of Texas.

90.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 114th assignment of error, that the trial court erred in refusing to grant the defendant a new trial upon the ground set forth in said motion for a new trial, that the verdict of the jury in so far as it assesses penalties against the defendant on each of the issues submitted to the jury for each of the days between May 31st, 1900, and March 31st, 1903, is unsupported by the evidence, in that there was no evidence showing that the defendant if it violated the law in any of the respects complained of between May 31st, 1900, and March 31st, 1903, committed such violation on any particular day, nor was there any evidence showing that the defendant, if it violated the law in any of the respects complained of between May 31st, 1900, and March 31st, 1903, committed such violation for either 1033 days, or any other definite number of days.

91.

Because this court erred in not holding, as contended by appellant in its 115th assignment of error, that the trial court erred in refusing to grant defendant a new trial upon the ground, set forth in 1895 its motion for a new trial, that the verdict of the jury, in so far as it finds for the plaintiff against the defendant on each of the issues submitted for each of the days between April 1st, 1903, and April 29th, 1907, being 1488 days, is unsupported by the evidence, in that there was no evidence showing that the defendant, if it violated the law in any of the respects complained of between said days, committed such violations on any particular day, nor was there any evidence showing that the defendant violated the law in any of the respects complained of between said days on 1488 days, or any other definite number of days.

92.

Because this court erred in not sustaining Appellant's motion to consolidate with this proceeding all matters connected with the appointment of Robert J. Eckhardt as Receiver of Appellant's property embraced in the separate transcript docketed as a separate appeal in this Court, since the same matters are embraced in the transcript of the record in this cause and presented in Appellant's brief herein; which motion to consolidate was filed by Appellant in this Court on the first day of this term on October 7th, 1907, and particularly since both transcripts were filed in this Court on the same day and this cause was first docketed in this Court.

93.

Because this Court erred in not considering and sustaining Appellant's assignment of error No. 116 and in not holding the motion or application for the appointment of a receiver to be insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the trial court to appoint a receiver.

94.

Because this court erred in not considering and sustaining Appellant's assignment of error No. 117.

95.

Because this Court erred in not considering and sustaining Appellant's assignment of error No. 118.

96.

Because this Court erred in not considering and sustaining Appellant's first proposition under its assignment of error No. 120,
1896 and in not holding that when Appellant gave its supersedeas bond in connection with its appeal from the main judgment of June 1st, 1907, on June 15th, 1907, that the legal effect of such bond was to vacate and set aside the order appointing a receiver.

97.

Because this Court erred in not considering and sustaining Appellant's second proposition under its assignment of error No. 120, and in not holding that to deny to appellant the effect of its said supersedeas bond as contended in its said first proposition, results in depriving Appellant of its property without due process of law, and a denial to it of the equal protection of the law, in violation of section one of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. This error is also presented in Appellant's assignment of error No. 121.

98.

Because this Court erred in not considering and sustaining Appellant's assignment of error No. 122, and in not holding that the Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, approved April 11th, 1907, was unconstitutional and in violation of section one of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, because of the arbitrary power therein conferred.

99.

Because this Court erred in not considering and sustaining Appellant's assignment of error No. 123, and in not holding said Act of April 11th, 1907 to be in violation of Section 16 of Article One of the Constitution of the State of Texas.

100.

Because this Court erred in not considering and sustaining Appellant's first proposition under its assignment of error No. 124, and in not holding said Act of April 11th, 1907, to be in violation of Section 10 of Article One of the Constitution of the United States, because by creating a lien on Appellant's property for offenses committed before said Act took effect the penalty for such offenses was thereby increased.

1897

101.

Because this Court erred in not considering and sustaining Appellant's second proposition under its assignment of error No. 125 and in not holding said Act of April 11th, 1907, to be in violation of section one of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, because by the provisions of said Act the creation of liens and the right to appoint receivers is limited to suits against corporations, when as against individuals for the same offense and otherwise similarly situated, no lien is created and no right to appoint a receiver exists.

102.

Because this Court erred in not considering and sustaining Appellant's first proposition under its assignment of error No. 126.

103.

Because this Court erred in not considering and sustaining Appellant's second proposition under its assignment of error No. 126.

104.

Because this Court erred in not considering and sustaining Appellant's assignment of error No. 127, and in not holding that the action of the trial court in appointing a receiver of appellant's property as a means of preventing it from the further or continued violation of the laws, results in depriving Appellant of its property without due process of law, in violation of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. This error is presented in Appellant's first proposition under said assignment.

105.

Because this Court erred in not considering and sustaining Appellant's second proposition under its assignment of error No. 127.

106.

Because this Court erred in not considering and sustaining Appellant's assignment of error No. 128, and in not holding that the trial court erred in appointing a receiver of appellant's property without evidence being introduced to show that Appellant could not make use of its property in conformity with law. This error of the 1898 trial court thus permitted to stand by this court results in depriving Appellant of its property without due process of law, in violation of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

107.

Because this Court erred in not considering and sustaining Appellant's assignment of error No. 129, and in not holding the said Act of April 11th, 1907, to be in violation of Section 10, Article 1, of the Constitution of the United States, because by providing that a receiver may be appointed for the property of a corporation in a suit involving the violation of the anti-trust laws of the State, this Act as applied and construed by the trial court as authorizing the appointment of a receiver of appellant's property in this case, is an ex post facto law and void under Section 10, Article 1, of the Constitution of the United States.

Wherefore, and upon each of the foregoing grounds of error committed by this court, appellant moves the court to grant it a rehearing herein, and to set aside and vacate its said judgment affirming the judgment of the District Court of Travis County herein complained of.

Appellant represents that the Honorable R. V. Davidson, who is the Attorney General of the State of Texas, and Jewell P. Lightfoot, an Assistant Attorney General of said State and John W. Brady, County Attorney of Travis County, and T. W. Gregory and R. L. Batts composing the firm of Gregory & Batts, and George W. Allen and W. D. Hart, composing the firm of Allen & Hart, are the attorneys of record for the appellee, the State of Texas, upon whom service of this motion may be made, and that each of said attorneys resides and may be found in said Travis County, Texas, and service of this motion is prayed to be made upon the said attorneys, as required by law.

Respectfully submitted,

1904 In the Supreme Court of the United States.

Between

THE WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY (Defendant), Plaintiff in Error,
and
THE STATE OF TEXAS (Plaintiff), Defendant in Error.

Assignment of Errors.

The defendant the said Waters Pierce Oil Company says that in the record and proceedings aforesaid and in giving and affirming the judgment aforesaid of the District Court and in the order appointing a receiver as a consequence of the said judgment there is manifest error in this to-wit

1. That it was decided in and by the said judgment that the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company which was incorporated under the laws of Missouri on the 29th May 1900 and not before was liable to the penalties imposed by the statute of 1903 in the record mentioned for and on account of the acts of the Standard Oil Company in acquiring a majority of the shares of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company before the said statute of 1903 was passed or took effect which acts were not done in the state of Texas. And by means thereof the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company is thereby deprived of its property without due process of law. And it was also thereby decided that the said statute of 1903 was valid and not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States whereas it ought to have been decided that the same so far as it had the effect so given to it was invalid and repugnant to the provision of the said Constitution forbidding the passage of any ex post facto law by any state.

2. There is also manifest error in this that it was decided in and by the said judgment that the said Waters Pierce Oil Company was liable to the penalties imposed by the statute of 1899 in the record mentioned for and on account of a supposed union or 1905 combination of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company by means of acts done by the said Standard Oil Company long before the passage of the said statute and long before the incorporation of the said Waters Pierce Oil Company in acquiring a majority of the shares of another then existing company (hereinafter called the old Waters Pierce Oil Company) incorporated under the laws of Missouri by the same name as the said Waters Pierce Oil Company which acts were not done in the state of Texas. And by means thereof the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company is deprived of its property without due process of law. And it was also thereby decided that the said statute was valid and not repugnant to the said Constitution whereas it ought to have been decided that the same so far as it had the effect so given to it was invalid and repugnant to the provision of the said Constitution forbidding the passage of any ex post facto law by any state.

3. There is also manifest error in this that it was decided in and by the said judgment that the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company was liable to the penalties imposed by the said statutes of 1899 and 1903 respectively for and on account of certain supposed agreements or understandings entered into before the passage of either of the said statutes between the Standard Oil Company and the old Waters Pierce Oil Company whose property and business the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company afterwards acquired without becoming in any way bound by or answerable in respect of any of the said supposed agreements or understandings and never became so bound or answerable or did any act in carrying any of them into effect which supposed agreements or understandings if they existed were entered into out of the state of Texas. And by means of the said decision the said Waters Pierce Oil Company is deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

1906 4. There is also manifest error in this that the Court upon hearing the exceptions of the defendant to the plaintiff's amended original petition before the said trial overruled among others of them the exception (No. 9) whereby the defendant excepted to all parts and paragraphs of the said petition by which it was sought to hold the defendant subject to the provisions of the said statute of 1903 and to cancel its permit to do business in Texas and to recover penalties against it on account of the alleged holding or ownership by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of a majority of its stock because according to the allegations in the said petition the said stock was so held and owned by the said Standard Oil Company at and long prior to the passage of the said statute of 1903 and its ownership of the said stock being a vested right and not in violation of the laws of the state of Texas when the defendant's permit to transact business in Texas was granted to it on May 31st, 1900, it was not competent or within the constitutional power of the legislature of the state of Texas to interfere with such ownership or divest the said Standard Oil Company of its said property or to make it an offence by the defendant subjecting it to penalties and to a forfeiture of its said permit for such vested ownership to continue and that the said statute of 1903 is violative of the Constitution of the United States for that it is both ex post facto and retroactive in its operation and for the additional reason that if given the effect of prohibiting the continuance of such ownership of the said stock by the said Standard Oil Company and of making it an offence on the part of the defendant for such holding to continue it would deprive the defendant of its property without due process of law and deny to the defendant the equal protection of the laws and impair the obligations of a contract contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution in the said exception referred to and for these reasons the defendant therein said that it was apparent that all allegations in the said petition with respect to the alleged ownership of the defendant's stock by the 1907 Standard Oil Company should be stricken out and of this special exception the defendant prayed the judgment of the court. And the said exception being overruled the defendant was by the said judgment made liable to the penalties imposed by the said statute of 1903 for and on account of the acts of the Standard Oil Company in acquiring the said majority of the stock of the defendant before the passage of the said statute of 1903 and continuing afterwards to hold the same. And the defendant has thereby been denied the equal protection of the laws and is deprived of its property without due process of law. And it was also thereby decided that the said statute of 1903 was valid and not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States whereas it ought to have been decided that the same so far as it had the effect so given to it was invalid and repugnant to the provision of the said Constitution forbidding the passage of any ex post facto law by any state.

5. There is also manifest error in this that the Court in like manner also overruled another of the said exceptions No. 20 to the said petition whereby if the Court should construe the plaintiff's petition as alleging that the defendant was the same corporation—the same entity as the old Waters Pierce Company (which the said petition does plainly allege) then the defendant excepted to all the allegations in the said petition whereby it was sought to recover penalties of the defendant under the provision of the said statute of 1899 on account of the alleged ownership by the said Standard Oil Company of the stock of the defendant or on account of the alleged agreement between the defendant and the said Standard Oil Company or on account of the alleged agreement between the defendant and the said Standard Oil Company and the other corporations and persons mentioned in the said petition and said that the same were insufficient for the 1908 reason that if the petition be so construed it then affirmatively appeared from the said petition that the said alleged ownership of the stock of the defendant by the said Standard Oil Company existed at the time of and prior to the taking effect of the said statute of 1899 and that all of the said alleged agreements and understandings were made and entered into prior to the passage of the said statute and for the reason that the said statute was intended to act prospectively only and if intended to apply to ownerships by one corporation of the stock of another corporation or to apply to agreements of the character of the said alleged agreements so set forth in the said petition it was only intended to apply to such ownerships of stock as should be acquired after the taking effect of the said statute and to such agreements as should be made or entered into after the taking effect of the said statute and if the said statute should be construed as having been intended by the legislature to authorize the recovery against the defendant of the penalties provided for in the said statute on account of the continuation of the said alleged ownership of its stock by the said Standard Oil Company or on account of the performance by this defendant of any of the alleged agreements so alleged to have been made prior to the taking effect of the said statute then such act so construed would be violative of the said Constitution in that it would be retroactive in its effect and impair the obligations of contracts any deny to the defendant the equal protection of the laws and would take the property of the defendant without due process of law and of this the defendant prayed judgment of the Court. And the said exception being overruled the defendant was by the said judgment made liable to the penalties imposed by the said statute of 1899 for and on account of the acts of the Standard Oil Company in acquiring the said stock of the old Waters Pierce Oil Company before the passage of the said statute of 1899 and continuing afterwards to hold the same and taking a corresponding majority of the shares or the beneficial interest in such 1909 majority of the shares of the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company issued to the said Standard Oil Company for its interest in the old Waters Pierce Oil Company in which acts of the said Standard Oil Company the defendant had no part and for and on account of the alleged agreements and understandings between the old Waters Pierce Oil Company and the said Standard Oil Company and the said other corporations and persons entered into before the passage of the said statute of 1899 to none of which agreements or understandings the defendant ever became a party or became in any way answerable therefor. And the defendant is thereby denied the equal protection of the laws and is deprived of its property without due process of law.

6. There is also manifest error in this that the Court in like manner also overruled another of the said exceptions (No. 21) to the said petition whereby the defendant excepted to all the allegations in the said petition whereby it was sought to recover penalties of the defendant under the provisions of the said statute of 1903 on account of the alleged ownership by the said Standard Oil Company of the stock of the defendant or on account of the alleged agreements between the defendant and the said Standard Oil Company or on account of the alleged agreements between the defendant and the said Standard Oil Company and the other corporations and persons mentioned in the said petition and said that the same were insufficient for the reason that it affirmatively appeared from the said petition that the alleged ownershop of the stock of the defendant by the said Standard Oil Company existed at the time of and prior to the passage of the said statute of 1903 and that all of the alleged agreements and understandings were made and entered into prior to the passage of the said statute and for the reason that the said statute was intended to act prospectively only and if intended to apply to ownerships by one corporation of the stock of another corporation or to apply to agreements of the character set forth in the said petition it

1910 was only intended to apply to such ownerships of stock as should be acquired after the taking effect of the said statute and to such agreements as should be made or entered into after the taking effect of the said statute and if the said statute should be construed as having been intended by the legislature to authorize the recovery against the defendant of the penalties provided for in the said statute on account of the continuance of the said alleged ownership of the stock by the said Standard Oil Company or on account of the performance by the defendant of any of the agreements so alleged to have been made prior to the taking effect of the said statute such statute so construed would be violative of the said constitution in that it would be retroactive in its effect and impair the obligations of contracts and deny to the defendant the equal protection of the laws and would take the property of the defendant without due process of law and of this the defendant prayed judgment of the Court. And the said exception being overruled the defendant was by the said judgment made liable to the penalties imposed by the said statute of 1903 for and on account of the acts of the Standard Oil Company in acquiring the said stock of the old Waters Pierce Oil Company before the passage of the said statute of 1903 and continuing afterwards to hold the same and taking a corresponding majority of the shares or the beneficial interest in such majority of the shares of the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company issued to the said Standard Oil Company for its interest in the old Waters Pierce Oil Company in which acts of the said Standard Oil Company the defendant had no part and for and on account of the alleged agreements and understandings between the old Waters Pierce Oil Company and the said Standard Oil Company and the said other corporations and persons entered into before the passage of the said statute of 1903 to none of which agreements or understandings the defendant ever became a party or became in any way answerable therefor. And the defendant is thereby denied the equal protection of the laws and is deprived of its property without due process of law.

1911 7. There is also manifest error in this that the Court in like manner overruled another of the said exceptions (No. 25) to the said petition whereby the defendant objected that each of the said statutes of 1899 and 1903 was so indefinite vague and uncertain in its terms that it could not be ascertained by the language used that particular acts constituted an offence subjecting the offender to punishment as therein prescribed and for that reason a person could not know in advance of committing the act whether he was violating the law and that to subject the defendant to heavy penalties for an alleged violation thereof would result in the taking of the defendant's property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution. And the said exception being overruled the defendant is by the said judgment made liable to the penalties imposed by the said statutes of 1899 and 1903 respectively and is thereby deprived of its property without due process of law accordingly.

8. There is also manifest error in this that the Court in like manner overruled others of the said exceptions (No. 52 and 53) to the said petition whereby the defendant objected that the said statutes of 1899 and 1903 respectively were so indefinitely framed and of such doubtful construction that they could not be understood either from the language in which they were expressed or from some other written law of the state and by reason of their failure to designate an offence by the plain import of their words the infliction of the penalties prescribed by the said statute would be the taking of property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution. And the said exception being overruled the defendant is by the said judgment made liable to the penalties imposed by the said statutes of 1899 and 1903 respectively and is thereby deprived of its property without due process of law accordingly.

1912 9. There is also manifest error in this that evidence having been adduced at the trial of the said cause that the Standard Oil Company from some time in the year 1882 owned a majority of the shares of the old Waters Pierce Company down to the incorporation of the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company on the 29th May 1900 and that on or about the 24th September 1900 a majority of the shares of the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company which had up to that time been held by H. C. Pierce in trust for the said Standard Oil Company (the same having been so issued to him upon the formation of the defendant company on account of the interest of the said Standard Oil Company in the old Waters Pierce Oil Company) were transferred to the said Standard Oil Company by an indorsement of the certificates therefor in blank by the said H. C.

Pierce without any evidence of the registration of any transfer of the same on the books of the defendant company until early in the year 1904 when the said Standard Oil Company caused the same to be transferred on the said books into the name of M. M. Van Beuren and evidence having been also adduced at the said trial that the old Waters Pierce Company carried on its business throughout the whole of Texas and in certain other states and in Mexico and obtained its supplies of refined oil almost exclusively from the Standard Oil Company and that the said Standard Oil Company did not carry on such business in the said territory in which the old Waters Pierce Company so carried on business and that the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company after acquiring the business of the old Waters Pierce Company as above mentioned carried on the said business in the same territory and in the same way without extending its business into other territory and that the said Standard Oil Company did not extend its business into the territory in which the defendant so carried on business the judge before whom the said cause was tried at the said trial although there was no other evidence of any such agreement or understanding between the defendant and the 1913 Standard Oil Company as next hereinafter mentioned or of any other act by the defendant in carrying any other such agreement or understanding into effect directed the jury (in paragraph VII of his charge) upon the said evidence that if they found that the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company entered into or became a party to an agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company on June 1, 1900, to fix or regulate the price in Texas of oil refined from petroleum and if they further found that the defendant remained or continued to be a party to the said agreement or understanding if any and persisted in carrying the same out in Texas on June 1, 1900, or any subsequent date or dates prior to March 31, 1903, and that the oil with reference to which the said agreement or understanding was so made and carried out was the subject of local as distinguished from interstate commerce the jury should return a verdict for the state and thereby say that they found in favor of the state upon the issues submitted for their consideration in paragraph seven (VII) of the Court's charge and further instructed the jury that each day between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, during which the defendant remained a party to the agreement or understanding therein mentioned would constitute a separate and distinct violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas. And the said judge also directed the jury that the said statute of 1899 was in force on May 31, 1900, and thenceforth until March 31, 1903, and that the said statute of 1903 became effective on March 31, 1903, and has since continued in force and that if the jury should convict the defendant of any violation or violations of the said statute of 1899 they should specify in their verdict the date or days for which it was so convicted and further specify therein that as a result of such conviction its permit to do business in Texas should be forfeited and the amount of money which should be adjudged against it as penalties for such violations fixing the same at not less than $200 or more than $5,000 per day for each day that they should find it had so violated the law. And the jury in pursuance of the said

1914 directions found for the plaintiff against the defendant on the issues submitted to them in the said paragraph (VII) of the judge's charge for each of the days between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, stating the same in their verdict as being 1033 days and fixed the penalties for all the said days as hereinafter mentioned and further found that the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be cancelled. By means whereof the jury found that any such agreement or understanding as above mentioned entered into between the old Waters Pierce Company and the said Standard Oil Company became an agreement or understanding on the part of the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company with the said Standard Oil Company as soon as the defendant acquired the property and business of the old Waters Pierce Company and conducted the said business in the same manner and in the same territory as the old Waters Pierce Company had done and without extending the said business into any other territory although the defendant had not otherwise than by its said acts entered into any such agreement or understanding and also that the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company having entered into such an agreement or understanding as mentioned in the said paragraph of the judge's charge although not in the state of Texas and having persisted in carrying the same out in Texas on the 1st June 1900 was guilty of a violation of the said law on every subsequent day including Sundays and holidays down to the 31st March 1903 although it did not on any such subsequent day or did not upon some of such subsequent days do any act in Texas in or towards carrying out the said agreement or understanding but only remained a party thereto. And by the judgment upon the said verdict upon the issues submitted to the jury in the said paragraph (VII) of the judge's charge the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company is deprived of its property without due process of law.

1915 10. There is also manifest error in this that upon the evidence mentioned in the last preceding paragraph without any other evidence or suggestion of such a combination or union as next hereafter mentioned the said judge also directed the jury (in paragraph VIII of his charge) that if they found that on June 1, 1900, or any date subsequent thereto and prior to March 31, 1903, the defendant had brought about or permitted any combination or union of its capital with the capital of the said Standard Oil Company whereby the price in Texas of such oil as mentioned is the said clause of the charge was sought to be fixed or regulated or would reasonably calculated to be fixed or regulated or whereby the trade in such oil in Texas was sought to be controlled or limited the jury should return a verdict for the state and thereby say that they found for the state upon the issues submitted for their consideration in paragraph eight (VIII) of the court's charge and further directed the jury that if the defendant became a party to a pool of the character mentioned in that paragraph each day between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, that it remained a party to such pool would constitute a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas and the jury in pursuance of the said directions found for the plaintiff against the defendant on the issues submitted to them in the said paragraph of the judge's charge for each of the days between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, stating the same in their verdict as being 1033 days and in pursuance of the said directions and the other directions hereinbefore mentioned fixed the penalties for the violations of law of which the defendant was convicted by their verdict upon the issues submitted to them in the two paragraphs seven (VII) and eight (VIII) of the judge's charge at $1,549,500 and further found that the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be cancelled. By means whereof the jury found the defendant the 1916 Waters Pierce Oil Company guilty of having brought about or permitted such a combination or union of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company as above mentioned by means of the acts of the said Standard Oil Company acquiring a majority of the shares of the old Waters Pierce Company long before the passage of the said statute of 1899 and before the defendant came into existence and in holding the said shares until the defendant was incorporated and acquired the property and business of the old Waters Pierce Company and then taking the beneficial interest in a corresponding majority of the shares of the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company for its interest in the old Waters Pierce Company in which acts of the said Standard Oil Company the defendant had no part and although none of the said acts were done in the state of Texas and although no act was done by the defendant in Texas in pursuance of the supposed combination or union or for any of the supposed purposes thereof on some or any of the days for which it was so convicted. And by the judgment upon the said verdict upon the last mentioned paragraph (VIII) of the judge's charge the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company is deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution and it was thereby decided that the said statute of 1899 was valid and not repugnant to the said Constitution whereas it ought to have been decided that the same so far as it had the effect so given to it was invalid and repugnant to the provisions of the said Constitution forbidding the passage of any ex post facto law by any state.

11. There is also manifest error in this that upon the evidence mentioned or referred to in the next preceding paragraph hereof without any other evidence or suggestion of any such combination as next hereinafter mentioned and although it was agreed by the parties at the said trial for the purposes of this case that the said Standard Oil Company had from the time long before the 1917 passage of the said statute of 1903 owned a majority of the shares of the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company the said judge also directed the jury (in paragraph IX of his charge) that if they found that the defendant entered into a combination of its capital with the capital of the said Standard Oil Company for the purpose of creating in Texas or which tended to create in Texas or carry out in Texas restrictions in the free pursuit in that state of the business of selling such oil as is mentioned in the said paragraph of the charge or to fix maintain or increase the price of such oil in Texas or to prevent or lessen competition in Texas in the sale of such oil and that the defendant remained or was a party to and acted under such combination on March 31, 1903, or any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29th, 1907, the jury should return a verdict for the state and thereby say that they found for the state upon the issues submitted for their consideration in paragraph nine (IX) of the court's charge and further directed the jury that if the defendant became a party to a trust of the character mentioned in that paragraph of the charge each day between March 30, 1903, and April 29, 1907, that it remained a party to and acted under such trust would constitute a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas and that if the jury should convict the defendant of any violations of the said statute of 1903 they should specify in the verdict the date or days for which it was so convicted and further specify therein that as a result of such conviction its permit to do business in Texas should be forfeited and the sum of money that should be adjudged against it as a penalty for such violations fixing the sum at $50 per day for each day that they should convict it of having violated the said law. And the jury in pursuance of the said directions found for the plaintiff against the defendant on the issues submitted to them by the said paragraph of the judge's charge

1918 for each of the days between April 1, 1903, and April 29, 1907, stating the same in their verdict as being 1488 days and fixed the penalties for all the said days as hereinafter mentioned and further found that the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be canceled by means whereof the jury found the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company guilty of having entered into such a combination as last above mentioned by means of the acts of the said Standard Oil Company in acquiring the said majority of the shares of the said Waters Pierce Oil Company long before the passage of the said statute of 1903 although none of the said acts were done in the state of Texas and although no act was done by the defendant in Texas in pursuance of the supposed combination or for any of the supposed purposes thereof on some or any of the days for which it was so convicted and although the defendant had no means of requiring or inducing the said Standard Oil Company to part with the said majority of shares or any part thereof.

12. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge also directed the jury (in paragraph X of his charge) that if they found that the direction of the affairs of the defendant corporation and the affairs of the said Standard Oil Company was under the same management and control on March 31, 1903, or on any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907, and that they were placed under such management or control by their respectively authorized officers under such circumstances that such common management or control created or tended to create or carry out restrictions in the sale in Texas of such oil as is referred to in the said paragraph of the charge or to fix maintain or increase the price in Texas of such oil or to prevent or lessen in Texas the competition in the sale of such oil the jury should return a verdict for the state and thereby say that they found for the state on the issues submitted for their consideration in paragraph ten (X) of the court's charge and further directed the jury that if the defendant entered into a 1919 monopoly of the character mentioned in that paragraph of the charge each day between March 30 1903 and April 29 1907 that it remained a party to such monopoly constituted a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas. And although there was no evidence that the direction of the affairs of the defendant and the said Standard Oil Company was after the passage of the said statute of 1903 brought under the same management or control or was under the same management or control on the 31st March 1903 when the said statute was passed or on the first or second or any subsequent day thereafter or that the said Standard Oil Company had any power to bring the direction of the affairs of the said two corporations under the same control or management until the said majority of the shares in the defendant corporation were transferred on its books into the name of M. M. Van Beuren as hereinbefore mentioned in the year 1904 or that the said Standard Oil Company exercised any such power by doing so either before or after the same were so transferred or that any of the things supposed to have been done had been done in Texas except carrying on business there as hereinbefore mentioned the jury in pursuance of the said direction of the judge found for the plaintiff against the defendant on the issues submitted to them by the said paragraph ten (X) of the judge's charge for each of the days between April 1 1903 and April 29 1907 stating the same in their verdict as being 1488 days and fixed the penalties for all the said days as hereinafter mentioned and further found that the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be cancelled. By means whereof the jury found the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company guilty of the offense of bringing the direction of its affairs under the same management and control as those of the said Standard Oil Company although it had had no part in doing so itself and although whatever was supposed to have been done to bring the direction of the affairs of the said two corporations under the same management and control had not been done in Texas and had been done before the passage of the said statute of 1903 or had not been done on some of the days for which it was so convicted and was not in fact done at all.

1920 13. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge also directed the jury (in paragraph XI of his charge) that if they found that the Standard Oil Company had on March 31st 1903 acquired a majority of the capital stock of the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and thereby effected a combination of the said corporations with the purpose and intention therein mentioned on the part of the managing officers and directors of the said Standard Oil Company the jury should return a verdict for the state and thereby say that they found in favor of the state upon the issues submitted for their consideration in paragraph eleven (XI) of the Court's charge and further directed the jury that each day between March 30 1903 and April 29 1907 that the defendant remained a party to such monopoly constituted a separated violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas. And although at the said trial no evidence was adduced that the said Standard Oil Company acquired on or after the 31st March 1903 such a majority of the said capital stock or any shares necessary to make such majority or ever acquired any such shares within the state of Texas and it was agreed by the parties at the said trial that since a time long previous to the 31st March 1903 the said Standard Oil Company had owned more than a majority of the said capital stock the jury in pursuance of the said direction found for the plaintiff against the defendant upon the issues so submitted to them for each of the days between April 1 1903 and April 29 1907 stating the same in their verdict as being 1488 days and in pursuance of the said directions and the other directions hereinbefore mentioned fixed the penalties for the violations of law of which the defendant was convicted by their verdict upon the issues submitted to them in the three paragraphs nine (IX) ten (X) and eleven (XI) of the judge's charge at $74,400 and further found that the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be cancelled. By means whereof the jury found the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company guilty of having effected a combination of itself and the said Standard Oil Company solely by reason of the acts of the said Standard Oil Company done long before the passage of the said statute of 1903 in ac-

1921 quiring the said majority of the shares of the said Waters Pierce Oil Company although none of the said acts were done in the state of Texas and although no act was done by the defendant in Texas in pursuance of the supposed combination or for giving effect to the supposed purpose or intention of the managing officers of the said Standard Oil Company on some or any of the days for which the defendant was so convicted. And by the judgment upon the said verdict upon the issues submitted to the jury in the three last mentioned paragraphs of the judge's charge respectively the said Waters Pierce Oil Company is deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution and it was thereby decided that the said statute of 1903 was valid and not repugnant to the said Constitution whereas it ought to have been decided that the same so far as it had the effect so given to it was invalid and repugnant to the provision of the said Constitution forbidding the passage of any ex post facto law by any state.

14. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge also declared — his opinion to the jury (in paragraph XI of his charge) that if the said Standard Oil Company acquired a majority of the capital stock of the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company a combination of the said two corporations would be thereby effected and with that direction he left the said issues to the jury whereas a combination of the said two corporations would not be thereby effect- And the jury in pursuance of the said direction found for the plaintiff against the defendant upon each of the issues submitted to them respectively in the four paragraphs (eight (VIII) nine (IX) ten (. and eleven (XI) of the judge's charge and thereby found the defendant guilty of having effected such combination solely by reason of the acts of the said Standard Oil Company in acquiring the said majority of shares although none of the said acts were done in the state of Texas and although no act was done by the defendant in Texas in pursuance of the supposed combination was so convicted. And by the judgment upon the said verdict upon the issues submitted to the jury in the four last mentioned paragraphs of the judge's charge respectively the defendant the said Waters Pierce Oil Company is punished for an act which it could not control and an offense that it could not commit and is thereby deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provision of the said Constitution.
1922 or for giving effect to any supposed purpose or intention thereof on some or any of the days for which the defendant

15. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge upon the trial of the said cause arbitrarily and without any regard to the rules of law admitted evidence of (1) the incorporation of the Standard Oil Company of Ohio on or about the 10th January 1870; (2) the incorporation of the old Waters Pierce Oil Company in Missouri on the 1st May 1878 and the increase of its capital on the 13th June, 1882; (3) the agreement of the 2nd January, 1882, by which the Standard Oil Trust was formed and to which the old Waters Pierce Oil Company or the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company or H. C. Pierce who owned about two-fifths of the shares in these two companies never became a party; (4) the incorporation of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey herein referred to as the Standard Oil Company on the 1st August, 1882; (5) the ownership by the Standard Oil Company of the majority of the shares of several other companies as stated in the agreement of counsel designated Stipulation No. 1; (6) the judgment in favor of the state of Texas against the old Waters Pierce Company on the 15th June, 1897, for the forfeiture of its permit to do business in Texas which judgment was affirmed by this Court on or about the 19th March, 1900, (177 U. S., 28) and also (7) the testimony of several witnesses relating to the doings and agreements of the agents of corporations other than the defendant and of the agents of the old Waters Pierce Company prior to the incorporation of the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company and prior to the 1st June, 1900, and to 1923 the doings and agreements of the defendant's agents and the agents of other corporations outside the state of Texas and to the doings and agreements of individuals both prior and subsequent to the 1st June, 1900, and both outside and within the state of Texas (to all of which evidence and testimony respectively counsel for the defendant duly objected at the trial as appears by the record.) And although there was not any other evidence nor any evidence whatever of an agreement at any time between the defendant or the governing officers of the defendant and any other persons whatever relating to the management of the defendant's business yet the said judge arbitrarily and without any regard to the rules of law and intending that the jury should identify the defendant with the old Waters Pierce Company as charged in the petition of the state and should convict the defendant of violations of the said anti-trust laws upon the issues submitted to them in the five paragraphs last above mentioned of the judge's charge without any legal evidence of any such violation and should for that purpose consider irrelevant evidence under color of first finding a conspiracy of which there was no evidence whatever overruled all the objections of the defendant to the admission of the said evidence and directed the jury (in the division V of his charge) that if they found from the other evidence in the case independent of all declarations or statements made by any person or persons except their evidence given as witnesses personally or by deposition that on June 1, 1900, there was formed or existed an agreement between the governing officers of the defendant and the governing officers of any of the other corporations alleged in the state's petition to be co-conspirators with the defendant relating to the management of the defendant's business or between the governing officers of the defendant and any of the individuals alleged in the State's petition to be co-conspirators with the defendant relating to the management of the defendant's business then the jury might consider for what if anything they thought it worth 1924 such acts or declarations of all the parties to the said agreement and such acts and declarations of their authorized agents if any as were done or made during the existence of such agreement and in furtherance of its execution for the purpose of determining the character of such agreement and whether or not it contemplated a violation by the defendant of the anti-trust laws of Texas but that none of the said evidence could be considered by the jury for any other purpose whatever and none of it could be so considered by the jury against the defendant for the said purposes except such of it if any as they should think proper to be considered when tested by the rules so stated relating to its competency. And also directed the jury (in the division XIII of his charge) that they might consider so far as it tended to establish some one or more of the issues submitted for their consideration in the said five paragraphs (VII to XI) of his charge the evidence introduced before them that the defendant had given rebates and discounts in the course of its dealings and that the defendant had made contracts and entered into understandings other than those submitted for their consideration in the said five paragraphs of the charge and also the evidence introduced before them of the general course of dealings of the defendant in Texas and elsewhere including some of its business methods in meeting competition although he directed them that none of this evidence showed or tended to show any violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas unless it tended to establish some one or more of the said issues so submitted for their consideration. And the verdict was accordingly given for the State upon the said issues submitted to the jury whereas according to due process of law it ought to have been given for the defendant. And upon the appeal of the defendant the Court of Civil Appeals in affirming the said judgment unreasonably and wilfully disregarded the questions thereby raised under the said Constitution as well as the rules of evidence ac-

1925 cording to the usage and practice prevailing in Texas. And the defendant is thereby deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

16. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge at the trial refused to direct the jury as requested by the defendant (Special Charges refused No. 5) as follows:

"You are instructed that inasmuch as the defendant is a corporation incorporated and existing under the laws of the state of Missouri the question of the legality of the ownership of a majority of its stock by the Standard Oil Company is not an issue in this case and in this connection you are further instructed that the anti-trust laws of Texas being designed merely to prohibit unlawful combinations or agreements having the purpose of fixing and regulating prices and other forbidden purposes denounced by such laws could not be violated by the mere ownership by the Standard Oil Company of a majority of the stock of the defendant."

Whereas the said direction ought to have been given so that the jury might not convict the defendant of violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas merely on account of the acts of the Standard Oil Company in owning in another state a majority of the stock of the defendant. And the verdict having been given for the state the defendant is by reason of the said refusal deprived of its property by the said judgment without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

17. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge at the trial refused to direct the jury as requested by the defendant (Special Charges refused No. 7) as follows:

"You are instructed that it is admitted by the defendant that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey acquired a majority of the shares of stock of the defendant company on or about the 4th day of September 1900 and thereafter continued to own the same.

Therefore the Court further instructs the jury that the ac-
1926 quiring and owning of said chares of stock by said Standard Oil Company did not constitute a violation of the act approved March 31st, 1903, even though the jury may believe that the said Standard Oil Company voted said shares of stock at the meeting of the stockholders of the defendant company for the election of director of said defendant company."

And there is also manifest error in this that the said judge also refused to direct the jury as requested by the defendant (Special Charges refused No. 24):

"You are instructed that since the Standard Oil Company acquired a majority of the stock of the defendant prior to the enactment of the anti-trust act of 1903 and since the defendant company being a corporation created by the laws of Missouri the acquisition of such stock by the Standard Oil Company cannot be inquired into by the courts of Texas but must be in all things treated as legal and valid the inhibition of the anti-trust act of 1903 against any corporation's acquiring the shares of stock of any other corporation for the purpose of preventing or lessening competition or tending to affect or lessen competition can have no application to this case."

Whereas the said directions ought respectively to have been given so that the jury might not convict the defendant of violation of the said statute of 1903 upon any of the three issues submitted to them as aforesaid in the paragraphs nine (IX) ten (X) and eleven (XI) of the judge's charge on account of the acts of the Standard Oil Company in acquiring the said majority of shares before the passage of the said statute of 1903. And the verdict having been given for the State the defendant is by reason of the said refusals deprived of its property by the said judgment without due process of law and subjected to the said penalties by virtue of an ex post facto law passed by the state of Texas contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

1927 18. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge at the trial refused to direct the jury as requested by the defendant (Special Charges refused No. 9) as follows:

"You are instructed that it is not in violation of the laws of the state of Texas and has not been a violation of such laws or any laws at any time since May 31st, 1900, for the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey or any other person or corporation to own a part of the stock of the defendant Waters Pierce Oil Company and you will therefore disregard any evidence that has been introduced before you upon this subject."

Whereas the said direction ought to have been given so that the jury might not convict the defendant of violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas merely on account of the acts of the Standard Oil Company in ow-ing in another state a majority of the stock of the defendant. And the verdict having been given for the state the defendant is by reason of the said refusal deprived of its property by the said judgment without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

19. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge at the trial refused to direct the jury as requested by the defendant (Special Charges No. 13) as follows:

"You are instructed that in view of the fact that the Standard Oil Trust Agreement of January 2nd, 1882, and the supplemental agreement thereto of January 4th, 1882, were executed long prior to the creation of the defendant and there is no evidence showing that the defendant ever adopted said agreement you will not consider the execution of said agreement or the contents of the same as in any wise affecting this defendant."

Whereas the said direction ought to have been given so that the jury might not convict the defendant of violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas on account of this agreement between other persons made long before the defendant came into existence and 1928 long before the passage of the said anti-trust laws. And the verdict having been given for the State the defendant is by reason of the said refusal deprived of its property by the said judgment without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

20. There is also manifest error in this that the penalties of $1,549,500 and $74,400 assessed by the jury are respectively so plainly excessive that the defendant is thereby deprived of its property without due process of law.

21. There is also manifest error in this that the Court upon hearing the said exceptions of the defendant to the said petition in manner aforesaid overruled others of the said exceptions (Nos. 28 and 38) whereby the defendant objected that the recovery of penalties under the said statutes respectively for acts done more than two years before the commencement of the said action was barred by article 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of Texas.

And in this that the Court also overruled in like manner others of the said exceptions (Nos. 30, 31, 40, 41) whereby the defendant objected respectively that if the said limitation was not available to it the defendant would be denied the equal protection of the laws contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution and that the said statutes of 1899 and 1903 would respectively be invalid by reason thereof. And in this that the Court also in like manner overruled others of the said exceptions (Nos. 32 and 42) whereby the defendant objected that the recovery of the said penalties for acts done more than two years before the commencement of the said action was barred by article 3354 of the Revised Statutes of Texas. And in this that the Court also in like manner overruled others of the said exceptions (Nos. 34 and 44) whereby the defendant objected that if the said limitation was not available to it the defendant was denied the equal protection of the laws contrary 1929 to the provisions of the said Constitution and that the said statutes of 1899 and 1903 were invalid respectively by reason thereof. And in this that the Court also in like manner overruled others of the said exceptions (Nos. 35 and 37) whereby the defendant objected respectively that the recovery of penalties under the said statute of 1899 for acts done more than four years before the commencement of the said action was barred by article 3358 of the said Revised Statutes and that if the said limitation was not available to it the defendant was denied the equal protection of the laws contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution. And in this that the judge also refused with like effect and consequences to direct the jury as requested by the defendant in the Special Charges refused Nos. 1, 2 and 3 respectively as regards the said limitations which were duly pleaded in the defendant's answer.

22. There is also manifest error in this that the Court in like manner overruled another of the said exceptions (No. 10) to the said petition whereby the defendant objected that the parts thereof which seek to hold the defendant liable to penalties and a forfeiture of its said permit because of the alleged agreement or understanding whereby in consideration of the defendant purchasing all its supplies from the said Standard Oil Company the said Standard Oil Company agreed that the defendant should be permitted to sell its products in Texas without competition or interference by the said Standard Oil Company because it appears from the petition that the said Standard Oil Company was and is a citizen of New Jersey and never obtained a permit to do business in Texas and it is not alleged that it ever contemplated entering Texas to do business therein or could have obtained a permit so to do and therefore an agreement such as alleged if made could not be construed as violating any laws of Texas without giving to such laws an extra-territorial effect and operation binding upon citizens of other states and with respect to inter-state commerce and in violation of the said Consti-
1930 tution and the defendant moved the Court to strike out the said allegations with respect to the said alleged agreement and understanding. And the said exception being overruled the defendant is by the said judgment made liable to the penalties imposed by the said laws on account of the said alleged agreement or understanding contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution relating to commerce among the several states and is so deprived of its property without due process of law.

23. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge at the trial refused to direct the jury as requested by the defendant (Special Charges refused No. 23) as follows:

"You are instructed that if you believe from the evidence that the defendant has entered into any agreement by which it has bound itself to transact business within a certain territory in the United States, including the State of Texas, and that in pursuance of such agreement the defendant has been and is transacting business in the State of Texas, the making of such agreement and the transaction of business thereunder by the defendant cannot be considered as in violation of the Anti-Trust Laws of Texas, and in this connection you are instructed that the defendant always had and now has the right to confine its business operations to any territory desired by it and that the fact that the defendant has not extended its operations to a broader field would not render the defendant guilty of violating the Anti-Trust Laws of Texas."

Whereas the said direction ought to have been given so that the jury might not convict the defendant of violation of the said laws by reason of any such agreement or understanding as alleged as aforesaid by which the said Standard Oil Company agreed that the defendant should be permitted to sell its products in Texas without competition or interference by the said Standard Oil Company in consideration of the defendant purchasing all its supplies
1931 from the said Standard Oil Company and which agreement or understanding related to commerce among the several states. And the verdict having been given for the State the defendant is by the said judgment deprived of its property without due process on account of statutes passed by the State of Texas regulating commerce among the several states contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution in that behalf.

24. There was also manifest error in this that the said judge at the said trial arbitrarily and without any regard to the rules of law and for the purpose of exciting and inflaming the prejudices of the jury against the defendant admitted in evidence against the objection of the defendant proof of the Standard Oil Trust agreement of 1882 in the plaintiff's petition set out which was made many years before the incorporation of the defendant and to which it was admitted that the defendant never became a party. And in this that the said judge in like manner admitted in evidence the paragraphs (3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th) of the agreement of counsel called Stipulation No. 1 setting out subject to all legal objections that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey owned a majority of the shares of the companies therein mentioned by the names of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, New York and Kentucky respectively and of the Continental Oil Company and the Republic Oil Company at the times and in the manner therein mentioned and that the said companies did not transact any business in Texas all of which were matters in which the defendant was in no way concerned and had no possible relation to any of the questions involved in this case. And also in this that the said judge in like manner admitted in evidence that the defendant had given rebates and discounts to certain dealers and had sold oil at different prices in different localities in Texas which evidence was irrelevant to all the issues in the case. And also in this that the said judge in like man-

1932 ner admitted in evidence the testimony of the witness C. W. Cahoon to the effect that at points in Texas where there was competition the defendant sometimes sold oils at less than at points where there was no competition which testimony had no tendency to show any violation of the laws of Texas and could have no effect except to prejudice the jury. And also in this that the said judge in like manner admitted in evidence the testimony of the said C. W. Cahoon to the effect that for about 60 days in 1903 certain brands of oil of grades inferior to that known as Eupion oil had been sold by the defendant as Eupion oil which evidence was frivolous and irrelevant. And also in this that the said judge in like manner admitted in evidence the testimony of the witness A. W. Clem to the effect that the old Waters Pierce Company in 1891 cut the prices of oil at Seymour and other places in Texas and also that the old Waters Pierce Company in 1894 after it bought out the business of the same witness advanced the selling-price of oil from 9½ cents to 22 cents per gallon which testimony did not relate in any way to the defendant or its doings or to any issue involved in this case. And in this that the said judge in like manner admitted in evidence the testimony of the witness Royer Campbell to the effect that in 1894 when he quit buying from the old Waters Pierce Company and bought from other persons in San Antonio the old Waters Pierce Company immediately cut the price of oil from 16 or 17 cents to 8 and 10 cents per gallon and also his testimony as to the character of war-fare and competition that the old Waters Pierce Company carried on with him in 1894 which evidence did not relate in any way to the defendant or anything in question in this case. And the said judge permitted the jury to consider all the said evidence so admitted so far as it might seem to establish any of the said issues submitted for their consideration. And by the admission of the said several pieces of evidence respectively the prejudices of the jury were excited and inflamed against the defendant and their attention was diverted from the true issues in the case
1933 and the defendant was prevented from having a trial of the said issues according to the due course of law. And by the judgment upon the verdict upon the issues submitted to the jury as aforesaid the defendant is deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provision of the said Constitution.

25. There is also manifest error in this that the Court appointed a receiver of the property and assets of the defendant and the bond of such receiver was received and approved as appears by the said record after the judgment given upon the said verdict was suspended by the proceedings by way of appeal on the part of the defendant from the said judgment although the Court had no authority to appoint such receiver otherwise than as a consequence of the said judgment and for the purpose of carrying the same into effect. And the defendant was thereby deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

26. There is also manifest error in this that the judgment given upon the said verdict and after notice of appeal therefrom by the defendant according to law the Court acting under color of the Texas statute of 1907 c. 87 but arbitrarily and wilfully disregarding its provisions and purposes appointed the said receiver for the purpose of depriving the defendant of its property and business and not for any purpose for which the appointment of a receiver was authorized by the said statute and on the alleged ground that the said judgment had been rendered against the defendant for violation of the said anti-trust laws and that newspaper interviews with the counsel for the defendant had been brought to the attention of the Court in which the said counsel had declared the purpose of the defendant to appeal from the said judgment and to continue to carry on its business in the same manner as theretofore and without any evidence 1934 being submitted to the Court in connection with the application for the appointment of such receiver. And the Court disregarding the provisions of the said statute and the due course of law made the said appointment of a receiver not because any interest of the state seemed to require such action but for the pretended purpose of preventing the defendant from a continued violation of the law although the Court knew that the defendant had appealed from the said judgment and denied any violation on its part of the said anti-trust laws and although the court assumed as declared by the Court at the time of such appointment that the defendant would file its proper supersedeas bond upon the said appeal and had a right to do so within the time provided by law all of which appears by the bill of exceptions of the defendant as to matters connected with the appointment of the receiver which bill of exceptions was signed and allowed by the judge who held the said court at the time of the said proceedings. And the defendant by the appointment of the said receiver for such purpose and in such circumstances is deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

27. There is also manifest error in this that the Court decided that the said statute of 1907 under color of which the said receiver was so appointed was valid and not repugnant to the said Constitution although the statute was passed after the commencement of the said action and provided that when any law of the said state including any of the said Anti-Trust Laws for the violation of which fines or penalties or forfeitures were provided had been theretofore violated or should be violated before the taking effect of the said statute by any corporation the said state should have a lien to secure the payment of such fine, penalties and costs from the time when the said statute took effect on all property of such corporation within the said state or which should thereafter become or be brought within the said state and also provided for the appointment of a receiver

1935 for such corporation in the cases therein mentioned but did not provide for any lien or authorize the appointment of a receiver in the case of a violation of any of the said laws by any persons other than a corporation. Whereas it ought to have been decided that the said statute was invalid and repugnant to the provisions of the said Constitution forbidding the passage of any ex post facto law by any state and was also invalid because the defendant was thereby denied the equal protection of the laws and deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

28. There is also manifest error in this that after judgment was improperly given upon the said verdict as aforesaid for the plaintiff the court appointed a receiver of the property and assets of the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company as specified in the orders appointing a receiver whereas the Court ought not to have appointed such receiver. And by the appointment of such receiver the defendant is deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

And the said Waters Pierce Oil Company prays that the said judgment and order and the judgment affirming the same respectively for the errors aforesaid and others in the record and proceedings aforesaid may be reversed annulled and altogether held for nothing and that it may be restored to all things which it hath lost by occasion of the said judgment and order and the affirmance thereof as aforesaid.

[Seal of the Supreme Court of the United States.]

The President of the United States of America to the Honorable the Judges of the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Judicial District of Texas, Greeting:

Because in the record and proceedings, as also in the rendition of the judgment of a plea which is in the said Court of Civil Appeals before you, or some of you, being the highest court of law or equity of the said State in which a decision could be had in the said suit between the Waters Pierce Oil Company incorporated under the laws of Missouri, Appellant, and the State of Texas, appellee, which judgment affirmed a judgment of the District Court of Travis County upon a verdict against the Appellant and other proceedings therein being cause No. 4212, in the said Court of Civil Appeals, wherein was drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision was against their validity; or wherein was drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under, said State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision was in favor of such their validity; or wherein was drawn in question the construction of a clause of the Constitution, or of a treaty, or statute of, or commission held under the United States, and the decision was against the title, right, privilege, or exemption specially set up or claimed under such clause of the said Constitution, treaty, statute, or commission; a manifest error hath happened to the great damage of the said Waters Pierce Oil Company as by its complaint appears. We being willing that error, if any hath been, should be duly corrected, and full and speedy justice done to the parties aforesaid in this behalf, do command 1936½ you, if judgment be therein given, that then under your seal, distinctly and openly, you send the record and proceedings aforesaid, with all things concerning the same, to the Supreme Court of the United States, together with this writ, so that you have the same in the said Supreme Court at Washington, within thirty days from the date hereof, that the record and proceedings aforesaid being inspected, the said Supreme Court may cause further to be done therein to correct that error, what of right, and according to the laws and customs of the United States, should be done.

Witness the Honorable Melville W. Fuller, Chief Justice of the United States, the 27th day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eight.

JAMES H. McKENNEY,
Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States.

EDWARD D. WHITE,
Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Endorsed: Copy of Writ of Error lodged for the Defendant in Error. Filed In Court of Civil Appeals 3rd Supreme Judicial District, Austin, Texas, Mar. 30th, 1908. R. H. Connerly, Clerk.

1937 Know all men by these presents, That we, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, incorporated under the laws of Missouri, as principal, and the American Surety Company of New York incorporated under the laws of New York, as sureties, are held and firmly bound unto the State of Texas in the full and just sum of one thousand dollars, to be paid to the said State of Texas or its certain attorney, or assigns: to which payment, well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves, our heirs, executors, and administrators, jointly and severally, by these presents. Sealed with our seals and dated this twenty-seventh day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eight.

Whereas, lately at a Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Judicial District of Texas, in a suit depending in said court, between the said Waters Pierce Oil Company, Appellant, and the State of Texas, Appellee, being cause No. 4212 in the said court, a judgment was rendered against the said Waters Pierce Oil Company affirming a judgment of the District Court of Travis County upon a verdict against the said Appellant and other proceedings therein. And the said Waters Pierce Oil Company having obtained a writ of error and filed a copy thereof in the Clerk's Office of the said Court to reverse the judgment in the aforesaid suit, and a citation directed to the said State of Texas citing and admonishing it to be and appear at a Supreme Court of the United States, at Washington, within thirty days from the date hereof.

Now, the Condition of the Above Obligation is Such, That if the said Waters Pierce Oil Company shall prosecute the said writ of error to effect, and answer all damages and costs if it fail to make its plea good, then the above obligation to be void; else to remain in full force and virtue.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Travis:

At a term of the District Court of the 26th Judicial District of Texas, begun and holden at Austin, within and for the County of Travis, before the Honorable V. L. Brooks, and ending on the 29th day of June, A. D. 1907, the following case came on for trial, to wit:

No. 24551.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

PROCEEDINGS IN RECEIVERSHIP.

Application for a Receiver. Filed June 1, 1907.

In the District Court, Travis County, Texas, Twenty-sixth Judicial District.

No. 24551.

STATE OF TEXAS, Plaintiff,
vs.
WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY, Defendant.

To the Honorable V. L. Brooks, Judge of said Court:

And now comes the State of Texas, acting by and through her Attorney General, and the County Attorney of Travis County, Texas, acting under the direction and supervision of the said Attorney General, and shows to the Court:

First. That on the 1st day of June 1907, in this court, in the above entitled and numbered cause, a judgment was rendered in favor of the State of Texas against the defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company for the sum of One Million Six hundred twenty-three Thousand, Nine Hundred Dollars, ($1,623,900.00) and said judgment further providing for the cancellation of the permit of the said defendant to do business in the State of Texas; that said cause of action and said judgment was based upon alleged violation of the Anti-trust law of the State of Texas.

Second. That in a certain suit pending in the State of Missouri, wherein the State of Missouri is plaintiff, and the said above named defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, among others, is 2 defendant, a suit was instituted for the forfeiture of the charter of said defendant, Waters Pierce Oil Company and prohibiting it doing business in said State, said suit being instituted in the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri; that in pursuance to law the said Supreme Court of the State of Missouri appointed a Commissioner to hear testimony and make his report and findings of fact, and recommendation of law thereon; that after hearing the testimony, the said commissioner found in favor of the State of Missouri on all issues in said case, and recommended to the said Supreme Court of Missouri that the charter of the said Waters Pierce Oil Company be cancelled; that plaintiff is informed and believes that said recommendations have the force and effect of a judgment forfeiting the charter of the said defendant, Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Third. That the penalties recovered in this cause by plaintiff, the State of Texas, cannot be collected outside the state of Texas, and the property of the defendant situated in the State of Texas, as the plaintiff is informed and believes, is wholly inadequate to pay the above mentioned judgment; that the great bulk of the property within the State of Texas belonging to the defendant, subject to the payment of the said judgment, consists of current accounts with merchants and dealers in the State of Texas, of tank cars, of money on hand, of oil that is easily removed, and property of that kind and character, practically the whole of it being personal movable, property, and if carried beyond the limits of this State cannot be pursued by the State of Texas, and the State would have no way of collecting the above mentioned judgment; that under and by virtue of an act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, approved April 11th, 1907, the State has a lien upon all of said property to secure the payment of the above mentioned judgment.

Fourth. That under the judgment of ouster rendered in this cause, the defendant has no right to do business in this State and has been convicted of doing business in this State in violation of the law for each and every day since the issuance of its permit seven years ago; that it is necessary to preserve and protect the rights of the State that said business of said defendant should be conducted and carried on, at least temporarily, and be kept a going concern in this State.

3 Wherefore, plaintiff requests the court to appoint a receiver to take charge of all the property and assets of every kind and description of the defendant situated within the State of Texas, pending the hearing of this application; that this court grant its most gracious writ of injunction, restraining and prohibiting the defendant, its officers, agents, attorneys and employees, or any of them from removing from the State of Texas any part of the property or assets of said defendant situated within the State of Texas.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Travis:

Before me, the undersigned authority, on this day personally appeared Jno. W. Brady, County Attorney of Travis County, Texas, who, after being by me sworn on his oath, says that the facts stated in the foregoing application are true, except where stated upon information and belief, and where so stated he verily believes them to be true.

JNO. W. BRADY.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this the 1st day of June, A. D. 1907.

ROSE LITTMAN,
Notary Public, Travis Co., Texas.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, June 1, 1907.

In Chambers.

4 The above application for the appointment of a receiver of the property and assets of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, being presented to me, it is hereby set down for hearing on the 8th day of June, 1907, at 10 o'clock A. M. at the Court House in Travis County, Texas, and the Clerk will issue a notice to the defendant accordingly. Upon consideration, the application for a temporary injunction pending the hearing of said application is hereby granted, and the clerk of this court is instructed to issue such temporary injunction under his hand and the seal of court restraining and prohibiting the defendant, its officers, agents, attorneys and employés, or any of them, from removing beyond the State of Texas, any of the property or assets of defendant until the further orders of this court.

V. L. BROOKS,
Judge 26th Judicial District of Texas.

(Endorsed:) No. 24551. The State of Texas vs. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. Application for a Receiver. Filed June 1st, 1907. D. J. Pickle, Clerk, by J. A. Belger, Deputy.

Defendant's Answer to Plaintiff's Application for Receiver.

Filed June 10th, 1907.

In District Court of Travis Co., Texas, 26th Judicial District.

No. 24551.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS PIERCE OIL CO.

Now comes the defendant in the above entitled and numbered cause, by its attorneys, and excepts to the application filed by the plaintiff herein on June 1st, 1907, for the appointment of a receiver of the property and assets of this defendant, and says that said application is insufficient in law, and shows no sufficient cause for the appointment of such receiver, and of this defendant prays judgment of the court.

CLARK & BOLINGER,
COCHRAN & PENN,
D. W. ODELL,

D. W. ODELL,
N. A. STEDMAN,
Attorneys for Def't.

And for further answer to said application, and for the purpose of replying to the portion thereof relating to the said suit pending in the State of Missouri, defendant says that it is not true, as stated in said application that the recommendation of said commissioner have the force and effect of a judgment forfeiting the charter of this defendant, but, on the contrary, no judgment has been rendered in said cause in said Supreme Court of Missouri, and said report of said commissioner does not have the effect of a judgment, but that said report and recommendations of said Commissioner may be either approved or rejected by said Supreme Court of Missouri, and will have no force or effect unless confirmed and approved by said Supreme Court of Missouri.

CLARK & BOLINGER,
COCHRAN & PENN,
D. W. ODELL,
N. A. STEDMAN,
Att'ys for Def't.

Before me, the undersigned officer, on this day personally appeared D. W. Odell and R. L. Penn, who each being by me first duly sworn on oath deposes and says that he is one of the attorneys for 6 defendant in the above numbered and entitled cause and that the facts stated in the foreg-ing special plea are true as he is informed and verily believes.

D. W. ODELL.
R. L. PENN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me by D. W. Odell & R. L. Penn, this 10th day of June, A. D. 1907.

[SEAL.] D. J. PICKLE,
Clerk District Court, Travis Co., Texas,
By E. HUPPERTZ, Deputy.

(Endorsed:) No. 24,551. The State of Texas vs. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. Defendant's answer to plaintiff's application for Appointment of Receiver. Filed June 10th, 1907. D. J. Pickle, Clerk. By E. Huppertz, Deputy.

Order Granting Injunction, June 1st, 1907.

24441.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

IN CHAMBERS, AUSTIN, TEXAS, June 1, 1907.

On this day came on to be heard the application for a temporary injunction, restraining the defendant from removing beyond the State of Texas any of its property or assets, and the Court having considered said application is of the opinion that same should be granted:

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that the defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, its officers, agents, attorneys and employees, each and all of them, are hereby restrained enjoined and prohibited from removing beyond the limits of the State of Texas any of the property or assets of the said defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, until further orders of this court.

7 Order Granting Application for Appointment of Receiver, June 10th, 1907.

24551.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

And now on this 10th day of June, 1907, at a regular term of this court, there came on to be heard the application of the State of Texas for the appointment of a receiver of the property and assets of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, a corporation, pending the further disposition of this cause, and the court, after duly considering said application, is of the opinion that the prayer should be granted and a receiver appointed to take charge of all of the property and assets of the defendant the Waters Pierce Oil Company situated within the State of Texas, or that may hereafter come within the State of Texas, and that such receiver shall immediately take charge of all of said property and assets and hold the same subject to the further orders of this court, and said receiver is hereby directed and instructed to continue and carry on the business of the defendant until such furture time as the court may direct, keeping and preserving the property coming into his custody and carrying on the business of marketing and supplying oil to the public in the State of Texas; that the temporary injunction heretofore granted, prohibiting the defendant from moving any of its property and assets beyond the limits of the State of Texas, be and the same is hereby continued in force until the further orders of this court. To all of which action the defendant in open court excepts, and in open court gives notice of appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas.

Order Appointing Receiver, June 13th, 1907.

24551.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

8 On this, the 10th day of June, A. D. 1907, in this cause an order was made and entered by this court granting the application of the plaintiff the State of Texas, for the appointment of a receiver herein, the court at the time of the making of said order naming as receiver, Robert J. Eckhardt and time being given both parties to urge any objection they might have to said Eckhardt as such receiver, and no objection having been made to said Eckhardt, the court now on this 13th day of June, 1907, confirming said order and in pursuance thereof names and appoints as Receiver herein of the property in said order described said Robert J. Eckhardt, with the duties and powers therein named and fixes the amount of his bond as such receiver at ($250,000.00) Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

And defendant renews its exceptions to the appointment of a receiver and gives notice of appeal from the order appointing a receiver to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas, at Austin.

Order Amending Orders Appointing Receiver, June 15th, 1907.

WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

And now on this 15th day of June, A. D. 1907, at a regular term of this court,

It is considered, ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that the orders of this court made and entered in said cause on the 10th day of June, A. D. 1907, and on the 13th day of June, A. D. 1907, be so amended as to hereafter read as follows:

And now on this 10th day of June, 1907, at a regular term of this court there came on to be heard the application of the State of Texas for the appointment of a receiver of the property and assets of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, a corporation, pending the further disposition of this cause, and the court, after duly considering 9 said application, is of the opinion that the prayer should be granted and a receiver appointed to take charge of all the property and assets of the defendant, the Waters Pi-rce Oil Company, situated within the State of Texas, or that may hereafter come within the State of Texas, and that such receiver shall immediately take charge of all of said property and assets and hold the same subject to the further orders of this court, and said receiver is hereby directed and instructed to continue and carry on the business of the defendant until such future time as the court may direct, keeping and preserving the property coming into his custody and carrying on the business of marketing and supplying oil to the public in the State of Texas, with the right, power and authority to continue the various clerks, servants and agents of every class and grade now in the employ of the defendant or to discharge them and employ others at his discretion and to require such bonds and security to himself as Receiver from any of the present employees or those hereafter engaged by him as he may think expedient and proper, and to sell the present stock of oil and other products and personal property in the hands of the defendant and which may come into his hands as receiver and to purchase and sell other oil, products and personal property in the regular course of business of the defendant to the same effect as the defendant could or might have done in the continuation of said business so that said business may be kept up to its present condition as near as may be; and the said Receiver shall have power, under control of the court, to bring and defend actions in his own name as receiver, to take charge and keep possession of the property, to insure the same against loss and destruction by fire or otherwise as he may deem proper, to receive rents, collect, compound for, compromise demands, employ one or more attorneys at law, make transfers and generally do such acts respecting the property as the court may authorize and all the expenses of said receivership, including taxes, insurance premiums, attorney's fees, his own compensation and all expenses of said receivership to be paid as a part of the Court costs of the suit.

That the temporary injunction heretofore granted, prohibiting the defendant from moving any of its property and assets beyond the limits of the State of Texas, be and the same is hereby continued in force until the further orders of this court.

To all of which action the defendant in open court excepts, and in open court gives notice of appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District of the State of Texas.

And on the 13th day of June, A. D. 1907, the Court confirming said order and in pursuance thereof names and appoints as receiver herein of the property in said order described Robert J. Eckhardt, who is a resident citizen of the County of Williamson, in the State of Texas, with the duties and powers therein named, and fixes the amount of his bond as such Receiver at ($250,000.00) Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, to be made payable to the Judge of this Court and his successors in office, for the use of all parties interested in said property and this suit.

And defendant renewed its exceptions to the appointment of a receiver and gives notice of appeal from the order appointing a receiver to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas at Austin.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

And now on this the 15th day of June, 1907, in open court it is ordered by the court in the above cause, that $100,000.00 be and the same is hereby fixed as the amount of the bond which the defendant shall be required to give in order to supercede the judgment of the court placing defendant's property in the hands of a receiver; and,

It is further ordered that upon the approval by the court and the filing with the clerk by defendant of a good and sufficient bond conditioned as required by law for said amount, further proceedings herein be suspended pending appeal.

But this order shall not effect, rescind the order heretofore entered prohibiting and enjoining the defendant, its servants, officers, agents and attorneys from removing any of its property or assets beyond the limits of the State of Texas, but said injunction shall remain in full force and effect pending the appeal from the order appointing a receiver herein.

And thereupon the defendant in open court tendered to the Court and Clerk certain papers which it stated to be its appeal bond, and an affidavit with reference thereto, which bond purported to have as sureties thereon the American Surety Company of New York and John H. Kirby, and requested the Court and Clerk to approve the same, but the court deferred further action in the premises and stated that it would announce its further action on said bond at 10 o'clock A. M. June 10th, 1907.

No. 24551.

THE STATE OF TEXAS

v.

WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

Be it remembered that on the 22nd day of September, A. D. 1906, the State of Texas instituted suit by original petition filed in the above court against the defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, in which petition and for cause of action against the defendant, the plaintiff alleged that defendant had on each and every day from June 1st, 1900, down to and including the 31st day of March, 1903, in each and every county in the State of Texas, committed acts in violation of chapter 146 of the Acts of the Twenty-sixth Legislature, known as the Anti-trust law of 1899, and being entitled "An Act to prohibit pools, trusts, monopolies and conspiracies to control business and prices of articles; and to provent the formation or operation of pools, trusts, monopolies and combinations of charters of corporations that vi*o*ates the terms of this act, and to authorize the institution of prosecutions and suits therefor"; and that said defendant had in each and every county in the State of Texas, and on each and every day from the 1st day of April, 1903, to the filing of said suit committed acts in violation of chapter 94 of the acts of the Twenty-eighth Legislature of the State of Texas, known as the Anti-trust law of 1903, and being entitled, "An Act to define, prohibit and declare illegal, trusts, monopolies and conspiracies in restraint of trade; to prescribe penalties for forming or being connected with such trusts, monopolies and conspiracies; and to provide for the suppression of the same and to promote free competition in the State of Texas; and to repeal all laws in conflict therewith". and in said petition the plaintiff sued for the maximum penalty provided in each of said statutes, and for the aggregate sum of $5,228,400.00.

That after the filing of said petition the defendant was duly served with citation, filed its answer to the October Term of said Court, A. D. 1906, and thereafter said cause was continued at said October Term, and likewise at the March Term of said Court, A. D. 1907, and the pleadings of both parties having been amended the State filed its Second Amended original petition by leave of the court, in which the plaintiff alleged that defendant had in each and every county and on each and every day from the 1st day of June, A. D. 1900, down to the 29th day of April, 1907, committed acts in violation of each of the two anti-trust statutes above set out, and in said amended petition the State continued to claim the maximum penalty provided in each of said statutes.

In said original petition and in the said second amended original petition the State alleged that the defendant was a foreign corporation chartered under the laws of the State of Missouri, and had during the period aforesaid, been engaged in transacting business in the State of Texas under a permit granted to the defendant by the Secretary of State of the State of Texas on May 31st, 1900, and in said second amended original petition the said State of Texas prayed for relief as follows:

"Plaintiff prays that it have judgment cancelling the permit issued to defendant on the 31st day of May, 1900, and for an injunction restraining it from doing business within this State, and that it have judgment for the sum of $2,239,000.00, penalties, and it prays for costs and general relief."

And be it further remembered that in its answer to the said last named petition filed by the State, the defendant, among other things, denied all and singular the allegations contained in said petition and plead not guilty to the offenses therein charged against it, and upon said petition and said answer a trial was had before said court 16 and a jury duly impannelled, beginning on the 20th day of May, A. D. 1907, and concluding on the 1st day of June, A. D. 1907, when the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff and the court rendered judgment thereon in words and figures as follows:

"24551.

v.
WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

And now on this 20th day of May, 1907, the above cause coming on for trial, both parties appeared by Attorneys, and announced ready, and a jury having been demanded, a jury of twelve good and lawful men were duly impannelled and sworn to try the case, and thereafter the case proceeded to trial, when, by agreement of all parties on the 24th day of May, 1907, one of the jurors, Aaron Davis, theretofore selected, was excused on account of sickness, which disabled him from acting as a juror in the cause, and the trial then proceeded before the court and the eleven jurors theretofore duly selected and sworn, and the case continued on trial from day to day, and after all the pleadings and evidence and argument of counsel had been submitted to the jury, and after being duly charged by the court, the jury retired in the custody of the proper officer to consider of their verdict, and thereafter on the 1st day of June, 1907, they returned in*o*t open court the following verdict:

"AUSTIN, TEXAS, June 1, 1907.

"We the jury find for the plaintiff against the defendant on each of the issues submitted to us for each of the days between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, being 1033 days, and for penalties $1,549,500.00 dollars.

"And we find for the plaintiff against the defendant on each of the issues submitted for each of the days between April 1, 1903, and April 29, 1907, being fourteen hundred and eighty days and fix the penalties at seventy four thousand four hundred dollars.

"We further Find that the permit of the defendant to do business in the State of Texas should be cancelled.

"We find for the defendant upon all issues made by the pleadings and not submitted in the charge of the court.

which verdict was by the court received, ordered filed and made a part of the record of this cause.

"It is therefore considered, ordered, adjudged and decreed that the plaintiff, the State of Texas, do have and recover of and from the defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, a corporation, the sum of $1,623,900.00) One Million, Six Hundred and Twenty-Three Thousand Nine Hundred Dollars, together with interest thereon from this date at the rate of six per cent. per annum, together with all costs of suit, for which execution may issue;

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the permit of the defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, to do business in the State of Texas, be, an the same is, hereby cancelled and held for naught, and that the said defendant be enjoined and prohibited from doing business in the State of Texas, except interstate business, but all other business it is hereby perpetually enjoined and prohibited from transacting within the State of Texas."

And be it further remembered that upon said 1st day of June, A. D. 1907, the defendant filed with the clerk of said court its motion to set aside the verdict of the jury aforesaid and the judgment thereon rendered, and to grant it a new trial.

And be it further remembered that after the filing of the motion aforesaid, the plaintiff, the State of Texas, through its attorneys, presented to the Honorable V. L. Brooks, Judge of this court, its application for the appointment of a receiver and upon the application the said Judge of this court endorsed his fiat, and said application and fiat was thereupon, on said 1st day of June, A. D. 1907, filed with the Clerk of this court, and the same is in words and figures as follows:

In the District Court, Travis County, Texas, Twenty-sixth Judicial District.

No. 24551.

STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY, Defendant.

To the Honorable V. L. Brooks, Judge of said Court:

18 And now comes the State of Texas, acting by and through her Attorney General, and the County Attorney of Travis County, Texas, acting under the direction and supervision of the said Attorney General, and shows to the court:

First. That on the 1st day of June, 1907, in this court in the above entitled and numbered cause, a judgment was rendered in favor of the State of Texas against the defendant, The Waters Pierce Oil Company, for the sum of One Million, Six Hundred Twenty-Three Thousand, Nine Hundred ($1,623,900.00) Dollars, and said judgment further providing for the cancellation of the permit of the said defendant to do business in the State of Texas; that said cause of action and said judgment was based upon alleged violation of the Anti-trust law of the State of Texas.

Second. That in a certain suit pending in the State of Missouri, wherein the State of Missouri is plaintiff, and the said above named defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, among others, is defendant, a suit was instituted for the forfeiture of the charter of said defendant, Waters Pierce Oil Company and prohibiting it doing business in said State, said suit being instituted in the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri; that in pursuance to law the said Supreme Court of the State of Missouri appointed a commissioner to hear testimony and make his report and findings of fact, and recommendation of law thereon; that after hearing the testimony, the said commissioner found in favor of the State of Missouri on all issues in said case, recommended to the said Supreme Court of Missouri that the charter of the said Waters Pierce Oil Company be cancelled; that plaintiff is informed and believes that said recommendations have the force and effect of a judgment forfeiting the charter of the said defendant, Waters Pierce Oil Company.

Third. That the penalties recovered in this cause by plaintiff, the State of Texas, cannot be collected outside of the State of Texas, and the property of the defendant situated in the State of Texas, as the plaintiff is informed and believes, is wholly inadequate to pay the above mentioned judgment; that the great bulk of the property within the State of Texas belonging to the defendant, subject to the payment of the said judgment, consists of current accounts with merchants and dealers in the State of Texas, of tank cars, of 19 money on hand, of oil that is easily removed, and property of that kind and character, practically the whole of it being personal, movable, property and if carried beyond the limits of this State cannot be pursued by the State of Texas, and the State would have no way of collecting the above mentioned judgment; that under and by virtue of an act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, approved April 11, 1907, the State has a lien upon all of said property to secure the payment of the above mentioned judgment.

Fourth. That under the judgment of ouster rendered in this cause, the defendant has no right to do business in this State and has been convicted of doing business in this State in violation of the law for each and every day since the issuance of its permit seven years ago; that it is necessary to preserve and protect the rights of the State that said business of said defendant should be conducted and carried on, at least temporarily, and be kept a going concern in this State.

Wherefore plaintiff requests the court to appoint a receiver to take charge of all the property and assets of every kind, character and description of the defendant situated within the State of Texas, pending the hearing of this application; that this court grant its most gracious writ of injunction, restraining and prohibiting the defendant, its officers, agents, attorneys and employees, or any of them, from removing from the State of Texas any part of the property or assets of said defendant situated within the State of Texas.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, June 1, 1907.

In Chambers.

The above application for the appointment of a receiver of the property and assets of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, being presented to me, it is hereby set down for hearing on the 8th day of June, 1907, at 10 o'clock A. M., at the Court House in Travis County, Texas and the Clerk will issue a notice to the defendant accordingly. Upon consideration, the application for a temporary injunction pending the hearing of said application is hereby granted, and the Clerk of this court is instructed to issue such temporary injunction under his hand and the seal of court, restraining and prohibiting the defendant, its officers, agents, attorneys and employees, or any of them, from removing beyond the State of Texas any of the property or assets of the defendant until the further orders of this court.

V. L. BROOKS,
Judge 26th Judicial District of Texas.

(Endorsed:) No. 24,551. The State of Texas vs. Waters Pierce Oil Co. Application for a receiver. Filed June 1st 1907. D. J. Pickle, Clerk, By J. A. Belger, Deputy.

And be it further remembered that on Friday, June 7th, 1907, defendant's motion for a new trial was taken up, argued and 21 considered by the court and on said day was overruled, to which action and ruling the defendant in open court excepted, and gave notice of appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District of the State of Texas; and said defendant thereupon, on said June 7th, 1907, tendered and placed in the hands of D. J. Pickle, the Clerk of said Court, an appeal bond with the American Surety Company of New York as its sole surety, which said bond is in words and figures as follows:

"THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Travis:

"Whereas, in a certain cause pending in the District Court of Travis County, Texas, 26th Judicial District, wherein the State of Texas was plaintiff and the Waters Pierce Oil Company was defendant, and numbered 24,551 on the docket of said court, a judgment was on June 1st, 1907, rendered by said court in favor of the plaintiff, the State of Texas, and against the defendant, The Waters Pierce Oil Company, for the sum of One Million, Six Hundred and twenty-three thousand, and nine hundred ($1,623,900.00) Dollars, and for costs of suit, and cancelling the permit of said defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, to do business in the State of Texas; and, whereas, said defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, has appealed from said judgment to the Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas, and desires to suspend the execution of such judgment pending such appeal;

Now, Therefore, know all men by these presents, that we, the said Waters Pierce Oil Company, as principal and —— American Surety Company of New York, as surety, do hereby acknowledge ourselves bound to pay to the State of Texas the sum of Three Million and Two hundred and Seventy-five Thousand ($3,275,000.00) Dollars, conditioned that said Waters Pierce Oil Company shall prosecute its appeal with effect, and in case the judgment of the Supreme Court or the Court of Civil Appeals shall be against it, it shall perform its judgment, sentence, or decree, and pay all such 22 damages as said court may award against it.

AMERICAN SURETY COMPANY OF NEW YORK,
By JAS. E. LUCY, Res. Vice President,
[L. S.] By W. T. DECHARD, Res. Ass't Secretary."

And be it further remembered that on Saturday, June 8th, 1907, at 10:00 o'clock A. M. and in open court the Honorable V. L. Brooks, Judge, announced that the time for consideration of the application for the appointment of a receiver, above copied, had been reached, and the same was then called for consideration, whereupon, the defendant by its attorneys, stated that before considering said application they desired to call the attention of the court to the fact that they had tendered their supersedeas appeal bond, above copied and that they desired to know the action of the Clerk as to whether he would approve or reject said bond, and thereupon, said Clerk, by written motion, requested instructions or advice from the court as to whether said bond was legally sufficient and as to whether he was authorized to approve the same with the said single surety thereon, and thereupon the court stated that before considering said application for a receiver he would consider the Clerk's request for advice, without assuming to have any power to dictate or control his action in approving or rejecting said bond, and after argument by counsel for the State and defendant as to the sufficiency of said bond because of the admitted fact on the part of defendant that said American Surety Company of New York was a bonding Company chartered under the laws of another State and only had as assets within this State the $50,000.00 required to be deposited with the State Treasurer, as required by Article 734 of the Revised Statutes of the State of Texas, and after the said Judge gave advice to the said Clerk and without directing him to approve or reject said bond, the Clerk made known his refusal to accept said bond, and thereupon the defendant, by its counsel, requested a postponement of the further consideration of said application for 23 a receiver for a period of two weeks to allow it a reasonable time to procure other sureties and to give a supersedeas bond in connection with its appeal from the judgment rendered against it, and after full argument by both parties upon said application for postponement and the propriety and authority of the court to appoint a Receiver, the Court announced that he would take the matter under advisement until 10:00 o'clock on Monday morning, June 10th, 1907.

And be it further remembered that on said June 10th, 1907, at the hour of 10:00 o'clock A. M. the court announced its ruling refusing to grant the postponement of the consideration of said application for a receiver and again called the same for consideration and action, and thereupon, defendant, by its counsel, read its answer and response to said application, same being in words and figures as follows:

Now comes the defendant in the above entitled and numbered cause by its attorneys, and excepts to the application filed by the plaintiff herein on June 1st, 1907, for the appointment of a receiver of the property and assets of this defendant, and says that said application is insufficient in law, and shows no sufficient cause for the appointment of such receiver, and of this defendant prays judgment of the Court.

And be it further remembered that after reading the foregoing answer and response, counsel for defendant proceeded to argue its said general exception or demurrer to the said application for the appointment of a receiver, and at the conclusion of such argument when counsel for the State started to argue the same, the Court announced that it was unnecessary for counsel for the State to make any further argument, and the Court thereupon proceeded to announce his conclusions with respect to said application and defendant's objections thereto, and stated that the Court would take judicial notice of the proceedings in the main case and of the 25 rendition of judgment against the defendant for violating the anti-trust laws of the State, as charged against it in plaintiff's said second amended original petition, and that it had been found guilty of violating the said anti-trust laws on each and every day from the 1st day of June, 1900, to the 29th day of April, 1907, and that its permit to do further business in the State had been forfeited and cancelled by reason of said violations, and that defendant had since May 31st, 1900, had been a member of an agreement which had its very existence in Texas, in violation of the Civil and Criminal laws of Texas, and that it had been and still is in possession of certain instrumentalities by means of which it, in violation of the public welfare and interests, intended to continue its violation of the law pending appeal from the judgment of conviction, and that the Court would assume that the defendant would fine its proper supersedeas bond from the said judgment of conviction, but that notwithstanding defendant's right to so file said supersedeas bond within the time provided by law, the Court was of the opinion that the Legislature had provided as a remedy or means of preventing defendant from the continued violation of the law, that a receiver should be appointed to take charge of its property and business and deprive it of the instrumentalities by which it had so violated the law, and would continue to violate the law; and that because of said Statute and of the declared purpose of defendant, speaking through its general counsel, John D. Johnson, in newspaper interviews which had been brought to the attention of the court, in which said Johnson had discussed the effect of the aforesaid judgment of conviction against defendant. and had declared the purpose of defendant to appeal from said judgment of conviction and to continue to carry on its business in the same manner that it had theretofore done, notwithstanding such judgment of conviction; and without any evidence being submitted to the court in connection with said application, the court thereupon announced that it would grant said application and appoint a receiver as therein prayed for, and that the court had made up its mind as to the gentleman so to be appointed receiver, and would invite counsel for the State and for defendant to his room, where he would disclose the name of the gentleman so determined upon, and give to counsel for both sides an opportunity to present any objections which 26 they might have to the gentleman so determined upon, to which action of the court, and before the Judge left the bench and retired to his room for the conference aforesaid, the defendant, by its attorneys, in open court, then and there excepted and gave notice of appeal from the action of the court to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas, and thereupon the court caused an order to be prepared and entered of record evidencing its action in granting the application of the State of Texas for the appointment of a receiver aforesaid, which said order is in words and figures as follows:

"24551.

v.
WATERS PI-RCE OIL COMPANY.

"And now on this the 10th day of June, 1907, at a regular term of this court, there came on to be heard the application of the State of Texas for the appointment of a receiver of the property and assets of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, a corporation, pending the further disposition of this cause, and the court, after duly considering said application, is of the opinion that the prayer should be granted and a receiver appointed to take charge of all of the property and assets of the defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, situated within the State of Texas, or that may hereafter come within the State of Texas, and that such receiver shall immediately take charge of all of said property and assets and hold the same subject to the further orders of this court, and said receiver is hereby directed and instructed to continue and carry on the business of the defendant until such future time as the court may direct, keeping and preserving the property coming into his custody and carrying on the business and supplying oil to the public in the State of Texas; that the temporary injunction heretofore granted, prohibiting defendant from moving any of its property and assets beyond the limits of the State of Texas be, and the same is hereby continued in force until the further orders of this court.

"To all of which action the defendant in open court excepts, and in open court give- notice of appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas."

And be it further remembered that after the proceedings aforesaid had taken place in the manner above recited, the Honorable V. L. Brooks, Judge of said Court, did announce that he 27 had determined upon the selection of Robert J. Eckhardt to be receiver, and was willing to hear any objections that might be urged against his appointment, and, at the request of defendant's counsel, the matter of the final order naming the said Eckhardt as receiver was postponed until June 13th, 1907, and on said last mentioned date the court, did make its order naming said Robert J. Eckhardt as receiver, and caused the same to be entered of record in words and figures as follows:

No. 24551.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
v.
WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

"On this the 10th day of June, A. D. 1907, in this cause an order was made and entered by this court granting the application of the plaintiff, the State of Texas, for the appointment of a receiver herein, and the court at the time of the making of said order naming as receiver Robert J. Eckhardt and time being given both parties to urge any objection they might have to said Eckhardt as such receiver, and no objection having been made to said Eckhardt, the court now on this 13th day of June 1907, confirming said order and in pursuance thereof names and appoints as receiver herein of the property in said order described said Robert J. Eckhardt with the duties and powers therein named and fixes the amount of his bond as such receiver at ($250,000.00) Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars;

"And defendant renews its exceptions to the appointment of a receiver and gives notice of appeal from the order appointing a receiver to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas at Austin."

To which action of the court at the time said order was entered defendant excepted and again gave notice of appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas.

And be it further remembered that thereafter on the 15th day of June, A. D. 1907, the defendant having tendered to the Clerk of this court another supersedèas appeal bond from the main judgment rendered against it on June 1st 1907, with the American Surety Company of New York and John H. Kirby as its sureties thereon, and before the approval of said bond, as hereinafter recited, the court caused the following amendment to the above recited
28 orders of June 10th and June 13th 1907, to be entered, which said order directing said amendment of said order was made over the objections of the defendant, and to the action of the court in so amending said orders defendant then and there excepted and again gave notice of Appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas, which said amendment is in words and figures as follows:

In District Court, Travis County, Texas, June 15th, 1907.

24551.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

And now on this 15th day of June, A. D. 1907, at a regular term of this court, it is considered, ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that the orders of this court made and entered in said cause on the 10th day of June, A. D. 1907, and the 13th day of June, A. D. 1907, be so amended as to hereafter read as follows:

And now on this 10th day of June 1907, at a regular term of this court, there came on to be heard the application of the State of Texas for the appointment of a receiver of the property and assets of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, a corporation, pending the further disposition of this cause, and the court, after duly considering said application, is of the opinion that the prayer should be granted and a receiver appointed to take charge of all the property and assets of the defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, situated within the State of Texas, or that may hereafter come within the State of Texas, and that such receiver shall immediately take charge of all of said property and assets and hold the same subject to the further orders of this court, and said receiver is hereby directed and instructed to continue and carry on the business of the defendant until such future time as the court may direct, keeping and preserving the property coming into his custody and carrying on the business of marketing and supplying oil to the Public in the State of Texas, with the rights, power, and authority to continue the various clerks, servants and agents of every class and grade now in the employ of the defendant or to discharge them and employ others at his discretion and to require such bonds and security to himself as Receiver from any of the present employees as he may think 29 expedient and proper; and to sell the present stock of oil and other products and personal property in the hands of the defendant and which may come into his hands as receiver and to purchase and sell other oil, products and personal property in the regular course of business of the defendant to the same effect as the defendant could or might have done in the continuation of said business so that said business may be kept up to its present condition as near as may be; and the said receiver shall have power, under the control of the court, to bring and defend actions in his own name as receiver, to take charge and keep possession of the property, to insure the same against loss and destruction by fire or otherwise as he may deem proper, to receive rents, collect, compound for, compromise demands, employ one or more attorneys at law, make transfers and generally to do such acts respecting the property as the Court may authorize and all the expenses of said receivership including taxes, insurance premiums, attorney's fees, his own compensation and all expenses of said receivership to be paid as a part of the Court costs of the suit. That the temporary injunction heretofore granted, prohibiting the defendant from removing any of its property and assets beyond the limits of the State of Texas, be, and the same, is hereby continued in force until the further orders of this court;

To all of which action the defendant in open court excepts, and in open court gives notice of appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas.

And on this 13th day of June, A. D. 1907, the Court confirming said order and in pursuance thereof names and appoints as Receiver herein of the property in said order described, Robert J. Eckhardt, who is a resident citizen of the County of Williamson, in the State of Texas, with the duties and powers therein named, and fixes the amount of his bond as such Receiver at ($250,000.00) Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars, to be made payable to the Judge of this court, and his successors in office, for the use of all parties interested in said property and this suit.

And defendant renewed its exceptions to the apointment of a receiver and gives notice of appeal from the order appointing a receiver to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme 30 Judicial District of Texas, at Austin.

And be it further remembered that after the entry of said amended orders aforesaid, the Clerk of this Court, duly approved and filed defendant's said supersedeas appeal bond last above mentioned, and the same is in words and figures as follows:

In the District Court of Travis County, Texas, 26th Judicial District.

No. 24551.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

Know all men by these presents:

That, Whereas, in the above entitled and numbered cause in the District Court of Travis County, State of Texas, twenty-sixth Judicial District, a judgment was rendered in behalf of the plaintiff, the State of Texas, against the defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, in words and figures as follows, towit:

In District Court, Travis County, Texas, June 1st, 1907.

24551.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS PIERCE OIL CO.

And now on this the 20th day of May, 1907, the above cause coming on for trial, both parties appeared by attorneys, and announced ready, and a jury having been demanded, a jury of twelve good and lawful men were duly impaneled and sworn to try the case, and thereafter the case proceeded to trial, when by agreement of all parties on the 24th day of May, 1907, one of the Jurors, Aaron Davis, theretofore selected, was excused on account of sickness, which disabled him from acting as a juror in the cause, and the trial then proceeded before the court and the eleven jurors theretofore duly selected and sworn, and the case continued on trial from day to day, and after all the pleadings, evidence and argument of counsel had been submitted to the jury, and after being duly charged by the court, the jury retired in the custody of the proper officer to consider of their verdict, and ther-after on the 1st day of June, 1907, they returned into open court the following verdict:

AUSTIN, TEXAS, June 1, 1907.

"We the jury find for the plaintiff against the defendant
31 on each of the issues submitted to us for each of the days between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, being 1033 days, and for penalties 1,549,500.00 dollars.

And we find for the plaintiff against the defendant on each of the issues submitted for each of the days between April 1, 1903, and April 29, 1907, being fourteen hundred and eighty-eight days and fix the penalties at seventy-four thousand four hundred dollars.

We further find that the permit of the defendant to do business in the State of Texas should be canceled.

We find for the defendant upon all issues made by the pleadings and not submitted in the charge of the court.

which verdict was by the court received, ordered filed and made a part of the record of this cause.

It is, Therefore, considered, ordered, adjudged and decreed that the plaintiff, the State of Texas, do have and recover of and from the defendant, The Waters Pierce Oil Company, a corporation, the sum of ($1,623,900.00) One Million, Six Hundred and twenty-three thousand nine hundred dollars, together with interest thereon from this date at the rate of six per cent. per annum, together with all costs of suit, for which execution may issue;

It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the permit of the defendant, The Waters Pierce Oil Company, to do business in the State of Texas, be and the same is, hereby canceled and held for naught, and that the said defendant be enjoined and prohibited from doing business in the State of Texas, except interstate business, but all other business it is hereby perpetually enjoined and prohibited from transacting within the State of Texas.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Travis:

I, D. J. Pickle, Clerk of the District Court in and for said County and State, do hereby certify that the within and foregoing is a true and correct copy of the judgment in cause No. 24,551, The State of Texas vs. Waters Pierce Oil Company, as same appears of 32 record in Minute Book 12, page 349 et seq., of the records of this office.

And, whereas, the defendant in said cause duly filed its motion for a new trial, which said motion was by the court overruled and refused by order and judgment entered on the 7th day of June, A. D. 1907, and the said defendant then and there in open court excepted and gave notice of appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District of the State of Texas.

And, whereas, the defendant desires to perfect its said appeal and supersede the judgment aforesaid pending its said appeal;

Now, Therefore, we, the said Waters Pierce Oil Company, defendant aforesaid, and appellant, as principal, and the American Surety Company of New York, a corporation duly qualified and authorized to execute this bond, as surety, together with Jno. H. Kirby, as further surety herein, do hereby each acknowledge ourselves indebted, held and firmly bound to pay to the State of Texas, plaintiff aforesaid and appellee herein, the full sum of Three Million, Two Hundred and seventy-five Thousand ($3,275,000.00) Dollars, conditioned that the said appellant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, shall prosecute its appeal with effect, and in case the judgment of the Supreme Court or the Court of Civil Appeals shall be against it, it shall perform its judgment, sentence or decree, and pay all such damages as said court may award against it.

In witness of all of which the said Waters Pierce Oil Company causes this bond to be executed by T. B. Cochran, its agent and attorney at law and in fact, and the said The American Surety Company of New York, causes this bond to be executed by J. E. Lucy, its Resident Vice President and duly appointed agent and attorney in fact, and the said Jno. H. Kirby, execute- the same in his own proper person, this the 15th day of June, A. D. 1907.

(Endorsed:) No. 24551. The State of Texas vs. Waters Pierce Oil Co. Appeal Bond No. 1. Filed June 15, 1907. D. J. Pickle, Clerk.

Be it further remembered that on June 15th, 1907, the court made and entered its order fixing the amount of bond which defendant was required to give in order to perfect its said appeal from the orders appointing a receiver and supersede the said orders so appointing a receiver at the sum of $100,000.; and thereupon, defendant tendered and placed in the hands of the Court its supersedeas appeal bond in said sum last named, with the American Surety Company of New York and John H. Kirby as its sureties, and the Court having announced its refusal to consider said bond at said time and its purpose to postpone the further consideration thereof until the succeeding Wednesday morning, June 19, 1907, at 10:00 o'clock, defendant at the time of such refusal to consider said bond and the postponement thereof excepted to the action of the Court.

Be it further remembered that on said 19th of June, 1907, at the hour of 10:00 o'clock, the court having announced that it would consider the matter of the approval of the receiver's bond of Robert J. Eckhardt, receiver, which had been tendered to him on the — day of June, A. D. 1907, and would also consider the matter of the approval of defendant's said supersedeas appeal bond so tendered to him on June 15th, 1907, the defendant in open Court objected to the consideration and approval of the receiver's bond before acting upon its appeal bond, which had been first placed with the Court, and for the additional reason that as defendant had duly filed with the Clerk of this Court its said supersedeas appeal bond from the main judgment of June 1st, 1907, the Court was 34 without authority or jurisdiction to make any further orders with respect to said receivership or to approve said receiver's bond, which said objection was then and there overruled and defendant in open court excepted, and thereupon the court proceeded and first entered its order of approval of the said receiver's bond, and, after so approving the same, did enter its order approving defendant's said supersedeas appeal bond so placed with the Court on June 15th, 1907, to which action of the court at the time defendant excepted; and defendant having announced to the court its desire to submit this said last mentioned supersedeas appeal bond to the Clerk for his approval, the court directed the Clerk to first consider the bond of the receiver before approving defendant's said bond, to which action of the Court in so directing the Clerk defendant excepted.

And defendant now tenders this its bill of exceptions to all matters connected with the appointment of a receiver, as hereinbefore recited, and prays that this bill be signed and orders filed as part of the record in this proceeding.

In District Court, Travis County, Texas, June 10th, 1907.

24551.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

And now on this the 10th day of June, 1907, at a regular term of this Court, there came on to be heard the application of the State of Texas for the appointment of a receiver of the property and assets of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, a corporation, pending the further disposition of this cause, and the Court, after duly considering said application, is of the opinion that the prayer should be granted and a receiver appointed to take charge of all of the property and assets of the defendant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, situated within the State of Texas, or that may hereafter come within the State of Texas, and that such receiver shall immediately take charge of all of said property and assets and hold the same subject to the further orders of this Court, and said receiver is hereby directed and instructed to continue and carry on the business of the defendant until such future time as the Court may direct, keeping and preserving the property coming into his custody and carrying 36 on the business of marketing and supplying oil to the public in the State of Texas; that the temporary injunction, heretofore granted, prohibiting the defendant from moving any of its property and assets beyond the limits of the State of Texas, be, and the same is hereby continued in force until the further orders of this Court.

To all of which action the defendant in open Court excepts, and in open Court give- notice of appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas.

On this the 10th day of June, A. D. 1907, in this cause an order was made and entered by this Court granting the application of the plaintiff, the State of Texas, for the appointment of a receiver herein, the Court at the time of the making of said order naming as receiver Robert J. Eckhardt and time being given both parties to urge any objection they might have to to said Eckhardt as such receiver, and no objection having been made to said Eckhardt, the Court now on this 13th day of June, 1907, confirming said order and in pursuance thereof names and appoints as Receiver herein of the property in said order described said Robert J. Eckhardt with the duties and powers therein named and fixes the amount of his bond as such receiver at ($250,000.00) Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars;

And defendant renews its exceptions to the appointment of a receiver and gives notice of appeal from the order appointing a receiver to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas at Austin.

And Whereas, the said defendant, Waters Pierce Oil Company, havin*f* duly excepted to the action of the Court in making said orders and judgments, and given notice of appeal therefrom to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District of the State of Texas, and the said V. L. Brooks, Judge presiding, having fixed the amount of the appeal bond required to be given by said Waters Pierce Oil Company at the sum of One Hundred Thousand Dollars, and said Company desiring to perfect its said appeal and supersede and suspend said orders and judgments as provided by law;

Now, therefore, we, the said Waters Pierce Oil Company, appellant, as principal, and the American Surety Company of New York and Jno. H. Kirby, as sureties, do hereby acknowledge ourselves indebted, held and firmly bound to pay to the State of Texas, appellee the full sum of One Hundred Thousand Dollars, conditioned that the said Waters Pierce Oil Company, appellant, shall prosecute its appeal with effect, and in case the judgment of the Supreme Court or the Court of Civil Appeals shall be against it, it shall perform its judgment, sentence or decree and pay all such damages as said Court may award against it, and further conditioned that the said Waters Pierce Oil Company, appellant, shall, in case judgment is affirmed, pay to the State of Texas, appellee, the value of the rent or hire of all such property embraced in the orders and judgments aforesaid in any suit which may be brought therefor.

In witness of all which the said Waters Pierce Oil Company 39 Assignment of Errors in Receivership Proceeding.

Filed July 10, 1907.

In the Twenty-Sixth Judicial District Court of Travis County, Texas.

No. 24551.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

In the above entitled cause, now comes the defendant, and files the following assignments of error to the different rulings, orders and judgments of the said Court appointing Robert J. Eckhardt receiver of the property of this defendant, to-wit:

I.

The Court erred in overruling defendant's general exception to the motion or application of the State for the appointment of a receiver.

II.

As the judgment recovered by the State of Texas against defendant on June 1st, 1907, was a personal judgment and did not attempt to foreclose the lien claimed upon defendant's property in the State, the Court was without jurisdiction by motion filed in the same cause to appoint a receiver, and erred in considering the same and in appointing the said Eckhardt receiver upon said motion.

III.

The Court erred in overruling defendant's request for a postponement of action upon the said application until defendant should have a reasonable time to file a supersedeas bond in con-
40 nection with its appeal from the main judgment rendered against it on June 1st, 1907.

IV.

The Court erred in making its order granting the application of the State of Texas for the appointment of a receiver of defendant's property by its order entered on June 10th, 1907.

V.

The Court erred in making and appointing Robert J. Eckhardt to be the receiver of defendant's property by its order entered on June 13th, 1907.

VI.

The Court erred in refusing to consider and approve defendant's supersedeas bond in the sum of One Hundred Thousand Dollars ($100,000.00) tendered on June 15th, 1907, and in withholding its approval thereof until after the bond of the said Robert J. Eckhardt as receiver was tendered and approved on June 19th, 1907.

VII.

When defendant's appeal bond was approved and filed on June 15th, 1907, superseding the judgment recovered against it by the State of Texas on June 1st, 1907, in the main cause, the appointment of said Robert J. Eckhardt as receiver, and all orders and proceedings there-fore had in connection with such appointment, were thereby vacated and became null and void, and the said Court erred in not entering a formal order recognizing the legal effect of the said supersedeas bond and vacating said appointment and setting aside all of its said orders, and in further considering said appointment as in force for any purpose.

VIII.

The Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas approved April 11th, 1907, under which the Court acted in appointing the said receiver, is unconstitutional, null and void in so far as it
41 attempts to create a lien upon this defendant's property for acts committed before the said Act took effect, in violation of Sec. 16, Art. 1, of the Constitution of the State of Texas.

IX.

The Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas approved April 11th, 1907, under which the Court acted in appointing the said receiver, is unconstitutional, null and void in that it attempts to create a lien upon this defendant's property for acts committed before said Act took effect, in violation of Section Ten of Article Two of the Constitution of the United States which denies to any State the right to pass an ex post facto law, and the Court erred in considering said Act as the basis of its orders appointing the said receiver.

X.

The said Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, approved April 11th, 1907, under which the Court acted in appointing the said receiver, is unconstitutional, null and void in so far as it authorizes the appointment of a receiver in a suit brought to recover a personal judgment in which no lien upon defendant's property was set up and adjudicated, and the action of the Court in appointing the said receiver in this cause was in violation of Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that it results in depriving defendant of its property without due process of law and in denying to defendant the equal protection of the law.

XI.

The said Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, approved April 11th, 1907, under which the Court acted in appointing the said receiver, is unconstitutional, null and void, in so far as it authorizes the appointment of a receiver in a suit brought against a defendant to recover fines and penalties for offenses committed in violation of the anti-trust laws of the State, as a means of preventing the defendant from the further or continued violation of such laws, and the action of the court in appointing a receiver for defendant's property on that ground and for that purpose, as indicated 42 in the opinion of the Court at the time said appointment was made, was unauthorized in law, and in violation of Section 17 of Article One of the Constitution of the State of Texas.

XII.

The said Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, approved April 11th, 1907, under which the Court acted in appointing the said receiver, is unconstitutional, null and void, in so far as it authorizes the appointment of a receiver in a suit brought against a defendant to recover fines and penalties for offenses committed in violation of the anti-trust laws of the State, as a means of preventing the defendant from the further or continued violation of such laws, and the action of the Court in appointing a receiver for defendant's property on that ground and for that purpose as indicated in the opinion of the Court at the time said appointment was made, was unauthorized in law, and in violation of Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that the result of said action was and is to deprive the defendant of its property without due process of law and to deny to defendant the equal protection of the laws.

XII.

The Court erred in appointing the said receiver without any evidence being introduced before it at the time said appointment was made, to show that defendant did not intend to change its status and methods of doing business so as to conform to the laws of the State of Texas, and without affirmatively showing that defendant could not make use of its property and carry on its business in accordance with law, and in holding that the Court was authorized to so appoint a receiver for defendant's property in the State of Texas and deprive defendant of the instrumentalities by which it had been convicted of violation — the laws of said State, based upon its past conduct and the said judgment of conviction rendered against it on June 1st, 1907.

Wherefore, defendant says that the said action of the Court
43 was unauthorized and in violation of Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and has the effect of depriving defendant of its property without due process of law, and in denying to it the equal protection of the laws.

XIV.

The Court erred in disregarding the supersedeas bond filed by defendant in connection with its appeal from the main judgment recovered against it on June 1st, 1907, and in requiring defendant to file the additional bond in the sum of One Hundred Thousand Dollars to supersede the orders appointing the said receiver and to avoid having to surrender its property to said receiver by reason of said appointment and this action on the part of the Court was without lawful warrant and in violation of section one of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that the effect of such action by the Court was to deprive the defendant of its property without due process of law and to deny to it the equal protection of the law.

Wherefore, and upon each of the foregoing errors committed by the said District Court, the defendant prays the reversal of the action of said Court in appointing the said Robert J. Eckhardt as receiver, and that all orders and proceedings had in connection therewith be vacated and held for naught, and for such other orders as may be necessary to correct the errors committed by the said District Court in the premises.

In the above entitled and numbered cause, now comes the defendant and files the following additional assignments of error to the action of the Court in appointing Robert J. Eckhardt receiver of the property of defendant, to-wit:—

No. 15. The Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, approved April 11th, 1907, being Chapter 87 of the General Laws of the State of Texas, passed by the Thirtieth Legislature at its Regular Session, in so far as it authorizes the appointment of a receiver of appellant's property in this suit or prosecution instituted against appellant prior to the passage of said Act and for offenses alleged to have been committed prior to its passage, is unconstitutional, null and void, in that it violates the Tenth Section of Article One of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no State shall pass a bill of attainder or an ex post facto law.

No. 16. The said Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, approved April 11th, 1907, is unconstitutional, null and void, in so far as it attempts to create a lien upon appellant's property for the alleged violation of the anti-trust laws of said State, in that the lien is not created by the terms of the Act, based alone upon 45 the commission of the offense, but is left to be created by the action of the prosecuting officer in filing suit to recover the prescribed penalties. The Statute therefore does not prescribe a fixed and uniform rule of law, applicable to all persons alike, but is a delegation of the legislative power to officers of the executive department to create the lien, or not to create it, and to arbitrarily discriminate between persons at will, and the appointment of the receiver to take charge of appellant's property under this statute, results in depriving appellant of its property without due process of law, and in denying to it the equal protection of the law, in violation of Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provisions of the Constitution of the United States are here urged and relied upon by appellant as against the validity and application of said Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas to the matters involved in this case, and to the act of the Court in appointing the said receiver thereunder.

WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY
vs.
THE STATE OF TEXAS.

On June 21st, 1907, the State of Texas, a party to the above styled cause, through and by its Attorney General and the County Attorney of Travis County and Robert J. Eckhardt, receiver of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, presented to this Court an application on behalf of the State and the receiver, stating substantially that on the 22nd day of September, 1906, the State instituted in the District Court of Travis County, Texas, a suit against the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, a corporation organized under the laws of Missouri, and exercising and carrying on its business in this State under a permit so to do. The purpose and object of the suit was to recover of the Oil Company penalties and to cancel its permit to do business in the State on account of the violation of certain provisions of the Anti-trust laws of this State. That the case, upon issues joined, came on for the trial on the 20th day of May 1907, and terminated on June 1st, 1907, with a verdict and judgment in favor of the State against the defendant for the sum of $1,623,900, and cancelling the permit of the defendant to carry on and conduct its business within this State. That on the first day of June 1907, after the return of the verdict and the entry of the judgment, the State presented to the judge of the court where the case was pending an application for the appointment of a receiver of the property and assets and business of the defendant corporation within the State of Texas, which application was set down for hearing on the 50 8th day of June, 1907. In that application the State also requested an injunction restraining the defendant from removing any of its property from the limits of the State of Texas; and also stating in the application that the State, by virtue of a recent act of the Legislature, had a lien upon all of the properties and assets of the defendant Company for the satisfaction of the judgment that the court had rendered.

At the same time the court, upon application therefor, issued a temporary restraining order to the effect prohibiting the defendant, its agents, officers and attorneys, from removing beyond the State any of the assets of the defendant corporation, which order, by subsequent decree, was kept alive and was not superseded by the appeal. Upon this application for receiver and injunction, etc. notice was issued and served on the defendant on the first day of June, 1907. The matter coming on for hearing on the 8th day of June, the court passed the same until the 10th day of June, when upon that day he announced that he would appoint a receiver, as requested, but would for forty-eight hours defer naming the person to be so appointed, in order to give the parties through their respective counsel opportunity to make any objections they so desired to Robert J. Eckhardt, otherwise, at the end of that time, Eckhardt would be appointed. Thereafter, on the 13th day of June, 1907, no objections being made, the court entered an order confirming the order of June 10th, providing for the appointment of a receiver, and named and appointed Eckhardt receiver of all of the property and assets of the defendant Waters-Pierce Oil Company within this State, or that may thereafter come within the State; and further provided that the temporary injunction previously granted should continue in force. On June 15th, the court, by amended order, specifically and more largely defined the duties of the receiver, but in no wise affected his power and authority to take possession of the property of the defendant Company. The amended order is as follows:

"In District Court, Travis County, Texas, June 15th, 1907.

24551.

THE STATE OF TEXAS
vs.
WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY.

51 "And now on this 15th day of June, A. D. 1907 at a regular term of this Court,

"It is considered, ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that the orders of this court made and entered in said cause on the 10th day of June, A. D. 1907, and the 13th day of June, A. D. 1907, be so amended as to hereafter read as follows:

"And now on this 10th day of June, 1907, at a regular term of this Court there came on to be heard the application of the State of Texas for the appointment of a receiver of the property and assets of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, a corporation, pending the further disposition of this cause, and the court, after duly considering said application, is of the opinion that the prayer should be granted and a receiver appointed to take charge of all the property and assets of the defendant, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, situated within the State of Texas, or that may hereafter come within the State of Texas, and that such receiver shall immediately take charge of all of said property and assets and hold the same subject to the further orders of this court, and said receiver is hereby directed and instructed to continue and carry on the business of the defendant until such future time as the court may direct, keeping and preserving the property coming into his custody and carrying on the business of marketing and supplying oil to the public in the State of Texas, with the right, power and authority to continue the various clerks, servants and agents of every class and grade now in the employ of the defendant or to discharge them and employ others at his discretion and to require such bonds and security to himself as receiver from any of the present employés, or those hereafter engaged by him, as he may think expedient and proper, and to sell the present stock of oil and other products and personal property in the hands of the defendant and which may come into his hands as receiver, and to purchase and sell other oil, products and personal property in the regular course of business of the defendant to the same effect as the defendant could or might have done in the continuation of said business, so that said business may be kept up to its present condition as near as may be; and the said receiver
52 shall have power under control of the court, to bring and defend actions in his own name as receiver, to take charge and keep possession of the property, to insure the same against loss and destruction by fire or otherwise, as he may deem proper, to receive rents, collect, compound for, compromise demands, employ one or more attorneys at law, make transfers and generally to do such acts respecting the property as the court may authorize and all the expenses of said receivership, including taxes, insurance premiums, attorney's fees, his own compensation and all expenses of said receivership to be paid as a part of the court costs of the suit;

"That the temporary injunction heretofore granted, prohibiting the defendant from moving any of its property and assets beyond the limits of the State of Texas, be, and the same is, hereby continued in force until the further orders of this court.

"To all of which action the defendant in open court excepts, and in open court gives notice of appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas;

"And on this the 13th day of June, A. D. 1907, the court confirming said order and in pursuance thereof names and appoints as receiver herein of the property in said order described Robert J. Eckhardt, who is a resident citizen of the County of Williamson, in the State of Texas, with the duties and powers therein named, and fixes the amount of his bond as such receivership at ($250,000) Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars, to be made payable to the Judge of this Court and his successors in office, for the use of all parties interested in said property and this suit.

"And defendant renewed its exceptions to the appointment of a receiver and gives notice of appeal from the order appointing a receiver to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas, at Austin."

The bond of the receiver was fixed at $250,000, and on the 19th day of June 1907, at 10 o'clock A. M., the bond, with proper sureties, was approved and filed and the said Eckhardt at the same time accepted and qualified as receiver.

53 The court in said cause on the 15th day of June, 1907, made and entered an order fixing the sum of $100,000 as the amount of bond which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was required to give in order to perfect an appeal from the order appointing a receiver. On the 19th day of June, 1907, at 10 o'clock A. M., the Waters-Pierce Oil Company perfected its appeal from the order appointing a receiver under a bond approved by the court.

On the 15th day of June, 1907, a motion for a new trial previously filed by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, was by the court overruled; and in open court notice of appeal was given to the Court of Civil Appeals, which notice was entered in the minutes of the court. Thereupon, in the main case, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, defendant, executed a supersedeas appeal bond from the judgment for penalties and cancellation of permit, which bond was in due form and was properly approved by the clerk of the court.

That on the 19th day of June, 1907, after all of the above mentioned proceedings were had, there was filed in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas, on behalf of one Bradley W. Palmer, who claims to be a stockholder in the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, a bill of complaint against the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, with the request for the appointment of a receiver of all the property and assets of the defendant Company situated within the State of Texas. That in response to the prayer of the bill, the Hon. David Bryant, Judge of the Circuit Court of the Eastern District of Texas, appointed one C. B. Dorchester receiver of all of the property and assets of the Company situated within the State. The petition proceeds to state that Dorchester, as receiver, will dispose of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, thereby depriving the State Court of its authority under the receivership to administer same. The application concludes with a prayer for extensive relief against the receiver appointed by the Judge of the United States Circuit Court, and for all orders and decrees that may be necessary and proper to be entered in protecting this court in the jurisdiction it had acquired over the property 54 by virtue of the appeal from the orders and decrees and judgments of the trial court.

The application when presented, was set for hearing by this Court for Monday, June 24th, 1907; and, under instructions of the Court, notices were caused to be issued to the receiver appointed by the Federal Court and attorneys for the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, of the time and place when the application would be considered. On the day appointed the State and the Waters-Pierce Oil Company appeared; and from statements and arguments in open court then made, and from affidavits and records then presented, the facts substantially alleged in the application of the State were found to be true. And in addition thereto, the fact was established that Dorchester, as receiver, had qualified, and that he was in actual possession of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company situated within the State, and that the receiver appointed by the State was not, and had never been, in possession of any of the property of the defendant Company; that the order of the United States Court was very comprehensive, authorizing the receiver to take possession of all the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company within this State, and to carry on and conduct its business and sell its property. The receivership in that court is, like that of the State court, merely confined to the business and property within this State; and there is nothing in the decree of the United States Circuit Court recognizing the right of the State, as fixed by the judgment and decree on appeal in this Court. Nor does it appear that the receivership is merely temporary and for the purpose of protecting the property of the defendant during the pendency of the appeal, but that decree is so comprehensive that final action under it may go to the extent of the final and complete disposition and diversion of all the property and assets of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company within this State.

There is a rule, not only one of comity, but by force of judicial decisions of the highest Court in the land has become one of jurisdiction, a rule so universally recognized that no court will question it, and it may be stated to be, that when the power of a court of jurisdiction is first invoked to seize and administer property, its jurisdiction is exclusive, and no other court of concurrent jurisdiction can interfere to materially disturb or hinder the former in the 55 exercise of its authority and jurisdiction over the res.

In Farmers Loan & Trust Company vs. Lake Street Elevated Ry. Co. 178 U. S., 59 44 L. Ed. 671, it is said: "The possession of the res vests the court which has first acquired jurisdiction with the power to hear and determine all controversies relating thereto; and, for the time being, disables other courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction from exercising like power. This rule is essential to the orderly administration of justice, and to prevent unseemly conflicts between courts whose jurisdictions embraces the same subjects and persons. Nor is this rule restricted in its application to cases where property has been actually seized under judicial process before a second suit is instituted in another court, but it often applies as well where suits are brought to enforce liens against specific property, to marshal assets, to administer trusts or liquidate insolvent estates, and in suits of a similar nature where, in the progress of the litigation, the court may be compelled to assume the possession and control of the property to be affected. The rule has been declared to be of especial importance in its application to federal and state courts. Peck vs. Genness, 7 How. 612, 12 L. Ed. 841; Freeman vs. Howe, 24 How. 450, 16 L. Ed. 749; Moran vs. Sturges, 154 U. S. 256, 38 L. Ed. 981; Central Nat'l Bank vs. Stevens, 169 U. S. 432, 42, L. Ed. 807; Harkrader vs. Wadley, 172 U. S. 148, 43 L. Ed. 399."

Chief Justice Fuller, in Ex parte Tyler, 149 U. S. 187, 37 L. Ed. 696, said: "In Covell vs. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, where the question arose as to the replevin by process from a state court of property held by a United States Marshal, which this Court held could not be permitted, Mr. Justice Matthews delivering the opinion said: 'The forbearance of courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction administered under a single system, exercise towards each other, whereby conflicts are avoided, by avoiding interference with the process of each other, is a principle of comity, with perhaps no higher sanction than the utility which comes from concord; but between state courts and those of the United States, it is something more. It is a principle of right and of law, and, therefore, of necessity. It leaves 56 nothing to discretion or mere convenience. These courts do not belong to the same system, so far as their jurisdiction is concurrent; and although they co-exist in the same space, they are independent and have no common superior. They exercise jurisdiction, it is true, within the same territory, but not in the same plane; and when one takes into its jurisdiction a specific thing, that res is as much withdrawn from the judicial power of the other, as if it had been carried physically into a different territorial sovereignty. To attempt to seize it by a foreign process is futile and void.'

"This principle is applicable here, for whether the sheriff were armed with a writ from a state court or with a distress warrant from a county treasurer, this property was as much withdrawn from his reach as if it were beyond the territorial limits of the State."

This principle has often been recognized and applied when jurisdiction has been exercised in appointment of receivers, which is illustrated in many of the cases to be hereafter cited. Whether this principle shall be applied in affording the complainants in this instance any relief, three matters must first be determined:

1. What was the nature and character of the controversy in the trial court? Was the procedure and relief merely in personam or in rem, or partly so; and if the latter, at what stage of the proceeding did jurisdiction attach?

2. If it was a proceeding wholly or quasi in rem, did this Court retain jurisdiction when the appeals were prosecuted under supersedeas bonds?

3. If an affirmative answer is given to the second question, does the action of the Circuit Court of the Eastern District, in appointing a receiver and taking possession of the property, materially interfere with the exercise of jurisdiction by this Court, or does its acts come within a recognized exception to the general rule?

Before determining these questions we desire to say that, from what was said in argument in submitting this controversy, and from statements made by counsel who represented the complainant in the Circuit Court, the learned Judge of that court was, in appointing a receiver, influenced to some extent by the opinion in Peoples Cemetery Assn. vs. Oakland Cemetry Company, 60

57 S. W., 679, and like cases. We are also impressed with the idea that the learned Judge in making the appointment did not have before him the act of the Legislature which took effect April 11th, 1907. The case relied on was doubtless correctly decided upon the fact peculiar to it, but is not, in our opinion, authority for the proposition that this Court if jurisdiction was obtained by appeal, lost its power over the res upon execution of a supersedeas bond. The decision is merely to the effect that the appeal by supersedeas suspends the enforcement of the judgment of the trial court. There is in the opinion an expression that the supersedeas is security for the judgment. This, in one sense, is correct; but it cannot be held to mean that if there is a res in controversy which has been brought within the jurisdiction of the court when the appeal was perfected, that the supersedeas bond deprived the court of its power and jurisdiction over the res and to finally dispose of the same, and to protect it by the exercise of its jurisdictional authority during the time the controversy is pending. No one denies the fact that a supersedeas appeal suspends the enforcement of the judgment of the trial court; but when we reach the broad question of the jurisdiction over the thing involved in the controversy, the authorities which we will cite in disposing of the questions suggested, are presuasive to the effect that it was never intended that the supersedeas appeal should deprive the appellate court of jurisdiction of the property in controversy, which, in whole or in part, was the subject of litigation.

In disposing of the first question the inquiry is: What was the nature and purpose of the controversy in the State court? A proper answer depends largely upon the purpose and effect of the act of the Legislature of April 11th, 1907, which, as before said, went into operation from its passage. The provisions of that act which relate to the subject under consideration, are as follows:

In Section 1 it is provided: "Whenever any corporation created under the laws of this State, or any foreign corporation authorized to do business in this State, shall violate any law of this State, including any law against trusts, monopolies and conspiracies 58 or combinations or contracts in restraint of trade, for the violation of which fines or penalties or forfeitures are provided, all property of such corporation within this State at the time of such violation or which may thereafter come within this State, shall, by reason of such violation, become liable for such fines or penalties and for all costs of suit and of collection, and the State of Texas shall have a lien on all such property from the date that suit shall be instituted by the Attorney General or district or county attorney acting under his direction in any court of competent jurisdiction within this State for the purpose of forfeiting the charter or cancelling the permit of such corporation, or for such fines or penalties. The institution of such suit for such fine, penalties or forfeiture shall constitute notice of such lien. Where any such law has heretofore been violated, or shall be violated before the taking effect of this act, and a cause of action exists for such fine, penalties or forfeiture, or shall come into existence before the taking effect of this act, and suit shall be filed in such case, the State shall have a lien to secure the payment of such fine, penalties and costs from the time this act shall take effect on all property of such corporation within this State or which shall thereafter come or be brought within the State."

Section 2 is as follows: "Any action or cause of action for any fine, forfeiture or penalty that the State of Texas has or may have against any corporation chartered under the laws of this or any other state, territory or Nation, shall not abate or become abated by reason of the dissolution of such corporation, whether voluntary or otherwise, or by the forfeiture of its charter. Whenever a corporation against which the State has heretofore instituted suit or shall hereafter institute suit, for forfeiture of its charter, or cancellaion of its permit, or for fines or penalties under any law of this State, shall dissolve in this or any other state, or shall have a judgment rendered against it in this or any other state for the forfeiture of its charter, the court in this state in which suit is pending shall appoint a receiver for the property and business of such corporation within this State or that may come or be brought within this State during such receivership, or the court may, in any case wherein the State is suing any such corporation for the forfeiture of its charter 59 or of its permit to do business in this State, or for fines or penalties, appoint a receiver for such corporation, whenever the interests of the State may seem to require such action. If such dissolution shall take place or judgment of forfeiture be rendered against such corporation before this act takes effect, the court shall, upon the taking effect of this act, appoint a receiver for the property and business of such corporation in this State; and the State shall have the right to the writs of attachment, garnishment, sequestration or injunction, without bond, to aid in the enforcement of its rights created by this act; and all property that may come into the possession of any receiver appointed under the provisions of this act, not otherwise exempt by law, shall be subject to the lien herein created, and for the payment of any such fine or penalty."

Section 3 is as follows: "The Attorney General, or any district or county attorney acting under his direction, may bring suits in the name of the State of Texas for the foreclosure of such lien in the district court of any county in the State of Texas, and in case the suit for foreclosure should be brought against any corporation which has dissolved or had a judgment for the forfeiture of its charter or the cancellation of its permit rendered against it, pending any suit by the State of Texas against such corporation for the forfeiture of its charter or cancellation of its permit or for penalties or fines, service may be had upon any person within this State who acted and was acting as agent of any such corporation in this State at the time of such dissolution or forfeiture of charter or cancellation of permits."

The validity of this act in any of its terms was not questioned at the submission of this controversy; and we know of no good reason why its main features, which we propose to discuss, could be objected to on constitutional grounds. But, however, that question is not before us, and for the purposes of the disposition of this application, we must treat the act in all respects as valid.

It is apparent the trial court had before it the act in question, and that it largely governed that court in granting the injunction and entering the order appointing a receiver. Reasonable minds can hardly differ as to the purpose, scope and effect of this act. One of its principal purposes is to subject the property of the cor-60 poration to the jurisdiction of the court upon judgment for penalties and decree of forfeiture of permit, in order that an ultimate benefit would result to the State from the judgment rendered; and that, in keeping with the policy of the statute that condemned in the interest of the public the illegal business, the State could, upon dissolution of the franchise to do business, by control of the property and the business, administer the same in the interest of all concerned, and thereby could effectually check a further pursuit of the illegal business by the corporation adjudged guilty. A proceeding having for its purpose these objects, is clearly one in rem, and if the terms of the statute are invoked to accomplish all the purposes authorized, a seizure of the property is absolutely essential, and the way opened by the statute to accomplish this is through a receiver, and the court having so ordered and decreed the appointment of one, there was drawn to the custody of the court all of the property of the corporation, and for all of the purposes enumerated, as stated in the order. For the efficient enforcement of the terms of the statute, in addition to the lien created by it it also provided for a judicial possession and seizure of the property; and when the court, by virtue of this law, laid its hands upon it, its jurisdiction completely attached, not only to the person of the defendant, but to the thing that the law made liable for the consequences of the illegal acts denounced by the statute upon which the suit is based.

When did the property become in custodia legis, and when did the jurisdiction of the trial court attach? For the purpose of this controversy we need not discuss the conflict of decisions which on the one hand hold that the jurisdiction is complete from the filing of the bill, and upon the other that it does not attach until service of subpœna, for here in this instance it is clear that the defendant corporation was in court properly served and appeared in the receivership proceeding. When service is had or there is the equivalent by appearance, if there could be any doubt as to which of the two lines of decisions should prevail, the weight of reason and authority is clear to the effect that the jurisdiction of the court will, under the doctrine of relation, after order made commence 61 from the time of the filing of the bill for appointment, although no possession has been taken by the receiver of the property sought to be administered by the court. This principle is well settled. "The commencement of a suit, the object of which is to have certain property sequestered and administered for the benefit of all having an interest therein, and the possession and control of which are necessary to grant the full relief prayed for, constitutes an equitable levy; and, pending the suit, such property is in gremio legis, and the court whose jurisdiction is first invoked, whether state or federal, has the exclusive rights to seize and administer the property over another court of concurrent jurisdiction in which a subsequent suit is commenced, though a receiver be first appointed therein and actually takes possession of the property." Alderson Receivers 24.

In Illinois Steel Co. vs. Putnam, 60 Fed. Rep. 515, in the Circuit Court of Appeals presided over by the circuit judge of the district, in reaffirming the doctrine of Adams vs. Mercantile Trust Company, 66 Fed. Rep. 621, a decision also participated in by Judges Pardee and McCormick, the court said "Where a bill in equity brings under the direct control of the court all the property and estate of the defendants or of certain named defendants, or certain designated property of all or either of the defendants, to be administered for the benefit of all entitled to share in the fruits of litigation, and the possession and control of the property are necessary to the exercise of the jurisdiction of the court, the filing of the bill and the service of the process is an equitable levy on the property; and, pending the proceeding, such property may properly be held to be in gremio legis. The actual seizure of the property is not necessary to produce this effect where possession of the property is necessary to granting of the relief sought. In such cases the commencement of the suit is sufficient to give the court whose jurisdiction is invoked the exclusive right to control the property."

It is said by the court in Dillon vs. The Oregon Short Line Ry., 66 Fed. Rep., 1622, that this rule is founded not only on comity, mere courtesy, but on utility and principles of sound policy. There are many authorities that announce substantially the same rule, among which may be mentioned Thompson vs. Holliday, 15 Ore. 34, 14 Pac. Rep. 725; Marian vs. Ross, 122 Mo. 435, 25 S. W.,
62 942; Judd vs. Bankers and and Merchants Tel. Co., 31 Fed. Rep. 182; Union Trust Co. vs. Rock Island Ry. 6 Biss., 197, and another like case in the same book on page 286; May vs. Printup, 59 Ga. 129; People vs. Central Bank, 53 Bar. 412; In re Hall & Stillson, 69 Fed. Rep., 425; Reisner vs. the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Ry., 89 Tex., 659; Northwestern Iron Co. vs. Lehigh Coal Co. 92 Wis. 487, and Texas Trunk Ry. vs. Lewis. 81 Tex., 1. The two Texas cases cited are instructive upon this subject, and fully support the text as quoted.

In Reisner vs. Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Railway Co., supra, it is said in speaking of the appointment of a receiver: "This action of the judge was sufficient, if followed up in due time by the appointment of a receiver, to fix the jurisdiction of that court upon all of the property of defendant in that suit as to liens thereafter attempted to be acquired through the process of other courts. Under such circumstances the appointment, when made, would relate back to the filing of the bill."

Hence in this case, from the orders reviewed in the light of these authorities, it is clear that the State court had acquired complete jurisdiction of the res, which it fully retained until the appeal to this court was perfected; and during the existence of its authority, under the doctrine stated, no court had the power to disturb its jurisdiction or invade its limits; and here at this point it is proper to consider the second question.

In Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Ry. vs. F. W. & N. O. Ry. 68 Tex., 103, it is said: "When an appeal from a final judgment of the district court is duly perfected, the jurisdiction over the case ceases in that court upon its adjournment for the term and attaches to the Supreme Court. An injunction existing in the lower court at the time of appeal may be conceded to become the injunction of the court to which the appeal is taken. Teas vs. McLaughlin, 6 Grat., 609, Ry. Co. 105 Pa. St., 13; Yoeman vs. Leasley, 36 Ohio St., 416; Slaughter House Cases, 10 Wall 292."

In San Antonio Street Ry. vs. State, 38 S. W., 95, it appears a mandamus was issued by the trial court requiring the Street
63 Railway Company to operate a part of its road. There was an appeal by the Street Railway Co., under a supersedeas bond from this decree. During the pendency of the appeal it was made known to the Court of Civil Appeals where the case was pending, that the Railway Company was removing the rails and destroying the track. Thereupon that court issued an injunction restraining a further destruction of the track, etc. In the opinion delivered, in the exercise of its jurisdiction by injunction, and in holding the officers of the Company guilty of contempt, it was said: "The appeal from the trial court removed the case from that court and placed it with the parties, as well as the subject matter of litigation, wholly within the jurisdiction of this tribunal; but the judgment of the district court is not affected by the appeal further than proceedings to enforce it are stayed, a supersedeas bond having been filed."

The court in the case of Churchhill vs. Martin, 65 Tex., 368, in speaking of its jurisdiction, says: "That the execution of a judgment awarding a p-remptory writ of mandamus may be suspended by a proper appeal bond, is not an open question in this court. Griffin vs. Wakelee, 42 Tex., 513. After the approval of such a bond the district court, during the term, still has jurisdiction to modify or set aside the judgment appealed from (Blum vs. Wettermark, 58 Tex., 125, Garza vs. Baker, 58 Tex., 487), but not to enforce such judgment. When the bond has been filed and approved the complaining party has done substantially all required of him to give this court jurisdiction of the case; and this court may then, under the Constitution to protect and enforce its jurisdiction, issue writs of injunction, etc."

In Wells vs. Littlefield, 62 Tex., 30, the Supreme Court, in speaking of its jurisdiction, says: "So soon as the jurisdiction attaches under an appeal or writ of error, this Court has full control of the cause, and can make such orders concerning it as may be necessary to preserve the rights of the parties and enforce its mandates. This jurisdiction continues until the case as made by the appeal or writ of error is fully determined by this Court, and its judgment is completely executed by the court below. If the judgment below is affirmed, or reversed and rendered or reformed, this Court 64 can see that the party in whose favor its decision has been given has the benefit of all proceedings below necessary to enforce its judgment."

Of course, it is needless to say that what is said in these cases with reference to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under the old system is applicable to the jurisdiction of the Courts of Civil Appeals under the present system. It would be idle to engage in argument to demonstrate this proposition.

When an appeal is perfected the jurisdiction of the appellate court attaches, not partially or imperfectly, but to the entire controversy that is involved in the proceeding on appeal. The supersedeas bond does not affect the jurisdiction of the court over the subject of controversy; it merely suspends the enforcement or execution of the judgment below. The purpose of the law is to keep alive the jurisdiction over the subject matter, and this upon appeal is a mere transfer from one tribunal to another; and can it be reasonably contended that when it reaches the tribunal in which a bond is required of the party appealing that he will abide by the judgment, sentence or decree of the court, that all jurisdiction of the subject matter ceases, and that the court is limited in its authority only to what liability may be established against the obligors in the bond. Of course, such a proposition is absurd; for in many cases the subject of litigation, the res, would, by reason of this process of evolution, be finally converted when the appellate court reached its decision into practically a proceeding in personam. If there is a res in controversy it remains so to the end; and it was never intended that a supersedeas bond would destroy the power of the court to determine the rights of the litigants to the thing in controversy and enter such a decree as may be proper to its disposition. The State, by reason of the appeal bond, lost no remedy it invoked in the trial court and for which a judgment or decree went in its favor; and when the case reached here it fell into our jurisdiction with all of the authority of this Court extended over all of its parts, which jurisdiction was as full and complete as that possessed by the trial court before appeal; and if that court had such jurisdiction of the res before appeal that no tribunal of co-ordinate jurisdiction could disturb it, for a like reason there should be no invasion of the jurisdiction of this Court.

65 In disposing of the third question it is sufficient to say that it is hardly possible to make a decree broader than that of the Circuit Court. It requires the receiver to take possession of the property of the Oil Company, and to administer and dispose of it as he sees proper. It would be improbable that the State would reap much benefit from its judgment if the receiver appointed by the Circuit Court would exercise all of the powers and authority conferred upon him by the decree. Hence it is clear that the exercise of jurisdiction by that Court will materially affect the interests of the State and the exercise of jurisdiction by this Court. An examination of the authorities illustrating the question that a second receivership will be allowed by another court, in certain instances, affords no case that will justify the assumption of jurisdiction by the Circuit Court of the Eastern District in taking possession of the property in controversy. The decree of each court appointing a receiver is as broad as the other. Under each the same purposes can be accomplished, and the same protection and rights accorded; and we see no peculiar circumstances existing which would justify the interference by the Circuit Court on the ground that the proceedings as to the receivership in that court is different from the one pending in this court; nor can that decree be construed as a mere temporary expedient looking to the preservation and protection of the property during the time the case in this Court is pending on appeal.

Complainant's prayer is for very enlarged orders, going to the extent of asking this Court to appoint a receiver to recover and take possession of the property and mandatory injunction against the receiver Chester B. Dorchester to forthwith cease acting as receiver and to turn over and deliver to the receiver to be appointed by this Court control and management of all of the property of the defendant Company, and an injunction enjoining and restraining the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and its agents and representatives from selling and disposing of all or any of the property, and from removing the same out of the State of Texas pending the final disposition of this appeal. There is also a request for an order 66 authorizing the receiver so appointed by this Court, either alone or in conjunction with the State of Texas, to take all necessary and proper steps, and to file and prosecute in said receivership proceedings in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas and elsewhere, any and all suits, pleas and applications as he and the attorneys for the State may consider proper and expedient to procure the surrender of all of the property from Chester B. Dorchester, or other receiver that may be appointed to act with him or as his successor.

There are only two members of this court present, the third being unavoidably absent on account of sickness, therefore, the Court has been unable to agree upon the questions whether the plaintiff is or is not entitled to all of the relief asked; and if we see proper to do so, each member of the Court may, in separate opinions or orally, state his views on the questions of difference. But, however, we have agreed that while the receiver Eckhardt appointed by the State court is, by virtue of the supersedeas bond, unable to take possession of the property, he is so far subject to the jurisdiction of this Court, by virtue of his qualification as receiver, as would permit us to request and direct him, in conjunction with the plaintiff, the State of Texas and its attorneys, to appear before the Hon. Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas, and there by suit, pleas and applications urge and insist upon the rights of the State and the jurisdiction of this Court in and to and over the property in controversy, and to ask for such orders, decrees and judgments as they may deem necessary and proper, and to appeal and perfect such appeals and writs of error as they may deem proper and necessary.

In Shields vs. Coleman, 157 U. S. 153, 39 L. Ed. 662, where there was a clash of jurisdiction between the state and circuit courts, the course here suggested was the one that was pursued in the case cited. In other words, it appears that the state receiver appeared before the Circuit Court of the United States when he was deprived of possession of the property by order of that Court, and filed his motion setting up the facts entitling him to possession, which was passed upon by the Circuit Court and the relief prayed for was denied.

67 There was an appeal from that decree and its merits are considered in an opinion by Judge Brewer, where final relief was by the Supreme Court of the United States accorded the state receiver in accordance with the terms of his prayer.

We feel that if the distinguished Judge who presides over the Circuit Court and who granted the receivership, after full consideration concludes that our views as expressed in the opinion handed down are correct, that he will readily and promptly grant such relief as the State and the receiver appointed by the State court are entitled to.

THE STATE OF TEXAS.

The questions of remedy upon which the two members of this Court differ are, first, whether this Court has the power to issue writ of injunction or other process in any wise disturbing the possession and control of the Circuit Court of the Eastern District and its receiver over the property in controversy; second, whether the act of the Legislature of April 11th, 1907 confers upon this Court original jurisdiction to appoint a receiver, or whether this Court would have jurisdiction, independent of this statute, to appoint a receiver during the pendency of the appeal.

68 In my opinion the power of this Court in neither of the instances stated exists. I am not going into any extended discussion of these questions, but will state, in a general way, my reasons why we are lacking in jurisdiction. It is clear to my mind whether the Circuit Court has possession of the property rightfully or wrongfully is not a question to be considered in determining whether or not process from this Court, one of co-ordinate jurisdiction, will issue to restrain it and its agents in the control and possession of the property. There have been possibly a few instances in which the court that first acquired jurisdiction has undertaken to run its process against a court of co-ordinate authority, such possibly, as the cases of Home Insurance Co. vs. Howell, 24 N. J. Eq., 238 and Ackerly vs. Vilas, 15 Wis., 401, but the weight of authority and in my opinion, the reason upon which it is based, precludes the exercise of such jurisdiction. The principle is correctly stated in Central National Bank vs. Stevens, 169 U. S., 458, 42 L. Ed. 817, which voices the great volume of decisions upon this question, "that the state courts are exempt from all interference by the Federal tribunals, but they are destitute of all power to restrain either the process or proceedings in the national courts. Circuit courts and state courts act separately and independently of each other, and in their respective spheres of action the process issued by the one is as far beyond the reach of the other as if the line of division between them was traced by landmarks and monuments visible to the eye." When it is conceded that the jurisdiction of the court that first attaches is exclusive it may be that an anomoly results when jurisdiction is denied to assert its authority against the wrongful invasion by some other tribunal; but in many of the cases that may be cited upon this question, the reasons are fully explained, and it would be a mere repetition upon our part to undertake to give them, why courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction will not interfere in the administration of jurisdiction by each other. Now it is a well settled principle that when property is brought in possession of the court under receivership proceedings, that the receiver is merely an arm 69 and agent of the court, and that the property is in the actual possession and control of the court merely through the medium of a receiver. If we would undertake to issue a restraining process or process of any other nature that undertook to interfere with the exercise of authority over the property by the receiver, it would, in its legal effect, operate against the possession and control of the court, and in my opinion this cannot be done.

The next question presents one of more difficulty, and I wish to say, in this connection, that while I have given the subject such consideration as the other business pending before this court and the short time remaining of our session would permit, I have reached a conclusion which may possibly hereafter be changed; but as I now at present view the question, the statute invoked does not in my opinion confer original jurisdiction upon this Court to appoint a receiver. The expression, "the court in this state in which the suit is pending," relates in my opinion to the court in which the suit is instituted. Time will not permit me to extensively review this statute, nor to give the reasons why in my opinion it was not the intention of the Legislature to confer original jurisdiction upon the courts of civil appeals to appoint receivers. It may be claimed that the provisions of the Constitution and the statutes generally that define our jurisdiction authorize us to appoint a receiver when it may become necessary to enforce the jurisdiction of this Court. I am of the opinion that such a construction would be unwarranted. I am not denying the fact that the Legislature may, under the Constitution, confer original jurisdiction upon the Court of Civil Appeals to appoint a receiver, but in my opinion they have not done so.

The authority of this Court is also invoked to restrain the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. from removing from the limits of this State its property or from disposing of the same. The application of the State presents no case that would justify this interference. If the Circuit Court should see fit to accede to the views of this Court concerning its jurisdiction and discharge its receiver and release the property, the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company 70 would under the supersedeas appeal be entitled to possession during the pendency of the appeal in this court, such property however subject to the exercise of the jurisdiction of this court if it should be made to appear that the defendant was attempting to disobey the injunction of the trial court or to destroy the thing in its possession, which constituted the subject matter within the jurisdiction of this Court. But, as said before, no such case has been made by the State. It is time enough to rule upon those questions when we are confronted with a state of facts that calls for their judicial consideration.

No. 4179.

THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL CO.
vs.
THE STATE OF TEXAS.

Concurring with Chief Justice Fisher in the views so well expressed and sustained on the paramount question in this case, the writer deems it proper to reduce to writing his views upon the questions upon which we are unable to agree. Upon these questions I am of the opinion that this Court has the power to appoint a receiver, and that it should do so, in view of the facts stated in the verified motion and not in any wise controverted. I am also of the opinion that this Court has the power to and should issue a writ of injunction, or some other appropriate writ, against Mr. Dorchester, requiring him to surrender the property of the defendant, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, to the receiver appointed by this Court.

71 1. As to the first question, in the absence of statutory authority I am not prepared to hold that the appellate courts of this state do not possess the inherent power to appoint receivers whenever such action may be necessary to a proper disposition of the litigation upon final appeal. That valuable compendium, the American & English Ency. of Law, in volume 8, page 28, states the rule upon that subject in the following language: "Every regularly constituted court has inherent power to do all things that are reasonably necessary for the administration of justice within the scope of its jurisdiction, and to prevent any abuse of its process." And the Supreme Court of the United States in Pacific Ry. Co. vs. Mo. Pac. Ry. Co. 95 U. S. 23, which was pending in that Court on appeal, considered an application presented for the first time in that Court for the appointment of a receiver. The application was not dismissed nor refused upon the ground that the Court was without jurisdiction to appoint a receiver; and the Court, speaking through Chief Justice Waite, said: "Without undertaking to decide whether a case may not arise in which we would exercise the power of appointing a receiver pending an appeal in this Court, we are clearly of the opinion that we ought not to do so upon the showing made here." But, aside from the question of the general and inherent power of this Court to appoint a receiver, and without committal upon that subject, the writer is satisfied that such power has been conferred, and now exists, by the second section of the act of the 30th Legislature, which was approved and became operative April 11th, 1907. It is there provided "Whenever a corporation against which the State has heretofore instituted suit, or shall hereafter institute suit, for the forfeiture of its charter or cancellation of its permit, or for fines or penalties, under any law of this State, shall dissolve in this or any other state, or shall have a judgment rendered against it in this or any other state for the forfeiture of its charter, the court in this State in which such suit is pending shall appoint a receiver for the property and business of such corporation within this State, or that may come or be brought within this State during such receivership; or the court may, in any case wherein the 72 State is suing any such corporation for the forfeiture of its charter or of its permit to do business in this State, or for fines or penalties, appoint a receiver for such corporation whenever the interests of the State may seem to require such action."

It will be observed that in framing this law, when the matter of power to appoint receivers was reached, the Legislature did not limit that power to the district court, or any other court designated as a class, nor to the court in which the suit was instituted, but in clear and unambiguous language, conferred that power "upon the court in this State in which such suit is pending." The other reference to the court thereafter made in the same sentence and authorizing the appointment of a receiver whenever the interests of the State may seem to require it, is not, in terms, limited to the trial court and is equally applicable to an appellate court. It is not denied, and must be conceded, that the case is now pending in this Court, and that the State is sueing a corporation for the forfeiture of its permit to do business in this State and for fines and penalties, and no other court has jurisdiction over it. Therefore this Court comes within the literal terms of that portion of the statute which confers jurisdiction to appoint a receiver; and I find no reason in any portion of that law for the conclusion that the Legislature did not intend that the language referred to should have its ordinary and usual significance. On the contrary, the rule of construction prescribed by statute in this state requiring statutes to be liberally construed in order to accomplish the legislative purpose, and the legislative history of this State upon the subject to which this statute relates, and especially the manifest purpose intended to be accomplished by this statute, lead, it seems to me, to the inevitable conclusion that it was the intention of the Legislature to confer power to appoint a receiver upon the court exercising jurisdiction over the case at the time of the happening of the contingencies referred to in the statute. It is not unreasonable to presume that the Legislature had in mind the probability that, in some instances, the contingencies referred to might arise after the case was disposed of in the trial court and was pending on appeal in an appellate court; and that, for that reason, the broad language referred to was used in order to better protect what the Legislature regarded as the interests of the 73 State. Since 1899 the Legislative department of this State has been enacting laws upon the subject of trusts, and each successive enactment has been an enlargement of those preceding, and they all manifest a fixed and continued purpose to control corporations and prevent them from committing acts regarded by the Legislature as detrimental to the public interest. Various other enactments of the 30th Legislature disclose such purpose, but the one now under consideration makes manifest an intense purpose to reach out and make available instrumentalities and powers not heretofore used for the purpose of rendering effective anti-trust legislation.

And here it is not inappropriate to quote and apply the language of Chief Justice Stayton in G. H. & S. A. Ry. vs. the State, 77 Tex., 410: "In construing a constitution, or any other law, the object sought is the true intent of the law maker, which must be ascertained from the language in which the law is written, and in considering this it is always important to keep in view the object which the law maker intended to accomplish through its enactment. The more intensely the law maker may be seen to have desired to accomplish the given purpose, the more weight should be given to the language used in a law looking to that end." While this language was used in a dissenting opinion it announces rules of construction that are well settled, and that seem specially applicable in the construction of the statute now under consideration.

Hence I conclude that this Court comes within both the letter and spirit of that portion of the statute referred to which confers power to appoint receivers. If such power constitutes original jurisdiction it was competent for the Legislature to vest it in this Court, because the Constitution as amended in 1891 expressly authorizes the Legislature to confer other jurisdiction, both appellate and original upon the Courts of Civil Appeals. As published in the Revised Statutes, that provision of the Constitution is omitted, but it is, nevertheless, a part of that instrument. If the court has the power to appoint a receiver, I think the facts stated in the application and not controverted, make it appear that the interest of the State seems to require such appointment to be made.

2. By the terms of Art. 997 of the Revised Statutes of 74 this State, the Courts of Civil Appeals have the power to issue writs of mandamus and all other writs necessary to enforce their jurisdiction. Of course, it cannot be successfully contended that one court can issue and enforce any process against another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction and control its official action, but when a court goes beyond the limits of its jurisdiction, and undertakes to do that which it has no power to do, such action is null and void; and it is for this reason and upon this ground that I hold that this Court can properly issue an injunction against Mr. Dorchester. Authorities cited in the main opinion of Chief Justice Fisher satisfy my mind that this Court had jurisdiction of the property of the defendant Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and that that property was in custodia legis when the Judge of the Circuit Court of the United States attempted to appoint Mr. Dorchester receiver of that property; and, such being the case, the authorities referred to and many others, establish the proposition that the Federal Court at that time had no power to appoint a receiver for the property, and that the alleged appointment of Mr. Dorchester was and is absolutely null and void. My views on that subject cannot be better expressed than by borrowing the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in Covell vs. Heyman, 111 U. S., 176.

"The forbearance which courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction, administered under a single system, exercise towards each other, whereby conflicts are avoided, by avoiding interference with the process of each other, is a principle of comity with perhaps no higher sanction than the utility which comes from concord; but between state courts and those of the United States it is something more. It is a principle of right and law and, therefore, of necessity. It leaves nothing to discretion or mere convenience. These courts do not belong to the same system so far as their jurisdiction is concurrent; and although they co-exist in the same space, they are independent and have no connom superior. They exercise jurisdiction, it is true, within the same territory, but not in the same plane; and when one takes into its jurisdiction a specific thing, that res is as much withdrawn from the judicial power of the other as if it had been carried physically into a different territorial sovereignty. To at-75 tempt to seize it by a foreign process is futile and void."

As I understand the law, whenever an alleged official act is in excess of power and utterly without authority, such act can confer no power or right upon anyone. Hence I am of the opinion that as Mr. Dorchester's alleged appointment as receiver is absolutely null and void, it is competent for this Court, upon a proper showing, to issue a writ of injunction against him. Such writ would not run against him as receiver of the property, acting under the authority of the Federal Court, but as an individual, acting without authority. Therefore if this Court should appoint a receiver to hold and preserve the property while the case is on appeal, I think it would be proper, if it became necessary, to issue a writ of injunction, or any other appropriate writ, to enable such receiver to secure and retain possession of the property.

In conclusion, it is not inappropriate to say that we have dealt with this delicate matter upon the assumption that the Honorable Judge of the Circuit Court of the United States in dealing with it, acted upon no other motive than a high sense of official duty, and the matter has been dealt with in this Court upon the same exalted plane. Nevertheless, being of the opinion that the Honorable Judge referred to exceeded his powers, and that his order appointing Mr. Dorchester receiver conferred no authority upon the latter, and that Mr. Dorchester's conduct in taking possession of the property for the purposes stated in the application under consideration constitutes an invasion of the jurisdiction of this Court, I believe it is our duty, under the circumstances, disclosed, to take all necessary and proper steps to prevent its continuance.

THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL CO., Receivership Proceeding,
vs.
THE STATE OF TEXAS.

Appeal from Travis County.

Opinion.

This is an appeal by the appellant from an order entered by the trial court appointing a receiver for the properties of the appellant Company situated within the State of Texas. The history of the proceedings and the subject matter of controversy and the result reached by the trial court is fully explained and set out in the opinion of this Court handed down in this case on June 28th, 1907. There is also set out in that opinion the act of the Legislature of April 11th, 1907, which we there construed and held to authorize the course pursued by the trial court, which is objected to in the appeal we are now considering. It is necessary for us to recapitulate what was stated in the opinion referred to. We there, in effect, held that the act of the Legislature referred to was constitutional, which ruling, after further consideration, we adhere to. The act in question clearly authorized the procedure pursued by the trial court, and the spirit, meaning and purpose of the act authorized the court, upon dissolution of the permit to do business within this State of appellant's Company at the instance of the suit by the State, to appoint a receiver for its properties within its jurisdiction. The reason for this conclusion we undertook to state in the opinion referred to, which agrees with the conclusion of the trial judge, as stated in the bill of exception which is a part of the record in this case.

Independent of the power conferred by the act of the Legislature reviewed, we are of the opinion that the court had the authority to appoint a receiver by virtue of subdivision 3 of Art. 1465, Sayles Civil Statutes. That subdivision is to the effect that a receiver may be appointed where a corporation is dissolved or is insolvent or in imminent danger of insolvency, or has forfeited its corporate 78 rights. The corporate right of the appellant Company to do business within this State was by virtue of a permit that had been granted to it by the State, and when an action is brought by the State to cancel and dissolve that permit, it is a proceeding which in our opinion comes within, if not the exact letter, the spirit and meaning of that part of the subdivision of the statute which relates to the forfeiture of the corporate rights of the corporation.

It is contended by the appellant that in the appointment of the receiver the trial court proceeded without pleading and evidence. The record and proceedings brought to this Court by the appellant for our review contains no statement of facts, but there is a bill of exception which was approved by the court, in which it is stated that the court in passing upon the question of the appointment of the receiver, took judicial notice of the facts exhibited in the main case upon which the receivership is predicated, and of the judgment and decree rendered in that case, wherein it appears from the record in this case the judgment against the appellant corporation was for a large sum, and also forfeiting its permit to carry on and conduct its business within this state. That branch of the case in which the receiver was appointed is merely an arm of the main case, and is incidental to that proceeding. Both of the statutes quoted and mentioned authorize and empower, if they do not expressly direct, the trial court to appoint a receiver when the State obtains its judgment canceling the permit. And there is another provision of the act of 1907 which authorized a receiver to be appointed when the interests of the State might require it to be done. In view of these statutes it is folly to say that the trial court must lose sight of the main controversy when he undertakes to appoint a receiver; that before that jurisdiction can be exercised he must again rehear and review the facts that were established in the original case upon which the receivership depends, and we are of the opinion that the court was correct in the conclusion that it could take judicial knowledge of the facts established in the main case and the judgment based thereon. The appellant has seen fit to perfect a separate appeal from the order appointing a receiver, and it has no statement 79 of facts in the record showing that the facts which the court took judicial knowledge of did not exist and were not sufficient to authorize the action of the court in making the appointment. The effect of the action of the court was to hold that the facts that he took judicial knowledge of were sufficient to authorize and justify the appointment. The record here shows that the State has actually recovered a judgment for penalties and for cancellation of the permit to do business. The presumption will be indulged in favor of the action of the trial court, and no fact appearing in the record brought up here by the appellant which would negative and destroy the force of this presumption, we must hold that we have in this record facts sufficient to justify the judgment below.

It is contended by the appellant not only that the facts are not sufficient, which contention we have just disposed of, but that the appointment was made by the court without being predicated upon any pleading in the nature of a petition or bill by the State asking for and showing grounds for the appointment of a receiver. The document filed by the State upon which the court acted in making the appointment, we construe to be of the nature of a pleading. It is addressed to the court and states facts under the statutes discussed that would authorize the court to appoint a receiver. A general demurrer was interposed, it seems, to this application and was overruled. It states grounds and reasons why the court should make the appointment, and some of these reasons stated are of the nature embraced in the statutes upon which a court may act in making the appointment. But however, if it could be held that the application of the State could not be regarded as a petition or a bill or something in the nature of a pleading requesting the appointment of a receiver, or if an instrument of this character but fatally defective, then the question on in the case of forfeiture of the franchise or permit and the power of the court to appoint a receiver is set at rest by the case of San Antonio Gas Co. vs. the State, 54 S. W., 293. It is there, in effect, held that where there is a judgment forfeiting the cor-80 porate rights the court can, independent of the request of anyone, exercise his judicial discretion as to whether he will or will not appoint a receiver. It is unnecessary to repeat what the court in that opinion says upon the subject. The proposition is forcibly discussed and the ruling is squarely to the effect that the court can, without request, make the appointment in such a case.

As said before, we find no constitutional objection to the statutes under which the court acted in making the appointment. What we have said is all that we think necessary to be said in disposing of this appeal.

WATERS PIERCE OIL COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
THE STATE OF TEXAS, Appellee.

Appellant's Motion for Rehearing.

In the above cause now comes the Appellant, the Waters Pierce Oil Company, and moves the Court to set aside its judgment herein entered on the 23rd day of October, A. D. 1907, affirming the action of the District Court of Travis County in appointing Robert J. Eckhardt as Receiver of Appellant's property, and to grant to 81 appellant a rehearing in this Court of all matters involved in this appeal, and as grounds relied upon for such rehearing Appellant says that this Court erred in its said judgment of affirmance and in its rulings and decisions made in connection therewith and in support thereof, in the following particulars, viz:

1. This Court was without jurisdiction, and acted in excess of and beyond the proper exercise of its jurisdiction in considering the validity of the appointment of the said Eckhardt as Receiver before considering and deciding the validity of the judgment rendered June 1st, 1907, against Appellant in said District Court, which said judgment was made the basis for said appointment in the application filed by the State for the appointment of a receiver.

2. The Court erred in overruling appellant's motion to consolidate this proceeding with Appellant's appeal from said judgment of June 1st, 1907, and from said orders appointing said Eckhardt as Receiver in said main cause, as shown by the transcript of the entire record of the judgment and all orders and proceedings in said main cause, including the orders and proceedings in connection with said appointment of Eckhardt as Receiver, which said appeal embracing the entire case was first docketed in this Court as Cause No. 4212, and is now pending and undetermined before this Court.

3. This Court erred in overruling Appellant's eighth assignment of error and in holding that the said District Court was authorized by the Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, Approved April 11th, 1907, to appoint a receiver to take charge of Appellant's property, because said Act of the Legislature is void and is an ex post facto law, in violation of Section 10, Article 1, of the Constitution of the United States, in attempting to create a lien upon Appellant's property for the acts committed by it before said Act took effect in violation of the Anti-trust Laws of the State of Texas, and for which it was convicted and penalties assessed against it in the said judgment of conviction rendered against it on June 1st, 1907.

4. This Court erred in overruling Appellant's sixth assignment of error and in holding that the said District Court was author-
82 ized by the Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas of April 11th, 1907, to appoint a receiver to take charge of Appellant's property, because said Act of the Legislature, in attempting to create a lien upon Appellant's property for the alleged violation of the Anti-trust Laws of the State of Texas, by providing that the State shall have such lien from the date of the institution of a suit by the Attorney General, or a district or county attorney under his direction, in any court of competent jurisdiction in this State for the purpose of forfeiting the charter or cancelling the permit of a corporation violating the said Anti-trust Laws, and for fines and penalties against such corporation for such violation, does not prescribe a fixed and uniform rule of law applicable to all persons alike, but it a delegation of the legislative power to officers of the Executive Department to create the lien, or not create it, and discriminate between persons at will, and therefore the appointment of a receiver to take charge of Appellant's property under this statute was unconstitutional, since it results in depriving Appellant of its property without due process of law and in denying to Appellant the equal protection of the laws, in violation of Section 1, of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

5. The Court erred in overruling Appellant's thirteenth assignment of error and in holding that the said District Court was authorized by the Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, Approved April 11th, 1907, to appoint a receiver to take charge of the property of Appellant, because said Act of the Legislature is void and is an ex post facto law, in violation of Section 10, Article 1 of the Constitution of the United States, in attempting to confer authority for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of Appellant's property as an incident to, and in aid of, the said judgment of conviction rendered against Appellant on June 1st, 1907, in that the appointment of such receiver has the effect of inflicting an additional punishment upon Appellant, and of increasing the penalties prescribed 83 under the previous laws for acts committed prior to April 11th, 1907.

6. This Court erred in overruling Appellant's ninth assignment of error and in holding that the said District Court was authorized to appoint a receiver to take charge of Appellant's property by the Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, Approved April 11th, 1907, because under said Act of the Legislature the right to appoint a receiver is limited to actions against corporations, whereas, in a similar suit against an individual charged with violating the same laws, there is no provision made for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of his property, thereby making an arbitrary distinction between persons similarly situated, and rendering said Act of the Legislature unconstitutional and in violation of Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

7. The Court erred in overruling Appellant's first assignment of error and in holding that the said District Court was authorized to appoint a receiver to take charge of Appellant's property by the Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, Approved April 11th, 1907, because the right, if any existed, to appoint a receiver under said Act could be exercised only in an orderly manner upon pleadings setting up the particular grounds upon which such appointment was sought to be made, and showing sufficient reasons for the appointment of a receiver, and because there being no proper pleadings in this cause the appointment of a receiver for Appellant's property was unconstitutional, being in violation of that provision of Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States which prescribes that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law.

8. This Court erred in holding that the said District Court was authorized to appoint a receiver to take charge of Appellant's property by virtue of Sub-division 3, Article 1465, Sayles' Civil Statutes
84 of Texas, which is to the effect that a receiver may be appointed where a corporation has forfeited its corporate rights, because treating, as the Court did, the cancellation of the permit of Appellant to do business in the State of Texas as the forfeiture of the corporate rights of Appellant, such forfeiture was made by virtue of the judgment of said District Court entered June 1st, 1907, in the main suit convicting Appellant of violating the Anti-trust Laws of the State of Texas, and was a part of that judgment; and further, because the Appellant having superseded the execution of said judgment in such a manner that no process could be issued or proceedings had in aid of its enforcement from the date of its rendition, the appointment of the receiver to take charge of Appellant's property was without authority; and because further to sanction and sustain the appointment of the receiver and to hold that said appointment has any legal effect, results in denying to Appellant the benefit and protection which all other litigants enjoy under the laws of the State of Texas by superseding a judgment, and would therefore be unconstitutional and in violation of that part of Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

9. This Court erred in not sustaining Appellant's second proposition under its Fifth Assignment of Error, and its Fourteenth Assignment of Error submitted as a proposition in connection with said Fifth Assignment of Error, wherein Appellant claimed the protection of said Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, because of its said bond superseding and staying the execution of the said judgment of June 1st, 1907, rendered against it, and the action of this Court in affirming the judgment of said District Court appointing the receiver, and in holding that said appointment has any legal effect, results in denying to this Appellant the equal protection of the laws, in violation of said Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

10. This Court erred in overruling Appellant's Eleventh Assignment of Error and in holding that the said District Court

85 was authorized by the Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, Approved April 11th, 1907, to appoint a receiver to take charge of Appellant's property in a suit brought against Appellant to recover fines and penalties for offenses committed in violation of the Anti-trust Laws of the State, as a means of preventing the Appellant from the further or continued violation of such Laws, and the action of said District Court in appointing a receiver for Appellant's property on that ground and for that purpose, as indicated in its finding — the time of the making of said appointment, by virtue of said Act of the Legislature, is in violation of Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States in that the result of said action, under the said Act of the Legislature, is to deprive Appellant of its property without due process of law and to deny to it the equal protection of the laws.

11. This Court erred in overruling Appellant's Twelfth Assignment of Error and in holding that the said District Court was authorized by the Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, Approved April 11th, 1907, to appoint a receiver to take charge of Appellant's property without any evidence being introduced before the Court at the time the appointment was made to show that Appellant could not make use of its property and carry on its business in accordance with law, and such action by said District Court so affirmed by this Court results in depriving Appellant of the use of its property for the purpose of conducting an inter-state business guaranteed to it under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States in Paragraph Four, Section Eight, of Article One of said Constitution.

12. This Court erred in holding that Sub-division 3, Article 1465 of the Revised Statutes of the State of Texas has any application to the appointment of the receiver involved in this appeal, because the said Sub-division of said Article has no application to the cancellation of the permit of Appellant as a foreign corporation, and it has the right to continue in possession and enjoy the use of its property after the cancellation of its permit, and may conduct a business protected under the Commerce Clause of the Constitution of the United States, and may sell or remove its property at will,
86 and to deny to it the possession and use of its property for these purposes by the appointment of a receiver to take charge of its property, as was done under the orders of the said District Court and affirmed by the judgment of this Court, results in depriving Appellant of its property without due process of law, in violation of Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

13. This Court erred in holding that the appointment of the receiver in this proceeding at the suit of the State was authorized by the said Act of the Legislature of the State of Texas Approved April 11th, 1907, and also under the provisions of Sub-division 3, Article 1465 of the Revised Statutes, independent of the rights of the State as a creditor having a legal interest in Appellant's property, and since the judgment of the State against Appellant was secured by the supersedeas bond given by Appellant upon said judgment, as required by law, the State had no such interest in Appellant's property as to authorize the appointment of a receiver, and both of said statutes, when construed as authorizing the appointment of a receiver for Appellant's property, are unconstitutional, and this action of the Court based thereon results in depriving Appellant of its property without due process of law, in violation of Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

14. This Court erred in its findings and conclusions of law in holding that the District Court was authorized at the hearing of the application for the appointment of a receiver in this proceeding, to consider the the evidence which was submitted in the main cause, and that the appointment of the receiver herein should be affirmed, based upon the presumption that sufficient evidence was introduced at the hearing of the main cause to show that the interests of the State of Texas required such appointment. This holding on the part of the Court was erroneous because if the trial court could take judicial notice of what occurred in the main cause, this Court is also required to take like notice thereof, and this can only be done by considering the appointment of the receiver in connection with the appeal in the main cause now pending before this court. This 87 holding is also erroneous because the application upon which the appointment was made did not set out any facts showing that the State had any interest requiring the appointment of the receiver beyond the collection of its judgment, and the act of this Court in sustaining the appointment based upon the presumption that something may have been shown at the hearing of the main case, although it was not set out in the application, results in depriving Appellant of its property without due process of law, in violation of Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Wherefore, and upon each of the foregoing grounds of error committed by this Court, Appellant moves the Court to grant it a rehearing herein, and to set aside and vacate its said judgment affirming the judgment of the District Court of Travis County appointing the said Robert J. Eckhardt receiver of Appellant's property.

Appellant represents that the Honorable R. V. Davidson, who is the Attorney General of the State of Texas, and Jewel P. Lightfoot, an Assistant Attorney General of said State, and T. W. Gregory and R. L. Batts, composing the firm of Gregory & Batts, and George W. Allen and W. D. 89 No. —.

WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY
vs.
THE STATE OF TEXAS.

Pending in the Supreme Court of the State of Texas.

To the Honorable the Supreme Court:

Now comes the State of Texas, by her Attorney-General, and respectfully shows:

1. That heretofore, to-wit, on the first day of June, 1907, a judgment was rendered in the District Court of Travis County, in the case of the State of Texas vs. The Waters-Pierce Oil Company, wherein it was adjudged that said company was operating its business within this state contrary to law, and canceling its permit to do business within this state.

2. In said cause judgment was rendered in behalf of the State of Texas for penalties in the sum of $1,623,900.

3. That by virtue of the statute of the State of Texas, the State has a lien upon all of the property and assets of said corporation in this state to secure the payment of said judgment.

4. That the conduct of said business by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company by and through its agents and employés constitutes and is a violation of the penal statutes of this state, and each of said employés and agents of said company will become liable to prosecution for such violation of the penal laws if they should conduct or help to conduct the business of said corporation within this state, or do any act in furtherance of the illegal business of said corporation.

5. That in a proceeding instituted by one Bradley W. Palmer against the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas, the facts hereinbefore stated were set up and the allegations were therein made that 90 it was necessary that a receiver be appointed to conduct the business of said corporation pending the final disposition of said cause in which said judgment had been rendered, and the following allegations, under oath, were made:

"That by reason of the fact that said oil company have been adjudged to be doing business in violation of the said anti-trust statutes, and is believed by the officials of the State of Texas, and especially the Attorney-General's Department, and some of the courts of the State of Texas, and especially the District Court of Travis County, before whom said cause was tried, that said defendant oil company is and has been doing business in the State of Texas in violation of said anti-trust statutes, and by reason of the provisions of said two acts passed by the 30th legislature, making it a felony punishable by confinement in the penitentiary for any one to have any connection with, or represent in any capacity, a corporation doing business in violation of such anti-trust statutes, your orator avers on information and belief that it will be impossible for said oil company to do and transact any business in the State of Texas after the 12th day of July, 1907, because it will be impossible for it (to) procure any managers, agents, salesmen, representatives or other employés to conduct, carry on or aid in the transaction of its business, because all such persons will be deterred therefrom by reason of the fear that they will be arrested and prosecuted for the commission of a felony, by reason thereof, and thereupon the property and business of said oil company will be left without any care, control or management, unless your Honors will sequestrate said property and appoint a receiver to take charge of the same, and from the time being conduct the business in which said oil company is now engaged, which can be done by the receiver appointed by this court without violating any of the laws of the State of Texas, which is the only method known to your orator of which he can conceive whereby the property and business of said oil company and the value of the stock therein can be preserved."

And the Waters-Pierce Oil Company filed an answer, wherein they admitted that said facts were true, joining in a prayer for the appointment of a receiver for the protection of its property and for the protection of the employés and agents of the company.

6. That in said cause pending in the District Court of Travis County, a judgment was entered appointing Robert J. Eckhardt, receiver of the properties and business of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company; that a bond was filed by the company superseding said judgment appointing the receiver; that the judgment of said court in appointing said receiver has been affirmed by the Court of 91 Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District; that an application has been made by said company for a writ of error to said court complaining of the action of said court in affirming said judgment; that by a judgment this day rendered by this court, it holds that it has jurisdiction of the case in which said judgment appointing said receiver was rendered, and thereby, that it has legal custody and control of the property and business of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company.

7. That it is necessary for the preservation of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, for the preservation of the security of the State of Texas, for the prevention of the violation of the laws of the State of Texas, for the safety of the persons in charge of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and for the prevention of the conduct of a business in violation of the laws of the State, that the property and business of said Waters-Pierce Oil Company be taken into actual control of this court.

Wherefore, the State of Texas prays that this court direct that Robert J. Eckhardt take actual and physical possession of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and conduct the business of said corporation under such orders as this court may make pending the final disposition of this cause in this court.

WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY
vs.
THE STATE OF TEXAS.

Pending in the Supreme Court of the State of Texas.

To the Honorable the Supreme Court:

Now comes the State of Texas, by her Attorney-General, and files this her amended motion in lieu of the original motion filed herein on the 14th day of December, 1907, and respectfully shows:

1. That heretofore, to-wit, on the first day of June, 1907, a judgment was rendered in the District Court of Travis County, in the case of the State of Texas vs. the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, wherein it was adjudged that said company was operating its business within this State contrary to law, and cancelling its permit
93 to do business within this State.

2. In said cause judgment was rendered in behalf of the State of Texas for penalties in the sum of $1,623,900.

3. That by virtue of the statute of the State of Texas, the State has a lien upon all property and assets of said corporation in this State to secure the payment of said judgment.

4. That the conduct of said business by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company by and through its agents and employees constitutes and is a violation of the penal statutes of this State, and each of said employees and agents of said company will become liable to prosecution for such violation of the penal laws, if they should conduct or help to conduct the business of said corporation within this State, or do any act in furtherance of the illegal business of said corporation.

5. That in a proceeding instituted by one Bradley W. Palmer against the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas, the facts hereinbefore stated were set up and the allegations were therein made that it was necessary that a receiver be appointed to conduct the business of said corporation pending the final disposition of said cause in which said judgment had been rendered, and the following allegations, under oath, were made:

"That by reason of the fact that said oil company have been adjudged to be doing business in violation of the said anti-trust

statutes, and is believed by the officials of the State of Texas, and especially the Attorney-General's Department, and some of the courts of the State of Texas, and especially the District Court of Travis County, before whom said cause was tried, that said defendant oil company is and has been doing business in the State of Texas in violation of said anti-trust statutes, and by reason of the provisions of said two acts passed by the 30th Legislature, making it a felony punishable by confinement in the penitentiary for any one to have any connection with, or represent in any capacity, a corporation doing business in violation of such anti-trust statutes, your orator avers on information and belief that it will be impossible for said oil company to do and transact any business in the State 94 of Texas after the 12th day of July, 1907, because it will be impossible for it (to) procure any managers, agents, salesmen, representatives or other employees to conduct, carry on or aid in the transaction of its business, because all such persons will be deterred therefrom by reason of the fear that they will be arrested and prosecuted for the commission of a felony, by reason thereof, and thereupon the property and business of said oil company will be left without any care, control or management, unless your Honors will sequestrate said property and appoint a receiver to take charge of the same, and from the time being conduct the business in which said oil company is now engaged, which can be done by the receiver appointed by this court without violating any of the laws of the State of Texas, which is the only method known to your orator of which he can conceive whereby the property and business of said oil company and the value of the stock therein can be preserved."

And the Waters-Pierce Oil Company filed an answer, wherein they admitted that said facts were true, joining in a prayer for the appointment of a receiver for the protection of its property and for the protection of the employees and agents of the company.

6. That upon the foregoing application the said Circuit Court of the United States made an order appointing a receiver, who qualified and took immediate possession of all the property of the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company situated in the State of Texas; and thereupon the State of Texas, and Robert J. Eckhardt, who had been, by the District Court of Travis County, Texas, appointed receiver for all the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company situated within the State of Texas, acting under instructions from the Honorable Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District, in which latter court the controversy was then pending, applied to said Circuit Court of the United States for an order vacating the order appointing a receiver, and restoring the property of the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company to the custody and control of the State Courts. That upon a hearing of said application, the said Circuit Court refused to vacate said order appointing a receiver, and declined to discharge such receiver so appointed; and thereupon the State of Texas and the said Eckhardt prosecuted an appeal to 95 the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, which latter court reversed and vacated the order of the Circuit Court appointing a Receiver, and ordered said latter court to discharge the receiver named by it. That the said judgment so reversing and vacating said order has become a final judgment, and the mandate from said Circuit Court of Appeals has been filed in the said Circuit Court. That said Circuit Court has indicated that it would immediately discharge its receiver, if there was a receiver appointed by the State Court ready and able to take possession of the said property. That the effect of the holding and decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals was, that neither the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas nor any other court, except the District Court of Travis County and the courts to which the cause of action might be carried in a regular way by appeal or writ of error, had or have any jurisdiction whatever over the property in controversy or any right to interfere with the said State Courts in the custody and control of the said property, and the further effect of said holding is technically to make the receiver appointed by the said Circuit Court a naked trespasser so far as the State of Texas and the Waters-Pierce Oil Company are concerned in relation to said property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company situated within the State of Texas. That the Judge presiding in said Circuit Court has stated in open court that he would make an order in compliance with said mandate from the Circuit Court of Appeals directing his said receiver to forthwith make an inventory of the property in his custody and control by virtue of the said appointment, and to make up his account after paying out of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company all liabilities incurred by said receiver, and to state his account in regard thereto, and that upon the coming in of such inventory and account, he would dis-96 charge his receiver and instruct him to turn loose the possession of the property. That the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, which the Circuit Court of Appeals has held was the legal custodian of said property under the supersedeas bond given in this cause, stated in open court in reply to the above suggestions that it was not ready or willing to take said property at this time; that it had no agents in the State of Texas; did not have a single representative in the State to take charge or possession of it, and the State is informed and believes and so charges the fact to be that it can get no agent who is willing to hold the property and conduct and carry on the business of the company, on account of the matters and things hereinbefore alleged. That under and by virtue of the order made by the District Court of Travis County, Texas, appointing a receiver for the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and an injunction issued by it restraining the Waters-Pierce Oil Company from removing its property beyond the limits of the State of Texas, the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company or any person acting for or on its behalf or with its consent is prohibited from removing any property beyond the limits of the State, and the statutes and the obligation of its supersedeas bond given in this cause requires it to keep all of said property within the State of Texas subject to the orders and instructions of this court. That by reason of the taking possession of said property by a foreign receiver in a foreign jurisdiction with the consent and connivance of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, a great deal of the property involved in this controversy has been changed in substance and in form; that many thousands of dollars worth of property has been sold and converted into money and the money in turn used in the purchase of other property; that many obligations have been incurred by the said receiver of a foreign jurisdiction, which it is claimed will be a charge and 97 lien upon said property that the State Courts are entitled to control and preserve; that many obligations are daily being incurred which it is claimed are a charge and lien upon said property, and the said property is being changed in form and character to such an extent that it cannot be traced or followed up and is, therefore, put beyond the reach of this court and the other State Courts, in case the judgment appointing a receiver is affirmed; that the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company, by virtue of its consent and connivance at said proceeding in said Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Texas has put it beyond it- power to carry out or abide by the decision of the court in case it should be against it in this cause, in so far as a large part of the property is concerned, that it had in its possession and control in the State of Texas at the time the receiver was appointed by the State Court and the injunction granted therein. That it will be further put beyond its power and control, if a receiver is not appointed or authorized by this court to take charge of said property; that the State is informed and believes and so charges that a large part of the corpus of the property over which the State Courts have exclusive control have been used in the payment of liabilities incurred by the receiver appointed by the Federal Court, including compensation to the said receiver and to his attorney and other agents and employees of the said Receiver, and that this is in violation of the rights of the State to have all of said property kept intact in accordance with the law and obligations arising by virtue of the above set out proceeding and the supersedeas bond given by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company herein, as well as in violation of the judgment, sentence and decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals reversing and vacating said order. That all of the acts and things done by the Circuit Court, as above set out, are in direct violation of and an infringement of the 98 prerogatives of this court and the other courts to which this cause has or may go upon appeal.

That the State of Texas is asserting a lien upon all of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company situated within the State of Texas to secure the State in the payment of penalties for violating the anti-trust law for the period of time covering about seven years or more than seven years; that if the judgment recovered for penalties and forfeiture of franchise should be reversed by the Court of Civil Appeals or this court or the Supreme Court of the United States, that it would then be within the power of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to quickly dispose of its entire holdings, such holdings being largely personal property, or convert the same into money as a great deal of it has been converted and is being converted, and remove the same beyond the limits of the State, and the State would be without a remedy to enforce any judgment that it might thereafter obtain, unless a receiver or custodian is appointed by this court, or this court direct the receiver heretofore appointed and qualified in the District Court, to take charge of said property; that on account of the recall by this court of the mandate issued by the court of Civil Appeals, the said Robert J. Eckhardt's powers are suspended pending the final disposition of the cause in this court, and the said Eckhardt nor no other receiver appointed by any court, except this court, can legally take possession of or control said property, pending the final disposition of the case in this court, and that, as above stated, the rights of all parties and, especially, the State of Texas are liable to be greatly jeopardized and the property wasted and dissipated and changed and misappropriated.

7. That in said cause pending in the District Court of Travis County, a judgment was entered appointing Robert J. Eckhardt receiver of the properties and business of the Waters-Pierce Oil 99 Company; that a bond was filed by the company superseding said judgment appointing the receiver; that the judgment of said court in appointing said receiver has been affirmed by the Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District; that an application has been made to this court by said company for a writ of error to said court complaining of the action of said court in affirming said judgment; that by a judgment rendered by this court, it holds that it has jurisdiction of the case in which said judgment appointing said receiver was rendered, and thereby, that it has legal custody and control of the property and business of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company.

8. That it is necessary for the preservation of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, for the preservation of the security of the State of Texas, for the prevention of the violation of the laws of the State of Texas, for the safety of the persons in charge of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and for the prevention of the conduct of a business in violation of the laws of the State, that the property and business of said Waters-Pierce Oil Company be taken into actual control of this court.

Wherefore, the State of Texas prays that this court revoke its order recalling the mandate of the Court of Civil Appeals or direct that Robert J. Eckhardt take actual and physical possession of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and conduct the business of said corporation under such orders as this court may make pending the final disposition of this cause in this court, and for general relief.

No. 1774.

WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY, Plaintiff in Error,
vs.
THE STATE OF TEXAS, Defendant in Error.

From Travis County, Third District.

In this opinion we will give our reasons for the disposition made on a former day of this term of a motion presented by the Waters-

Pierce Oil Company on substantially the following statement of facts.

The Waters-Pierce Oil Company is a corporation created under the laws of the State of Missouri, which had been admitted by the authorities of this state to transact business in Texas under a permit duly issued. The state instituted suit in the district court of Travis County against the said Oil Company to forfeit its permit to do business in this state and also to recover from it penalties for the violation of the anti-trust statutes of the state of Texas. Upon a trial in the district court the state recovered judgment for $1,623,000.00 as penalties and declared the permit of the company to do business in this state forfeited. On a subsequent day to the judgment and during the term the Judge of the district court, upon motion of the state, appointed Robert J. Eckhardt receiver for the said corporation. After a motion for new trial had been overruled in that proceeding and also in the main case the Oil Company gave notice of appeal in the original case as well as in the proceedings for appointment of receiver and executed a bond in the main case according to law in double the amount of the judgment, and in the proceedings under the motion of the state for appointment of receiver a bond was given in the amount prescribed by the Judge of the district court, conditioned as required by law for a super-102 sedeas bond. Two records were filed in the Court of Civil Appeals, one embracing both the main case and the motion for the appointment of a receiver and the other embracing only the proceedings upon the motion of the State for the appointment of a receiver. In the Court of Civil Appeals the Waters-Pierce Oil Company moved to consolidate the cases, which motion was by that court denied, and the judgment of the district court, appointing a receiver, was affirmed. Motion for rehearing of that judgment in the Court of Civil Appeals was filed in due time and by the court overruled. On the same day a mandate was issued by the clerk of the court of Civil Appeals and transmitted to the clerk of the District Court of Travis County, Texas. The judge of the district court entered an order based upon the mandate directing Eckhardt to proceed as receiver to discharge his duties. The Waters-Pierce Oil Company filed in the Court of Civil Appeals and presented to this court within the time prescribed by law a petition for writ of error, which is now pending before this court. The Waters-Pierce Oil Company filed in this court a motion setting up the facts before stated and praying that this court enter an order directing the clerk of the Court of Civil Appeals to recall the mandate sent by him to the clerk of the district court, and also directing the judge of the district court to vacate an order which he had entered upon receipt of that mandate directing the receiver to take charge of the property. At a former day of this term, on hearing the motion, this court directed the clerk of the Court of Civil Appeals to recall the mandate sent down by him to the district court, and also directed the Honorable Judge of the District Court to set aside the order made by him upon receipt of the said mandate.

After this court granted the motion to recall the mandate issued by the Court of Civil Appeals to the District Court, the State of Texas, by her Attorney General, filed in this court a motion

103 reciting the facts before stated and added the following grounds upon which the motion rested. (1) That it was adjudged by the district court that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was conducting its business in violation of the law, and that the said judgment cancelled the permit of the company to do business on this state. (2) That judgment had been entered in favor of the State of Texas against the said company for $1,623,000.00. (3) That the State has a lien upon all of the property of the said company within this State to secure payment of the said judgment. (4) That conducting the business of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company by that company or its agents in the State would be in violation of the penal laws of this State. (5) That in a proceeding in the United States Circuit Court, wherein Bradley W. Palmer, one of the Stockholders of the company, was the plaintiff, C. B. Dorchester was appointed receiver for the said company and took possession of the property and that upon appeal by the State, the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States decided that the Circuit Court did not have jurisdiction and ordered the Circuit Court to discharge the receiver. (6) The motion sets out the facts of the proceeding of the Circuit Court of the United States, which are not necessary to this statement. It is alleged in the said motion that the property, while in the hands of Dorchester and under the orders of the Circuit Court of the United States, was applied to the payment of the expenses of that administration and the debts contracted by the receiver, and the other property or proceeds thereof would be hereafter so applied to the detriment of the State and the impairment of its lien. That in case the property should be returned to the possession of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company it would be liable to be wasted or removed from the State. The motion also set up that the Judge of the Circuit Court of the United States had declared that he would discharge the receiver in accordance with the mandate
104 of the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, and that in case he should do so there is no person to receive the property and take control of it and transact the business, as the operation of the business by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in this State would be unlawful. The motion concludes then in the following language: "That it is necessary for the preservation of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, for the preservation of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, for the preservation of the security of the State of Texas, for the prevention of the violation of the laws of the State of Texas, for the safety of the persons in charge of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and for the prevention of the conduct of a business in violation of the laws of the State, that the property and business of said Waters-Pierce Oil Company be taken into actual control of this court.

"Wherefore, the State of Texas prays that this court revoke the order recalling the mandate of the Court of Civil Appeals or direct that Robert J. Eckhardt take actual and physical possession of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and conduct the business of said corporation under such orders as this court may make pending the final disposition of this cause in this court, and for general relief."

On the hearing of the motion of Waters-Pierce Oil Company to recall the mandate of the Court of Civil Appeals from the District Court it was objected by counsel for the State that if the Waters-Pierce Oil Company be correct in its contention that this was not an independent suit but only an incident of the main controversy, a writ of error could not be separately prosecuted, therefore, the case was not properly before this court. It is sometimes the case that there may be more than one appeal in the same case
105 when orders are made at different times which finally dispose of the subject matter of that particular order. A familiar instance is a case of partition wherein there may be a decree which determines the rights of the parties in the property and is a final judgment upon the merits of the case. From this an appeal may be taken leaving the case before the court for the purpose of actual division of the property among the claimants according to the decree entered. When the partition shall have been made and the decree of partition entered there is another final judgment or order from which an appeal may likewise be taken. (White v. Mitchell, 60 Tex., 164; Moor v. Moor, 63 S. W., 357.)

The order appointing the receiver, although made subsequently to the date of the judgment but at the same term, might have been reviewed in the appeal of the principal case. The parties have treated this as a separate proceeding presenting separate records to the Court of Civil Appeals and that court has passed upon it as a separate and distinct case from the main suit, but the separation of the two can not deprive appellant of the benefit of a review of the order; this court has jurisdiction of the case as it is presented.

It is also objected by the State's counsel that this court has no jurisdiction of this branch of the proceeding, because the order appointing the receiver is an interlocutory order, and this court has jurisdiction only of final judgments of the Court of Civil Appeals. If this be an interlocutory order, then the objection is well taken, for this court has no jurisdiction to review such an order of the district court and of the court of Civil Appeals. Mr. Freeman defines an interlocutory judgment in the following language: "An interlocutory decree is one made pending the cause and before the hearing on the merits." (Freeman on Judgments, Sec. 29.) This definition has been approved by this court in the case of Linn 106 v. Arambou[illegible] (55 Tex., 611). Mr. Freeman defines a final decree as foll[illegible]: "A final decree is one which disposes of the cause either by sending it out of the court before a hearing is had on the merits, or after a hearing on the merits, decreeing either in favor of or against the prayer of the bill." The order clearly comes within the definition of a final decree or order, for so far as the defendant was concerned, it finally disposed of the matter then before the court, which was, the appointment of a receiver to take the property into his custody as a consequence of the complete determination of the controversy. If the contention were sustained, the defendant would be deprived of the right to have that order reviewed by this court. (Art. 1383, Rev. Stat.; Renn. v. Ramos, 42 Tex. 104; Shulte v. Huffman, 18 Tex., 678; Fitts v. Fitts, 14 Tex. 443; Watson v. McKinnon, 73 Tex., 215; Carter v. Hightower, 79 Tex., 135.) In each of the cases just cited a receiver had been appointed in the trial court and this court entertained jurisdiction of the matter and passed upon the questions raised as follows: In Fitts v. Fitts, the appointment was made in the final decree, and, for the purpose of enforcing it, objection was made to the appointment of the receiver, but the court affirmed that judgment. In Schulte v. Huffman, the appointment of a receiver was made to carry out the final judgment of the court, and, upon objection being made, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the district court making the appointment. In Watson v. McKinnon, the trial court refused to make the appointment of a receiver and, upon appeal, complaint was made of that refusal, which action the Supreme Court reviewed and reversed. If the order of the court refusing the appointment of a receiver was subject to review by the Supreme Court, certainly an order by which a receiver was appointed would be likewise subject to review. In Carter Bros. v. Hightower, a receiver was ap-107 pointed by the trial court, of which complaint was made upon appeal. This court reviewed the action of the trial court in making the appointment and affirmed the order. At the time those cases were passed upon by the Supreme Court it had no authority to review an interlocutory order of any kind, and, while the question was not made in either of the cases, the action of the Supreme Court necessarily involved the proposition that the court regarded the order as being final, else it would not have had jurisdiction to enter the orders concerning the appointment that were made in that court. We regard these cases as strongly supporting our ruling in maintaining jurisdiction of this court over the order of the district court in making the appointment of a receiver in this court.

The affirmance of that order being a final judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals, this court had jurisdiction by writ of error to review the proceedings of the courts in that matter, and, the appellant in the Court of Civil Appeals having a right to present to this court an application for writ of error, the clerk of that court had no authority to issue the mandate on the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals until the expiration of the time allowed by law for the filing of an application for writ of error in that court. The application for writ of error having been presented in this court it was necessary that the mandate of the Court of Civil Appeals, which was prematurely issued, should be returned to that court to await the action and judgment of the Supreme Court. We therefore held that the appellant is entitled under its motion to have an order directing the clerk of the Court of Civil Appeals to recall the mandate and also directing the judge of the district court to set aside the order which he had made based upon that mandate. In passing upon that motion we have confined ourselves strictly to the question of the right of this court to entertain jurisdiction of the ap-108 plication filed with it and the power of the court to direct the recall of the mandate. That decision in no wise interferes with any authority that the district court or the receiver could lawfully exercise over the property of the Oil Company during the pendency of that appeal.

Upon the motion of the Attorney General requesting this court to appoint a receiver in this case it is insisted by counsel that this court has jurisdiction of the matter because the appeal which was taken from the order appointing the receiver is void, the bond not having been given in double the amount in controversy. It is also claimed that there is no bond prescribed by the statute which will apply to an appeal from this order. Article 1388, Revised Statutes, provides: "An appeal or writ of error may be taken to the Court of Civil Appeals from every final judgment of the district court in civil cases." The order in question is a final judgment of the district court from which an appeal might be taken under the provisions of the above quoted article. If the statute prescribes no bond, then we are of the opinion that the court granting an appeal under this provision of the law might fix the amount of the bond adequate for the protection of the rights of the parties, which the court here did. However, if it were held that this case must rest upon the bond given therein and that it should be for a sum double the amount of the judgment, the appeal would not be void, because the bond could have been amended upon objection made in the Court of Civil Appeals. The objection not having been made in the Court of Civil Appeals as to the amount of the bond, nor any effort made to dismiss the appeal on that account, the objection comes too late in this proceeding.

The effect of the appeal when perfected is prescribed by Article 1404, Revised Statutes, in these words: "Should the appel-169 lant or plaintiff in error, as the case may be, desire to suspend the execution of the judgment, he may do so by giving, instead of the bond or affidavit in lieu thereof, mentioned in the four preceding articles, or in addition to such bond, a bond with two or more good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the clerk, payable to appellee or defendant in error, in a sum at least double the amount of the judgment, interest and costs, conditioned that such appellant or plaintiff in error shall prosecute his appeal or writ of error with effect, and in case the judgment of the Supreme Court or the court of civil appeals shall be against him, he shall perform its judgment, sentence or decree, and pay all such damages as said court may award against him." This is plain language that can not be construed, because its meaning is as definite as could be expressed to the effect that when the appellant or plaintiff in error complies with the law the judgment can not be enforced during the pendency of the appeal. It only needs to be said that the law applies to this case and the enforcement of the order appointing the receiver was suspended by the appeal. (Williams v. Pouns, 48 Tex., 141; Street Ry. Co. v. Street Ry. Co., 68 Tex., 163; G. C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Ft. W. & N. O. Ry. Co. 2 S. W. 199; Griffin v. Wakelee, 42 Tex., 513; Stone v. Spillman, 16 Tex. 432; Beach on Receivers, Sec. 117.)

This court has no power to direct or authorize Eckhardt to take charge of the property of the defendant company when the statute expressly provides that the giving of the appeal bond shall suspend the action of the court in that regard. If the appeal did not have the effect to suspend the execution of the order, the judge had authority to limit the appointment as he did by his order in which it is thus expressed: "And now on this the 15th day of June, 1907, in open court it is ordered by the court in the above cause, that 110 $100,000.00 be and the same is hereby fixed as the amount of bond which the defendant shall be required to give in order to supersede the judgment of the court placing defendant's property in the hands of a receiver; and,

"It is further ordered that upon the approval by the court and the filing with the clerk by defendant of a good and sufficient bond conditioned as required by law for said amount, further proceedings herein be suspended pending appeal.

"But this order shall not effect or rescind the order heretofore entered prohibiting and enjoining the defendant, its servants, officers, agents and attorneys from removing any of its property or assets beyond the limits of the State of Texas, but said injunction shall remain in full force and effect pending the appeal from the order appointing a receiver herein." We do not, however, intimate a doubt upon the proposition which we have asserted, that the appeal by the filing of the bonds by the defendant in that court suspended the operation of the order appointing the receiver until the final decision of the case.

The State, by her Attorney General, moves this court to appoint a receiver to take actual possession of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. This involves an inquiry into the scope of the powers which the constitution has granted to this court, and an inquiry as to whether the act which is requested of this court would constitute the exercise of appellate or of original jurisdiction. Section 3 of Article V of the Constitution defines the powers of the Supreme Court in the following terms: "The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction only, except as herein specified, which shall be coextensive with the limits of the State. Its appellate jurisdiction shall extend to questions of law arising in cases of 111 which the courts of civil appeals have appellate jurisdiction, under such restrictions and regulations as the legislature may prescribe. * * * The legislature may confer original jurisdiction on the Supreme Court to issue writs of quo warranto and mandamus in such cases as may be specified, except as against the Governor of the State." In pursuance of the authority granted by the constitution the legislature has defined the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in this language: "The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction coextensive with the limits of the State which shall extend to questions of law arising in civil cases in which the courts of civil appeals have appellate but not final jurisdiction." It is unnecessary for us to enumerate the different provisions of the statutes which limit and further define the jurisdiction of this court within the general terms hereinbefore copied. The legislature has defined the original jurisdiction of this court as follows: "The Supreme Court or any justice thereof shall have power in term time or vacation to issue the writs of quo warranto or mandamus against any district judge or officer of the state government, except the governor of the state." The legislature has also specified the cases in which the Supreme Court may issue writs of habeas corpus, but it is unnecessary to quote or cite the statute.

In Brownsville v. Basse, 43 Tex., 449, this court defined appellate jurisdiction as follows: "Appellate jurisdiction, with which alone this court is invested in passing upon civil causes, is defined to be the power and authority conferred upon a superior court to rehear and determine causes which have been tried in inferior courts."

By the application of this definition of appellate jurisdiction and the statutory provisions as to the original jurisdiction of this court we must ascertain whether the act of making the requested 112 appointment is embraced in either the appellate or original jurisdiction of this court. It is manifest that the act of appointing a receiver to take charge of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company would not come within the terms of the statute which confer upon this court original jurisdiction in the use of the writs of quo warranto and mandamus for by neither of these writs could the appointment be made. The conclusion is absolute that if the original jurisdiction of this court must be invoked to make the appointment sought, then the court is without power to grant the motion. It would be a waste of words and time to argue a proposition so self-evident.

Can the prayer of the motion be granted by the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction of this court? Looking to the clear definition of our powers by the constitution, by the statute law and by the decision of the court above quoted, this court has no authority over this matter, unless it be in the exercise of its revisory authority whereby some ruling made, and order or judgment entered by the trial court or by the Court of Civil Appeals in its proceedings in this case is brought under review. It is not claimed that the trial court committed any error in the appointment of a receiver for the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, nor that the Court of Civil Appeals erred in the affirmance of that judgment, and the State does not seek to revise, reverse or set aside any order, judgment or decree rendered by the district court or any action taken therein by the Court of Civil Appeals. It is therefore certain to the point of demonstration that the power to make the appointment does not come within the appellate jurisdiction and authority of this court over the case, unless it is brought within the rule which is well expressed in these terms. "Every regularly constituted court has inherent power to do all things that are reasonably neces-113 sary for the administration of justice within the scope of its jurisdiction and to prevent any abuse of its process." (8 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 28.) The powers of the receiver being suspended by the appeal taken by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company we must inquire in what manner that company is interfering with the exercise by this court of its lawful powers in the revision of the proceedings in that case. If it were made to appear that a receiver in the active discharge of his duties was necessary to enable this court to exercise its authority over the case and to revise the action and ruling of the inferior courts, we do not doubt that this court would have the power to appoint a receiver in order to enable it to perform its duties of revising and correcting whatever errors might be made to appear in the proceedings of the lower courts. Nor would this court hesitate to exercise the implied or inherent power arising from its constitutional authority if the facts presented made such a case. Accepting as true the allegations of the motion made in this case that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, if permitted to use the property, will violate the laws of the State of Texas, and that the safety of the persons in charge of the property of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company would be endangered by conducting the business in violation of the laws, we must inquire if either of those acts would in any manner interfere with this court in discharging its duty of revision as an appellate court. We are not able to see wherein the action of the Supreme Court would be affected by such conditions. If in the use of its property the Waters-Pierce Oil Company should violate the laws of the State during the pendency of its appeal it would be liable to prosecution and punishment in the same manner as for acts done before the trial of this case, and if the safety of the persons in charge of the property is endangered in any manner the courts are open to them to seek their protection where the jurisdiction 114 has been lodged by the constitution of this State for such purposes. The trial court has no less power now to prevent a violation of the laws of this State by the conducting of the business of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company than it had before the trial. As none of these things would in any way interfere with this court in the discharge of its duty, they do not fall within the scope of its appellate jurisdiction, therefore do not come within the scope of the jurisdiction of this court. It is also said that it is necessary in order to preserve the security that the State of Texas has for the collection of its judgment to have a receiver in custody of the property, but no facts are stated which show that there is any threatened invasion of the jurisdiction of this court by which that security would be impaired. The law provides for a bond as security for the State in the collection of its judgment, and we are authorized to presume that a solvent bond has been taken by the trial court, and the law having prescribed a sum double the amount of the judgment rendered, we must conclude that it would afford security to the State in the enforcement of its judgment. This court will presume that all of these things have been properly done, and, indeed, if they were not, they are not matters over which this courts has appellate jurisdiction.

In argument counsel appealed to this court to interfere, because it was asserted that in case this court or the Supreme Court of the United States should reverse the judgment which the State obtained in the district court, then the Waters-Pierce Oil Company would be enabled to dispose of its property and evade the collection of the penalties and fines which the State has a right to recover against it. This court cannot indulge the presumption that the law will be violated or that either this court or the Supreme Court of the United States will reverse a judgment which comes to 115 this court with the presumption in favor of its correctness. Such a condition of things, if it should ever exist, must arise necessarily after the time when the jurisdiction of this court over the subject matter will have ceased. The Supreme Court is not called upon by this motion to preserve the status of the case as it existed after the proceedings in the trial court and Court of Civil Appeals, but to change that status and put the affairs of this company and this litigation in an entirely different attitude from that in which by the lawful proceedings of the courts we find it. The questions decided by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States are not involved in this proceeding and nothing in this opinion is intended to antagonize the conclusions reached by that court.

The purpose of this motion is to have this court create new conditions—to change the status fixed by the trial court, which this court has no power to do. (Laredo v. Martin, 52 Tex., 554.) In the case cited an injunction had been refused by the trial court and application was made to the Supreme Court for an injunction which the court refused, saying: "The issuance of an injunction for such a purpose would be the exercise of original, and not appellate, jurisdiction in the case. It would be doing that which, it is contended, the district court should have done before the trial. * * * It could not, then, have been contemplated to give this court power to issue an injunction, in the first instance, to prevent damage to the parties during the pendency of this suit." If the receiver had been in possession of the property when the appeal was taken, this court would have power to maintain that possession during the pendency of the case in this court. (Havermeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal., 327; G. C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Ft. W. & N. O. Ry. Co., 68 Tex., 98.)

116 Without further discussion of the question it is sufficient for us to say that this court has not been entrusted with any such unlimited authority and cannot and will not exercise authority which has not been delegated to it by the people of this State.

The motion is overruled.

Between—

THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY (Defendant), Plaintiff in Error,
and
THE STATE OF TEXAS (Plaintiff), Defendant in Error.

Assignment of Errors.

The defendant the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company says that in the record and proceedings aforesaid and in giving and affirming the judgment aforesaid of the District Court and in the order appointing a receiver as a consequence of the said judgment there is manifest error in this to-wit

1. That it was decided in and by the said judgment that the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company which was incorporated under the laws of Missouri on the 29th May 1900 and not before was liable to the penalties imposed by the statute of 1903 in the record mentioned for and on account of the acts of the Standard Oil Company in acquiring a majority of the shares of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company before the said statute of 1903 was passed or took effect which acts were not done in the state of Texas. And by means thereof the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company is thereby deprived of its property without due process of law. And it was also thereby decided that the said statute of 1903 was valid and not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States whereas it ought to have been decided that the same so far as it had the effect so given to it was invalid and repugnant to the provisions of the said Constitution forbidding the passage of any ex post facto law by any state.

2. There is also manifest error in this that it was decided in and by the said judgment that the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company was liable to the penalties imposed by the statute of 1899 in the record mentioned for and on account of a supposed union or combination of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company by means of acts done by the said Standard Oil Company long before the passage of the said statute and long before the incorporation of the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company in acquiring a majority of 121 the shares of another then existing company (hereinafter called the old Waters-Pierce Company) incorporated under the laws of Missouri by the same name as the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company which acts were not done in the state of Texas. And by means thereof the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company is deprived of its property without due process of law. And it was also thereby decided that the said statute was valid and not repugnant to the said Constitution whereas it ought to have been decided that the same as far as it had the effect so given to it was invalid and repugnant to the provision of the said Constitution forbidding the passage of any ex post facto law by any state.

There is also manifest error in this that it was decided in and by the said judgment that the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was liable to the penalties imposed by the said statutes of 1899 and 1903 respectively for and on account of certain supposed agreements or understandings entered into before the passage of either of the said statutes between the Standard Oil Company and the old Waters-Pierce Company whose property and business the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company afterwards acquired without becoming in any way bound by or answerable in respect of any of the said supposed agreements or understandings and never became so bound or answerable or did any act in carrying any of them into effect which supposed agreements or understandings if they existed were entered into out of the state of Texas. And by means of the said decision the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company is deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

There is also manifest error in this that the Court upon hearing the exceptions of the defendant to the plaintiff's amended original petition before the said trial overruled among others of them the exception (No. 9) whereby the defendant excepted to all parts and paragraphs of the said petition by which it was sought to hold the defendant subject to the provisions of the said statute of 1903 and to cancel its permit to do business in Texas and to recover penalties against it on account of the alleged holding or ownership by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of a majority of its stock because according to the allegations in the said petition the said 122 stock was so held and owned by the said Standard Oil Company at and long prior to the passage of the said statute of 1903 and its ownership of the said stock being a vested right and not in violation of the laws of the state of Texas when the defendant's permit to transact business in Texas was granted to it on May 31st 1900 it was not competent or within the constitutional power of the legislature of the state of Texas to interfere with such ownership or divest the said Standard Oil Company of its said property or to make it an offense by the defendant subjecting it to penalties and to a forfeiture of its said permit for such vested ownership to continue and that the said statute of 1903 is violative of the Constitution of the United States for that it is both ex post facto and retroactive in its operation and for the additional reason that if given the effect of prohibiting the continuance of such ownership of the said stock by the said Standard Oil Company and of making it an offense on the part of the defendant for such holding to continue it would deprive the defendant of its property without due process of law and deny to the defendant the equal protection of the laws and impair the obligations of a contract contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution in the said exception referred to and for these reasons the defendant therein said that it was apparent that all allegations in the said petition with respect to the alleged ownership of the defendant's stock by the Standard Oil Company should be stricken out and of this special exception the defendant prayed the judgment of the Court. And the said exception being overruled the defendant was by the said judgment made liable to the penalties imposed by the said statute of 1903 for and on account of the acts of the Standard Oil Company in acquiring the said majority of the stock of the defendant before the passage of the said statute of 1903 and continuing afterwards to hold the same. And the defendant has thereby been denied the equal protection of the laws and is deprived of its property without due process of law. And it was also thereby decided that the said statute of 1903 was valid and not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States whereas it ought to have been decided that the same so far as it had the effect so given to it was invalid and repugnant to the provisions of the said Constitution forbidding the passage of any ex post facto law by 123 any state.

5. There is also manifest error in this that the Court in like manner also overruled another of the said exceptions (No. 20) to the said petition whereby if the Court should construe the plaintiff's petition as alleging that the defendant was the same corporation—the same entity as the old Waters-Pierce Company (which the said petition does plainly allege) then the defendant excepted to all the allegations in the said petition whereby it was sought to recover penalties of the defendant under the provisions of the said statute of 1899 on account of the alleged ownership by the said Standard Oil Company of the stock of the defendant or on account of the alleged agreement between the defendant and the said Standard Oil Company or on account of the alleged agreement between the defendant and the said Standard Oil Company and the other corporations and persons mentioned in the said petition and said that the same were insufficient for the reason that if the petition be so construed it then affirmatively appeared from the said petition that the said alleged ownership of the stock of the defendant by the said Standard Oil Company existed at the time of and prior to the taking effect of the said statute of 1899 and that all of the said alleged agreements and understandings were made and entered into prior to the passage of the said statute and for the reason that the said statute was intended to act prospectively only and if intended to apply to ownerships by one corporation of the stock of another corporation or to apply to agreements of the character of the said alleged agreements so set forth in the said petition it was only intended to apply to such ownerships of stock as should be acquired after the taking effect of the said statute and to such agreements as should be made or entered into after the taking effect of the said statute and if the said statute should be construed as having been intended by the legislature to authorize the recovery against the defendant of the penalties provided for in the said statute on account of the continuation of the said alleged ownership of its stock by the said Standard Oil Company or on account of the performance by this defendant of any of the alleged agreements so alleged to have 124 been made prior to the taking effect of of the said statute then such act so construed would be violative of the said Constitution in that it would be retroactive in its effect and impair the obligations of contracts and deny to the defendant the equal protection of the laws and would take the property of the defendant without due process of law and of this the defendant prayed judgment of the Court. And the said exception being overruled the defendant was by the said judgment made liable to the penalties imposed by the said statute of 1899 for and on account of the acts of the Standard Oil Company in acquiring the said stock of the old Waters-Pierce Company before the passage of the said statute of 1899 and continuing afterwards to hold the same and taking a corresponding majority of the shares or the beneficial interest in such majority of the shares of the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company issued to the said Standard Oil Company for its interest in the old Waters-Pierce Company in which acts of the said Standard Oil Company the defendant had no part and for and on account of the alleged agreements and understandings between the old Waters-Pierce Company and the said Standard Oil Company and the said other corporations and persons entered into before the passage of the said statute of 1899 to none of which agreements or understandings the defendant ever became a party or became in any way answerable therefor. And the defendant is thereby denied the equal protection of the laws and is deprived of its property without due process of law.

6. There is also manifest error in this that the Court in like manner also overruled another of the said exceptions (No. 21) to the said petition whereby the defendant excepted to all the allegations in the said petition whereby it was sought to recover penalties of the defendant under the provisions of the said statute of 1903 on account of the alleged ownership by the said Standard Oil Company of the stock of the defendant or on account of the alleged agreements between the defendant and the said Standard Oil Company or on account of the alleged agreements between the defendant and the said

Standard Oil Company and the other corporations and persons mentioned in the said petition and said that the same were insufficient for the reason that it affirmatively appeared from the said petition that the alleged ownership of the stock of the de-125 fendant by the said Standard Oil Company existed at the time of and prior to the passage of the said statute of 1903 and that all of the alleged agreements and understandings were made and entered into prior to the passage of the said statute and for the reason that the said statute was intended to act prospectively only and if intended to apply to ownerships by one corporation of the stock of another corporation or to apply to agreements of the character set forth in the said petition it was only intended to apply to such ownerships of stock as should be acquired after the taking effect of the said statute and to such agreements as should be made or entered into after the taking effect of the said statute and if the said statute should be construed as having been intended by the Legislature to authorize the recovery against the defendant of the penalties provided for in the said statute on account of the continuance of the said alleged ownership of the stock by the said Standard Oil Company or on account of the performance by the defendant of any of the agreements so alleged to have been made prior to the taking effect of the said statute such statute so construed would be violative of the said Constitution in that it would be retroactive in its effect and impair the obligations of contracts and deny to the defendant the equal protection of the laws and would take the property of the defendant without due process of law and of this the defendant prayed judgment of the Court. And the said exception being overruled the defendant was by the said judgment made liable to the penalties imposed by the said statute of 1903 for and on account of the acts of the Standard Oil Company in acquiring the said stock of the old Waters-Pierce Company before the passage of the said statute of 1903 and continuing afterwards to hold the same and taking a corresponding majority of the shares or the beneficial interest in such majority of the shares of the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company issued to the said Standard Oil Company for its interest in the old Waters-Pierce Company in which acts of the said Standard Oil Company the defendant had no part and for and on account of the alleged agreements and understandings between the old Waters-Pierce Company and the said Standard Oil Company and the said other corporations and persons entered into be-
126 fore the passage of the said statute of 1903 to none of which agreements or understandings the defendant ever became a party or became in any way answerable therefor. And the defendant is thereby denied the equal protection of the laws and is deprived of its property without due process of law.

7. There is also manifest error in this that the Court in like manner overruled another of the said exceptions (No. 25) to the said petition whereby the defendant objected that each of the said statutes of 1899 and 1903 was so indefinite, vague and uncertain in its terms that it could not be ascertained by the language used what particular acts constituted an offense subjecting the offender to punishment as therein prescribed and for that reason a person could not know in advance of committing the act whether he was violating the law and that to subject the defendant to heavy penalties for an alleged violation thereof would result in the taking of the defendant's property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution. And the said exception being overruled the defendant is by the said judgment made liable to the penalties imposed by the said statutes of 1899 and 1903 respectively and is thereby deprived of its property without due process of law accordingly.

8. There is also manifest error in this that the Court in like manner overruled others of the said exceptions (Nos. 52 and 53) to the said petition whereby the defendant objected that the said statutes of 1899 and 1903 respectively were so indefinitely framed and of such doubtful construction that they could not be understood either from the language in which they were expressed or from some other written law of the state and by reason of their failure to designate an offense by the plain import of their words the infliction of the penalties prescribed by the said statute would be the taking of property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution. And the said exception being overruled the defendant is by the said judgment made liable to the penalties imposed by the said statutes of 1899 and 1903 respectively and is thereby deprived of its property without due process of law accordingly.

127 9. There is also manifest error in this that evidence having been adduced at the trial of the said cause that the Standard Oil Company from some time in the year 1882 owned a majority of the shares of the old Waters-Pierce Company down to the incorporation of the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company on the 29th May 1900 and that on or about the 24th September 1900 a majority of the shares of the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company which had up to that time been held by H. C. Pierce in trust for the said Standard Oil Company (the same having been so issued to him upon the formation of the defendant company on account of the interest of the said Standard Oil Company in the old Waters-Pierce Company) were transferred to the said Standard Oil Company by an indorsement of the certificates therefor in blank by the said H. C. Pierce without any evidence of the registration of any transfer of the same on the books of the defendant company until early in the year 1904 when the said Standard Oil Company caused the same to be transferred on the said books into the name of M. M. Van Beuren and evidence having been also adduced at the said trial that the old Waters-Pierce Company carried on its business throughout the whole of Texas and in certain other states and in Mexico and obtained its supplies of refined oil almost exclusively from the Standard Oil Company and that the said Standard Oil Company did not carry on such business in the said territory in which the old Waters-Pierce Company so carried on business and that the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company after acquiring the business of the old Waters Pierce Company as above mentioned carried on the said business in the same territory and in the same way without extending its business into other territory and that the said Standard Oil Company did not extend its business into the territory in which the defendant so carried on business the judge before whom the said cause was tried at the said trial although there was no other evidence of any such agreement or understanding between the defendant and the Standard Oil Company as next hereinafter mentioned or of any other act by the defendant in carrying any other such agreement or understanding into effect directed the jury (in paragraph VII of his charge) upon the said evidence that if they found that the de-

128 fendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company entered into or became a party to an agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company on June 1, 1900 to fix or regulate the price in Texas of oil refined from petroleum and if they further found that the defendant remained or continued to be a party to the said agreement or understanding if any and persisted in carrying the same out in Texas on June 1, 1900 or any subsequent date or dates prior to March 31, 1903 and that the oil with reference to which the said agreement or understanding was so made and carried out was the subject of local as distinguished from interstate commerce the jury should return a verdict for the state and thereby say that they found in favor of the state upon the issues submitted for their consideration in paragraph seven (VII) of the Court's charge and further instructed the jury that each day between May 31, 1900 and March 31, 1903 during which the defendant remained a party to the agreement or understanding therein mentioned would constitute a separate and distinct violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas. And the said judge also directed the jury that the said statute of 1899 was in force on May 31, 1900 and thenceforth until March 31, 1903 and that the said statute of 1903 became effective on March 31, 1903 and has since continued in force and that if the jury should convict the defendant of any violation or violations of the said statute of 1899 they should specify in their verdict the date or days for which it was so convicted and further specify therein that as a result of such conviction its permit to do business in Texas should be forfeited and the amount of money which should be adjudged against it as penalties for such violations fixing the same at not less than $200 or more than $5,000 per day for each day that they should find it had so violated the law. And the jury in pursuance of the said directions found for the plaintiff against the defendant on the issues submitted to them in the said paragraph (VII) of the judge's charge for each of the days between May 31, 1900 and March 31, 1903 stating the same in their verdict as being 1033 days and fixed the penalties for all the said days as hereinafter mentioned and further found that the permit of the defendant to do busi-129 ness in Texas should be canceled. By means whereof the jury found that any such agreement or understanding as above mentioned entered into between the old Waters-Pierce Company and the said Standard Oil Company became an agreement or understanding on the part of the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company with the said Standard Oil Company as soon as the defendant acquired the property and business of the old Waters-Pierce Company and conducted the said business in the same manner and in the same territory as the old Waters-Pierce Company had done without extending the said business into any other territory although the defendant had not otherwise than by its said acts entered into any such agreement or understanding and also that the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company having entered into such agreement or understanding as mentioned in the said paragraph of the judge's charge although not in the State of Texas and having persisted in carrying the same out in Texas on the 1st June, 1900, was guilty of a violation of the said law on every subsequent day including Sundays and holidays down to the 31st March, 1903, although it did not on any such subsequent day or did not upon some of such subsequent days do any act in Texas in or towards carrying out the said agreement or understanding but only remained a party thereto. And by the judgment upon the said verdict upon the issues submitted to the jury in the said paragraph (VII) of the judge's charge the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company is deprived of its property without due process of law.

10. There is also manifest error in this that upon the evidence mentioned in the last preceding paragraph without any other evidence or suggestion of such a combination or union as next hereafter mentioned the said judge also directed the jury (in paragraph VIII of his charge) that if they found that on June 1, 1900 or any date subsequent thereto and prior to March 31, 1903, the defendant had brought about or permitted any combination or union of its capital with the capital of the said Standard Oil Company whereby the price in Texas of such oil as mentioned in the said clause of the charge was sought to be fixed or regulated or would be 130 reasonably calculated to be fixed or regulated or whereby the trade in such oil in Texas was sought to be controlled or limited the jury should return a verdict for the state and thereby say that they found for the state upon the issues submitted for their consideration in paragraph eight (VIII) of the Court's charge and further directed the jury that if the defendant became a party to a pool of the character mentioned in that paragraph each day between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, that it remained a party to such pool would constitute a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas. And the jury in pursuance of the said directions found for the plaintiff against the defendant on the issues submitted to them in the said paragraph of the judge's charge for each of the days between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, stating the same in their verdict as being 1033 days and in pursuance of the said directions and the other directions hereinbefore mentioned fixed the penalties for the violations of law of which the defendant was convicted by their verdict upon the issues submitted to them in the two paragraphs seven (VII) and eight (VIII) of the judge's charge at $1, 549,500 and further found that the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be cancelled. By means whereof the jury found the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company guilty of having brought about or permitted such a combination or union of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company as above mentioned by means of the acts of the said Standard Oil Company in acquiring a majority of the shares of the old Waters-Pierce Company long before the passage of the said statute of 1899 and before the defendant came into existence and in holding the said shares until the defendant was incorporated and acquired the property and business of the old Waters-Pierce Company and then taking the beneficial interest in a corresponding majority of the shares of the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company for its interest in the old Waters-Pierce Company in which acts of the said Standard Oil Company the defendant had no part and although none of the said acts were done in the State of Texas and although no act was done by the defendant in Texas in pursuance of the supposed combination or union or for any of the supposed purposes thereof on some 131 or any of the days for which it was so convicted. And by the judgment upon the said verdict upon the last mentioned paragraph (VIII) of the judge's charge the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company is deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution and it was thereby decided that the said statute of 1899 was valid and not repugnant to the said Constitution whereas it ought to have been decided that the same so far as it had the effect so given to it was invalid and repugnant to the provision of the said Constitution forbidding the passage of any ex post fact- law by any state.

11. There is also manifest error in this that upon the evidence mentioned or referred to in the next preceding paragraph hereof without any other evidence or suggestion of any such combination as next hereinafter mentioned and although it was agreed by the parties at the said trial for the purposes of this case that the said Standard Oil Company had from a time long before the passage of the said statute of 1903 owned a majority of the shares of the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company the said judge also directed the jury (in paragraph IX of his charge) that if they found that the defendant entered into a combination of its capital with the capital of the said Standard Oil Company for the purpose of creating in Texas or which tended to create in Texas or carry out in Texas restrictions in the free pursuit in that state of the business of selling such oil as is mentioned in the said paragraph of the charge or to fix, maintain or increase the price of such oil in Texas, or to prevent or lessen competition in Texas in the sale of such oil, and that the defendant remained or was a party to and acted under such combination on March 31 1903 or any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907 the jury should return a verdict for the state and thereby say that they found for the state upon the issues submitted for their consideration in paragraph nine (IX) of the Court's charge and further directed the jury that if the defendant became a party to a trust of the character mentioned in that paragraph of the charge each day between March 30, 1903 and April 29, 1907 that it remained a party to and acted under such trust would constitute a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas and that if the jury should convict the defendant of any violations of the said
132 statute of 1903 they should specify in the verdict the date or days for which it was so convicted and further specify therein that as a result of such conviction its permit to do business in Texas should be forfeited and the sum of money that should be adjudged against it as a penalty for such violation fixing the sum at $50 per day for each day that they should convict it of having violated the said law. And the jury in pursuance of the said directions found for the plaintiff against the defendant on the issues submitted to them by the said paragraph of the judge's charge for each of the days between April 1, 1903 and April 29, 1907 stating the same in their verdict as being 1488 days and fixed the penalties for all the said days as hereinafter mentioned and further found that the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be cancelled. By means whereof the jury found the defendant, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company guilty of having entered into such a combination as last above mentioned by means of the acts of the said Standard Oil Company in acquiring the said majority of the shares of the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company long before the passage of the said statute of 1903 although none of the said acts were done in the State of Texas and although no act was done by the defendant in Texas in pursuance of the supposed combination or for any of the supposed purposes thereof on some or any of the days for which it was so convicted and although the defendant had no means of requiring or inducing the said Standard Oil Company to part with the said majority of shares or any part thereof.

12. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge also directed the jury (in paragraph X of his charge) that if they found that the direction of the affairs of the defendant corporation and the affairs of the said Standard Oil Company was under the same management and control on March 31, 1903 or any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907 and that they were placed under such management or control by their respectively authorized officers under such circumstances that such common management or control created or tended to create or carry out restrictions in the sale in Texas of such oil as is referred to in said paragraph of the 133 charge or to fix, maintain, or increase the price in Texas of such oil or to prevent or lessen in Texas the competition in the sale of such oil the jury should return a verdict for the State and thereby say that they found for the State on the issues submitted for their consideration in paragraph ten (X) of the Court's charge and further directed the jury that if the defendant entered into a monopoly of the character mentioned in that paragraph of the charge each day between March 30, 1903 and April 29, 1907 that it remained a party to such monopoly constituted a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas. And although there was no evidence that the direction of the affairs of the defendant and the said Standard Oil Company was after the passage of the said statute of 1903 brought under the same management or control or was under the same management or control on the 31st March 1903 when the said statute was passed or on the first or second or any subsequent day thereafter or that the said Standard Oil Company had any power to bring the direction of the affairs of the said two corporations under the same control or management until the said majority of the shares in the defendant corporation were transferred on its books in*to* the name of M. M. Van Beuren as hereinbefore mentioned in the year 1904 or that the said Standard Oil Company exercised any such power by doing so either before or after the same were so transferred or that any of the things supposed to have been done, had been done in Texas except carrying on business there as hereinbefore mentioned the jury in pursuance of the said direction of the judge found for the plaintiff against the defendant on the issues submitted to them by the said paragraph ten (X) of the judge's charge for each of the days between April 1, 1903 and April 29, 1907 stating the same in their verdict as being 1488 days and fixed the penalties for all the said days as hereinafter mentioned and further found that the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be cancelled. By means whereof the jury found the defendant, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company guilty of the offense of bringing the direction of its affairs under the same management and control as those of the said Standard Oil Company although it had had no part in doing so itself and although whatever was supposed to have been done to 134 bring the direction of the affairs of the said two corporations under the same management and control had not been done in Texas and had been done before the passage of the said statute of 1903 or had not been done on some of the days for which it was so convicted and was not in fact done at all.

13. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge also directed the jury (in paragraph XI of his charge) that if they found that the Standard Oil Company had on March 31st 1903 acquired a majority of the capital stock of the defendant, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and thereby effected a combination of the said corporations with the purpose and intention therein mentioned on the part of the managing officers and directors of the said Standard Oil Company the jury should return a verdict for the State and thereby say that they found in favor of the State upon the issues submitted for their consideration in paragraph eleven (XI) of the Court's charge and further directed the jury that each day between March 30, 1903 and April 29, 1907 that the defendant remained a party to such monopoly constituted a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas. And although at the said trial no evidence was adduced that the said Standard Oil Company acquired on or after the 31st March 1903 such a majority of the said capital stock or any shares necessary to make such majority or ever acquired any such shares within the State of Texas and it was agreed by the parties at the said trial that since a time long previous to the 31st March 1903 the said Standard Oil Company had owned more than a majority of the said capital stock the jury in pursuance of the said direction found for the plaintiff against the defendant upon the issues so submitted to them for each of the days between April 1, 1903 and April 29, 1907 stating the same in their verdict as being 1488 days and in pursuance of the said directions and the other directions hereinbefore mentioned fixed the penalties for the violations of law of which the defendant was convicted by their verdict upon the issues submitted to them in the three paragraphs, nine (IX), ten (X) and eleven (XI) of the judge's charge at $74,400 and further found that the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be cancelled. By means whereof the jury found the defendant, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company guilty of having effected a combination of itself and 135 the said Standard Oil Company solely by reason of the acts of the said Standard Oil Company done long before the passage of the said statute of 1903 in acquiring the said majority of the shares of the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company although none of the said acts were done in the State of Texas and although no act was done by the defendant in Texas in pursuance of the supposed combination or for giving effect to the supposed purpose or intention of the managing officers of the said Standard Oil Company on some or any of the days for which the defendant was so convicted. And by the judgment upon the said verdict upon the issues submitted to the jury in the three last mentioned paragraphs of the judge's charge respectively the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company is deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution and it was thereby decided that the said statute of 1903 was valid and not repugnant to the said Constitution whereas it ought to have been decided that the same so far as it had the effect so given to it was invalid and repugnant to the provisions of the said Constitution forbidding the passage of any ex post facto law by any state.

14. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge also declared his opinion to the jury (in paragraph XI of his charge) that if the said Standard Oil Company acquired a majority of the capital stock of the defendant the Waters-Pierce Oil Company a combination of the said two corporations would be thereby effected and with that direction he left the said issues to the jury whereas a combination of the said two corporations would not be thereby effected. And the jury in pursuance of the said direction found for the plaintiff against the defendant upon each of the issues submitted to them respectively in the four paragraphs (eight (VIII), nine (IX), ten (X) and eleven (XI) of the judge's charge and thereby found the defendant guilty of having effected such combination solely by reason of the acts of the said Standard Oil Company in acquiring the said majority of shares although none of the said acts were done in the State of Texas and although no act was done by the defendant in Texas in pursuance of the supposed combination or for giving effect to any supposed purpose or intention thereof on some 136 or any of the days for which the defendant was so convicted. And by the judgment upon the said verdict upon the issues submitted to the jury in the four last mentioned paragraphs of the judge's charge respectively the defendant the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company is punished for an act which it could not control and an offense that it could not commit and is thereby deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provision of the said Constitution.

15. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge upon the trial of the said cause arbitrarily and without any regard to the rules of law admitted evidence of (1) the incorporation of the Standard Oil Company of Ohio on or about the 10th January 1870, (2) the incorporation of the old Waters-Pierce Company in Missouri on the 1st May 1878 and the increase of its capital on the 13th June

1882, (3) the agreement of the 2nd January 1882 by which the Standard Oil Trust was formed and to which the old Waters-Pierce Company or the defendant, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company or H. C. Pierce, who owned about two-fifths of the shares in these two companies never became a party (4) the incorporation of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey herein referred to as the Standard Oil Company on the 1st August 1882, (5) the ownership by the Standard Oil Company of the majority of the shares of several other companies as stated in the agreement of counsel designated Stipulation No. 1 (6) the judgment in favor of the State of Texas against the old Waters-Pierce Company on the 15th June 1897 for the forfeiture of its permit to do business in Texas which judgment was affirmed by this Court on or about the 19th March 1900 (177 U. S. 28) and also (7) the testimony of several witnesses relating to the doings and agreements of the agents of corporations other than the defendant and of the agents of the old Waters-Pierce Company prior to the incorporation of the defendant, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and prior to the 1st June 1900 and to the doings and agreements of the defendant's agents and the agents of other corporations outside the State of Texas and to the doings and agreements of individuals both prior and subsequent to the 1st June 1900 and both outside and within the State of Texas (to all of which evidence and testimony respectively counsel for the defendant duly 137 objected at the trial as appears by the record) And although there was not any other evidence whatever of an agreement at any time between the defendant or the governing officers of the defendant and any other persons whatever relating to the management of the defendant's business, yet the said judge arbitrarily and without any regard to the rules of law and intending that the jury should identify the defendant with the old Waters-Pierce Company as charged in the petition of the State and should convict the defendant of violations of the said anti-trust laws upon the issues submitted to them in the five paragraphs last above mentioned of the judge's charge without any legal evidence of any such violation and should for that purpose consider irrelevant evidence under color of first finding a conspiracy of which there was no evidence whatever overruled all the objections of the defendant to the admission of the said evidence and directed the jury (in the division V of his charge) that if they found from the other evidence in the case independent of all declarations or statements made by any person or persons except their evidence given as witnesses personally or by deposition that on June 1, 1900 there was formed or existed an agreement between the governing officers of the defendant and the governing officers of any of the other corporations alleged in the State's petition to be co-conspirators with the defendant relating to the management of the defendant's business or between the governing officers of the defendant and any of the individuals alleged in the State's petition to be co-conspirators with the defendant relating to the management of the defendant's business then the jury might consider for what, if anything, they thought it worth such acts or declarations of all the parties to the said agreement and such acts and declarations of their authorized agents if any as were done or made during the existence of such agreement and in furtherance of its execution for the purpose of determining the character of such agreement and whether or not it contemplated a violation by the defendant of the anti-trust laws of Texas, but that none of the said evidence could be considered by the jury for any other purpose whatever and none of it could be so considered by the jury against the defendant for the said purposes except such of it, if any, as they should think proper to be considered when tested by the rules so stated relating to its competency. And also directed the jury (in division XIII of 138 his charge) that they might consider so far as it tended to establish some one or more of the issues submitted for their consideration in the said five paragraphs (VII to XI) of his charge the evidence introduced before them that the defendant had given rebates and discounts in the course of its dealings and that the defendant had made contracts and entered into understandings other than those submitted for their consideration in the said five paragraphs of the charge and also the evidence introduced before them of the general course of dealings of the defendant in Texas and elsewhere including some of its business methods in meeting competition although he directed them that none of the evidence showed or tended to show any violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas unless it tended to establish some one or more of the said issues so submitted for their consideration. And the verdict was accordingly given for the State upon the said issues submitted to the jury whereas according to due process of law it ought to have been given for the defendant. And upon the appeal of the defendant the Court of Civil Appeals in affirming the said judgment unreasonably and wilfully disregarded the question thereby raised under the said Constitution as well as the rules of evidence according to the usage and practice prevailing in Texas. And the defendant is thereby deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

16. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge at the trial refused to direct the jury as requested by the defendant (Special Charges refused No. 5) as follows:

"You are instructed that inasmuch as the defendant is a corporation incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Missouri the question of the legality of the ownership of a majority of its stock by the Standard Oil Company is not an issue in this case and in this connection you are further instructed that the anti-trust laws of Texas being designated merely to prohibit unlawful combinations or agreements having the purpose of fixing and regulating prices and other forbidden purposes denounced by such laws could not be violated by the mere ownership by the Standard Oil Company of a majority of the stock of the defendant."

139 Whereas the said direction ought to have been given so that the jury might not convict the defendant of violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas merely on account of the acts of the Standard Oil Company in owning in another state a majority of the stock of the defendant. And the verdict having been given for the State, the defendant is by reason of the said refusal deprived of its property by the said judgment without due process of law, contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

17. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge at the trial refused to direct the jury as requested by the defendant (Special Charges refused No. 7) as follows:

"You are instructed that it is admitted by the defendant that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey acquired a majority of the shares of stock of the defendant company on or about the 4th day of September 1900 and thereafter continued to own the same. Therefore the Court further instructs the jury that the acquiring and owning of said shares of stock by said Standard Oil Company did not constitute a violation of the act approved March 31st 1903 even though the jury may believe that the said Standard Oil Company voted said shares of stock at the meeting of the stockholders of the defendant company for the election of director of said defendant company."

And there is also manifest error in this that the said judge also refused to direct the jury as requested by the defendant (Special Charge refused No. 24).

"You are instructed that since the Standard Oil Company acquired a majority of the stock of the defendant prior to the enactment of the anti-trust act of 1903 and since the defendant company being a corporation created by the laws of Missouri the acquisition of such stock by the Standard Oil Company cannot be inquired into by the courts of Texas but must be in all things treated as legal and valid the inhibition of the anti-trust act of 1903 against any corporation's acquiring the shares of stock of any other corporation for the purpose of preventing or lessening competition or tending to affect or lessen competition can have no application to this case."

140 Whereas the said directions ought respectively to have been given so that the jury might not convict the defendant of violation of the said statute of 1903 upon any of the three issues submitted to them as aforesaid in the paragraphs nine (IX), ten (X) and eleven (XI) of the judge's charge on account of the acts of the Standard Oil Company in acquiring the said majority of shares before the passage of the said statute of 1903. And the verdict having been given for the State, the defendant is by reason of the said refusals deprived of its property by the said judgment without due process of law and subjected to the said penalties by virtue of an ex post facto law passed by the state of Texas contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

18. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge at the trial refused to direct the jury as requested by the defendant (Special Charges refused No. 9) as follows:

"You are instructed that it is not a violation of the laws of the State of Texas and has not been a violation of such laws or any laws at any time since May 31st, 1900 for the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey or any other person or corporation to own a part of the stock of the defendant Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and you will therefore disregard any evidence that has been introduced before you upon this subject."

Whereas the said direction ought to have been given so that the jury might not convict the defendant of violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas merely on account of the acts of the Standard Oil Company in owning in another state a majority of the stock of the defendant. And the verdict having been given for the State, the defendant is by reason of the said refusal deprived of its property by the said judgment without due process of law, contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

19. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge at the trial refused to direct the jury as requested by the defendant (Special Charges No. 13) as follows:

"You are instructed that in view of the fact that the Standard Oil Trust Agreement of Jánuary 2nd 1882 and the supplemental 141 agreement thereto of January 4th 1882 were executed long prior to the creation of the defendant, and there is no evidence showing that the defendant ever adopted said agreement you will not consider the execution of said agreement or the contents of the same as in any wise effecting this defendant."

Whereas the said direction ought to have been given so that the jury might not convict the defendant of violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas on account of this agreement between other persons made long before the defendant came into existence and long before the passage of the said anti-trust laws. And the verdict having been given for the State, the defendant is by reason of the said refusal deprived of its property by the said judgment without due process of law, contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

20. There is also manifest error in this that the penalties of $1,549,500 and $74,400 assessed by the jury are respectively so plainly excessive that the defendant is thereby deprived of its property without due process of law.

21. There is also manifest error in this that the Court upon hearing the said exceptions of the defendant to the said petition in manner aforesaid overruled others of the said exceptions (Nos. 28 and 38) whereby the defendant objected that the recovery of penalties under the said statutes respectively for acts done more than two years before the commencement of the said action was barred by article 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of Texas. And in this that the Court also overruled in like manner others of the said exceptions (Nos. 30, 31, 40, 41) whereby the defendant objected respectively that if the said limitation was not available to it the defendant would be denied the equal protection of the laws contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution and that the said statutes of 1899 and 1903 would respectively be invalid by reason thereof. And in this that the Court also in like manner overruled others of the said exceptions (Nos. 32 and 42) whereby the defendant objected that the recovery of the said penalties for acts done more than two years before the commencement of the said action was barred by article 3354 of the Revised Statutes of Texas. And in this jected that if the said limitation was not available to it the defendant was denied the equal protection of the laws, contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution and that the said statutes of 1899 and 1903 were invalid respectively by reason thereof. And in this that the Court also in like manner overruled others of the said exceptions (Nos. 35 and 37) whereby the defendant objected respectively that the recovery of penalties under the said statute of 1899 for acts done more than four years before the commencement of the said action was barred by article 3358 of the said Revised Statutes and that if the said limitation was not available to it the defendant was denied the equal protection of the laws contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution. And in this that the judge also refused with like effect and consequences to direct the jury as requested by the defendant in the Special Charges refused Nos. 1, 2, and 3 respectively as regards the said limitations which were duly pleaded in the defendant's answer.

22. There is also a manifest error in this that the Court in like manner overruled another of the said exceptions (No. 10) to the said petition whereby the defendant objected that the parts thereof which seek to hold the defendant liable to penalties and a forfeiture of its said permit because of the alleged agreement or understanding whereby in consideration of the defendant purchasing all of its supplies from the said Standard Oil Company, the said Standard Oil Company agreed that the defendant should be permitted to sell its products in Texas without competition or interference by the said Standard Oil Company because it appears from the petition that the said Standard Oil Company was and is a citizen of New Jersey and never obtained a permit to do business in Texas and it is not alleged that it ever contemplated entering Texas to do business therein or could have obtained a permit so to do and therefore an agreement such as alleged if made could not be construed as violating any laws of Texas without giving to such laws an extra-territorial effect and operation binding upon citizens of other states and with respect to inter-state commerce and in violation of the said Constitution and the defendant moved the Court to strike 143 out the the said allegations with respect to the said alleged agreement and understanding. And the said exception being overruled, the defendant is by the said judgment made liable to the penalties imposed by the said laws on account of the said alleged agreement or understanding contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution relating to commerce among the several states and is so deprived of its property without due process of law.

23. There is also manifest error in this that the said judge at the trial refused to direct the jury as requested by the defendant (Special Charges refused No. 23) as follows:

"You are instructed that if you believe from the evidence that the defendant has entered into any agreement by which it has bound itself to transact business within a certain territory in the United States, including the State of Texas, and that in pursuance of such agreement the defendant has been and is transacting business in the State of Texas, the making of such agreement and the transaction of business thereunder by the defendant cannot be considered as in violation of the Anti-Trust Laws of Texas, and in this connection you are instructed that the defendant always had and now has the right to confine its business operations to any territory desired by it and that the fact that the defendant has not extended its operations to a broader field would not render the defendant guilty of violating the Anti-Trust Laws of Texas."

Whereas the said direction ought to have been given so that the jury might not convict the defendant of violation of the said laws by reason of any such agreement or understanding as alleged as aforesaid by which the said Standard Oil Company agreed that the defendant should be permitted to sell its products in Texas without competition or interference by the said Standard Oil Company in consideration of the defendant purchasing all its supplies from the said Standard Oil Company, and which agreement or understanding related to commerce among the several states. And the verdict having been given for the State the defendant is by the said judgment deprived of its property without due process on account of statutes passed by the State of Texas regulating commerce
144 among the several states contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution in that behalf.

24. There was also manifest error in this that the said judge at the said trial arbitrarily and without any regard to the rules of law and for the purpose of exciting and inflaming the prejudices of the jury against the defendant admitted in evidence against the objection of the defendant proof of the Standard Oil Trust agreement of 1882 in the plaintiff's petition set out which was made many years before the incorporation of the defendant and to which it was admitted that the defendant never became a party. And in this that the said judge in like manner admitted in evidence the paragraphs (3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th) of the agreement of counsel called Stipulation No. 1 setting out subject to all legal objections that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey owned a majority of the shares of the companies therein mentioned by the names of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, New York and Kentucky respectively and of the Continental Oil Company and the Republic Oil Company at the times and in the manner therein mentioned and that the said companies did not transact any business in Texas, all of which were matters in which the defendant was in no way concerned and had no possible relation to any of the questions involved in this case. And also in this that the said judge in like manner admitted in evidence that the defendant had given rebates and discounts to certain dealers and had sold oil at different prices in different localities in Texas, which evidence was irrelevant to all the issues in the case. And also in this that the said judge in like manner admitted in evidence the testimony of the witness C. W. Cahoon to the effect that at points in Texas where there was competition the defendant sometimes sold oils at less than at points where there was no competition, which testimony had no tendency to show any violation of the laws of Texas and could have no effect except to prejudice the jury. And also in this that the said judge in like manner admitted in evidence the testimony of the said C. W. Cahoon to the effect that for about 60 days in 1906 certain brands of oil of grades inferior to that known as Eupion Oil had been sold by the defendant 145 as Eupion oil, which evidence was frivolous and irrelevant.

And also in this that the said judge in like manner admitted in evidence the testimony of the witness, A. W. Clem to the effect that the old Waters-Pierce Company in 1891 cut the prices of oil at Seymour and other places in Texas and also that the old Waters-Pierce Company in 1894 after it bought out the business of the same witness advanced the selling price of oil from 9½ cents to 22 cents per gallon, which testimony did not relate in any way to the defendant or its doings or to any issue involved in this case. And in this that the said judge in like manner admitted in evidence the testimony of the witness Royer Campbell to the effect that in 1894 when he quit buying from the old Waters-Pierce Company and bought from other persons in San Antonio, the old Waters-Pierce Company immediately cut the price of oil from 16 or 17 cents to 8 and 10 cents per gallon and also his testimony as to the character of warfare and competition that the old Waters-Pierce Company carried on with him in 1894, which evidence did not relate in any way to the defendant or anything in question in this case. And the said judge permitted the jury to consider all the said evidence so admitted so far as it might seem to establish any of the said issues submitted for their consideration. And by the admission of the said several pieces of evidence respectively, the prejudices of the jury were excited and inflamed against the defendant and their attention was diverted from the true issues in the case and the defendant was prevented from having a trial of the said issues according to the due course of law. And by the judgment upon the verdict upon the issues submitted to the jury as aforesaid, the defendant is deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

25. There is also manifest error in this that the Court appointed a receiver of the property and assets of the defendant and the bond of such receiver was received and approved as appears by the said record after the judgment given upon the said verdict was suspended by the proceedings by way of appeal on the part of the defendant from the said judgment although the Court had no authority to appoint such receiver otherwise than as a consequence of the 146 said judgment and for the purpose of carrying the same into effect. And the defendant was thereby deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

26. There is also manifest error in this that after the judgment given upon the said verdict and after notice of appeal therefrom by the defendant according to law the Court acting under color of the Texas statute of 1907 c. 87 but arbitrarily and wilfully disregarding its provisions and purposes appointed the said receiver for the purpose of depriving the defendant of its property and business and not for any purpose for which the appointment of a receiver was authorized by the said statute and on the alleged ground that the said judgment had been rendered against the defendant for violation of the said anti-trust laws and that newspaper interviews with the counsel for the defendant had been brought to the attention of the Court in which the said counsel had declared the purpose of the defendant to appeal from the said judgment and to continue to carry on its business in the same manner as theretofore and without any evidence being submitted to the Court in connection with the application for the appointment of such receiver. And the Court disregarding the provisions of the said statute and the due course of law made the said appointment of a receiver not because any interest of the state seemed to require such action, but for the pretended purpose of preventing the defendant from a continued violation of the law, although the Court knew that the defendant had appealed from the said judgment and denied any violation on its part of the said anti-trust laws and although the Court assumed, as declared by the Court at the time of such appointment, that the defendant would file its proper supersedeas bond upon the said appeal and had a right to do so within the time provided by law all of which appears by the bill of exceptions of the defendant as matters connected with the appointment of the receiver, which bill of exceptions was signed and allowed by the judge who held the said Court at the time of the said proceedings. And the defendant by the appointment of the said receiver for such purpose and in such circumstances is deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

147 27. There is also manifest error in this that the Court decided that the said statute of 1907 under color of which the said receiver was so appointed was valid and not repugnant to the said Constitution although the statute was passed after the commencement of the said action and provided that when any law of the said state including any of the said Anti-Trust Laws for the violation of which fines or penalties or forfeitures were provided had been theretofore violated or should be violated before the taking effect of the said statute by any corporation the said state should have a lien to secure the payment of such fine penalties and costs from the time when the said statute took effect on all property of such corporation within the said state or which should thereafter become or be brought within the said state and also provided for the appointment of a receiver for such corporation in the cases therein mentioned but did not provide for any lien or authorize the appointment of a receiver in the case of a violation of any of the said laws by any person other than a corporation. Whereas it ought to have been decided that the said statute was invalid and repugnant to the provisions of the said Constitution forbidding the passage of any ex post facto law by any state and was also invalid because the defendant was thereby denied the equal protection of the laws and deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

28. There is also manifest error in this that after judgment was improperly given upon the said verdict as aforesaid for the plaintiff the court appointed a receiver of the property and assets of the defendant, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company as specified in the orders appointing a receiver whereas the Court ought not to have appointed such receiver. And by the appointment of such receiver, the defendant is deprived of its property without due process of law contrary to the provisions of the said Constitution.

And the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company prays that the said judgment and order and the judgment affirming the same respectively for the errors aforesaid and others in the record and proceedings aforesaid may be reversed, annulled and altogether held 148 for nothing and that it may be restored to all things which it hath lost by occasion of the said judgment and order and the affirmance thereof as aforesaid.

[Seal of the Supreme Court of the United States.]

The President of the United States of America to the Honorable the Judges of the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Judicial District of Texas, Greeting:

Because in the record and proceedings, as also in the rendition of the judgment of a plea which is in the said Court of Civil Appeals before you, or some of you, being the highest court of law or equity of the said State in which a decision could be had in the said suit between the Waters-Pierce Oil Company incorporated under the laws of Missouri, Appellant and the State of Texas Appellee which judgment affirmed a judgment of the District Court of Travis County appointing a receiver after a judgment upon a verdict against the Appellant being cause No. 4213 (Receivership Proceeding) in the said Court of Civil Appeals wherein was drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision was against their validity; or wherein was drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under said State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision was in favor of such their validity; or wherein was drawn in question the construction of a clause of the Constitution, or of a treaty, or statute of, or commission held under the United States, and the decision was against the title, right, privilege, or exemption specially set up or claimed under such clause of the said Constitution, treaty, statute, or commission; a manifest error hath happened to the great damage of the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company as by its complaint appears. We being willing that error, if any hath been, should be duly corrected, and full and speedy justice done to the parties aforesaid in this behalf, do command you, if judgment be therein given, that then under your seal, distinctly and openly, you send the record and proceedings aforesaid, 150 with all things concerning the same, to the Supreme Court of the United States, together with this writ, so that you have the same in the said Supreme Court at Washington within thirty days from the date hereof, that the record and proceedings aforesaid being inspected, the said Supreme Court may cause further to be done therein to correct that error, what of right, and according to the laws and customs of the United States, should be done.

Witness the Honorable Melville W. Fuller, Chief Justice of the United States, the 27th day of March in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eight.

Copy of Writ of Error lodged for the defendant in error. Filed in Court of Civil Appeals 3rd Supreme Judicial District, Austin, Texas, Mar. 30, 1908.

R. H. CONNERLY, Clerk.

151 Know all men by these presents, That we, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, incorporated under the laws of Missouri, as principal, and the American Surety Company of New York incorporated under the laws of New York, as sureties, are held and firmly bound unto the State of Texas in the full and just sum of one thousand dollars, to be paid to the said State of Texas or its certain attorney, or assigns: to which payment, well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves, our heirs, executors, and administrators, jointly and severally, by these presents. Sealed with our seals and dated this twenty-seventh day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eight.

Whereas, lately at a Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Judicial District of Texas in a suit pending in said Court, between the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company Appellant and the State of Texas Appellee being cause No. 4213 (Receivership Proceeding) in the said Court a judgment was rendered against the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company affirming a judgment of the District Court of Travis County appointing a receiver after a judgment upon a verdict against the said Appellant. And the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company having obtained a writ of error and filed a copy thereof in the Clerk's Office of the said Court to reverse the judgment in the aforesaid suit, and a citation directed to the said State of Texas citing and admonishing it to be and appear at a Supreme Court of the United States, at Washington, within thirty days from the date thereof.

Now, the condition of the above obligation is such, That if the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company shall prosecute the said writ of error to effect, and answer all damages and costs if it fail to make its plea good, then the above obligation to be void; else to remain in full force and virtue.

Endorsed on cover: File No. 21,131. Texas court of civil appeals, third supreme judicial district. Term No. 728. The Waters-Pierce Oil Company, plaintiff in error, vs. The State of Texas. Filed April 23d, 1908. File No. 21,131.

MAIN CASE.

WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY,
Plaintiff in Error,
vs.
THE STATE OF TEXAS,
Defendant in Error.

SUIT PENDING IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

And now comes the State of Texas and moves the court to advance this cause and set the same down for submission at as early a date as is possible at the October term, 1908, and shows:

First. That this was a suit brought in the State court of Texas by the State of Texas against the Waters-Pierce Oil Company for alleged violation of two separate statutes of the State of Texas known as the Anti-trust Acts of 1899 and 1903, the purpose of the suit being to recover penalties and forfeit the permit of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to do business in Texas, that company being a Missouri corporation. A trial before the court and jury resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the State, adjudging that the defendant, Waters-Pierce Oil Company, had been guilty of a violation of the law of the State of Texas for each and every day for seven years, and assessing as penalties an aggregate sum of $1,623,900, and a judgment prohibiting the Waters-Pierce Oil Company from doing business in the State of Texas, except an interstate business.

This judgment was affirmed by the Court of Civil Appeals of the State of Texas upon regular hearing, and a writ of error denied by the Supreme Court of the State, thus making the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals final, and writ of error was sued out to the Court of Civil Appeals from this court, and it is now here for revision and correction.

Second. The State of Texas would show that the plaintiff in error is attacking the constitutionality of both of the above mentioned anti-trust acts, and, as there are a great many suits now pending in the State courts involving the same question, it is of the utmost importance to the State of Texas and the public at large, as well as to the persons doing business in the State of Texas, to know whether or not these statutes are unconstitutional because of their alleged repugnance to the Constitution of the United States.

Third. The State of Texas is also entitled to have as speedy a determination of the matter as the convenience of this court will permit, because of the matters and things involved in the controversy.

Wherefore, the defendant in error respectfully requests this court to advance this cause and set the same for submission at as early a date as is convenient and practicable to the court at its October term, 1908.

RECEIVERSHIP CASE.

WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY,
Plaintiff in Error,
vs.
THE STATE OF TEXAS,
Defendant in Error.

SUIT PENDING IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

And now comes the defendant in error, the State of Texas, and moves the court, in the event that the court should overrule the motion to dismiss the writ of error made in this case by the defendant in error, to advance this cause and set the same for submission at as early a date as is practicable, and thereupon shows:

First. That a suit was brought by the State of Texas against the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, a Missouri corporation, for alleged violation of the anti-trust laws of the State of Texas, known as the Act of 1899 and the Act of 1903, the purpose of the suit being to recover penalties and to forfeit the permit of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to do business in the State. A trial and judgment before a jury resulted in a finding that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had violated several sections of each of said acts, and had violated the law therein for each and every day for seven years, being the whole period of time since its admission to the State, and resulting in penalties aggregating the sum of $1,623,900. Immediately upon the rendition of this judgment, the State filed an application for a receiver for all the property of the corporation situated within the State of Texas, and the court granted said application and appointed a receiver and directed him to take charge of all of the property, but permitted the defendant to supersede said judgment by giving a bond in the sum of $100,000. The judgment of the trial court was affirmed by the Court of Civil Appeals of the State of Texas, to which an appeal was taken by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and a writ of er[illegible] refused by the Supreme Court of the State, thus making final the [illegible]ment that had been rendered appointing a receiver, and the case was brought here on a writ of error sued out by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to the Court of Civil Appeals of Texas.

Second. The plaintiff in error questions the validity of several of the statutes of the State of Texas, and says the same are repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, and as these statutes were upheld by the courts of the State of Texas and are laws now in force under which the State of Texas and its citizens and inhabitants are doing business, it is of the utmost importance for the question to be finally determined whether or not they are valid laws, so that the State of Texas and the public generally may know whether or not such laws should be respected and obeyed.

Wherefore, defendant in error prays that this cause may be advanced and set for submission at as early a date as is practicable and convenient for this court.

R. V. DAVIDSON,
Attorney General.

Assistant Attorney General.

Supreme Court of the United States,

OCTOBER TERM, 1908.

No. 359.

WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR,

vs.

STATE OF TEXAS, DEFENDANT IN ERROR.

MOTION TO DISMISS OR TO AFFIRM.

And now comes the State of Texas, defendant in error in the above entitled and numbered cause, and moves this court to dismiss the writ of error sued out from this court to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District of the State of Texas, for the reason that there is no substantial Federal question involved in this controversy as is apparent from the record and proceedings in this case.

Second.—In the event said motion to dismiss is overruled, then the State of Texas, defendant in error, respectfully moves this court to affirm the decision of the Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas, because it is apparent from the record that if there is the color of a Federal question in the case it is wholly frivolous and without merit.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT.

As is apparent from the record in this cause, the plaintiff in error was prosecuted by the State of Texas for violations of the anti-trust laws of the State of Texas, there being two separate and distinct acts of the Legislature upon which such prosecution was based, one being known as the Act of 1899 and the other the Act of 1903. The plaintiff in error is a Missouri corporation and received a permit to do business in the State of Texas for a period of ten years from the 31st day of May, 1900, to the 31st day of May, 1910.

Such portions of the Acts of 1899 and 1903 as are necessary to be considered are as follows:

Sections 1, 2, 5 and 7 of the Act of 1899:

"Section 1. Any corporation organized under the laws of this or any other State or country, and transacting or conducting any kind of business in this State, or any partnership, or individual, or other association of persons whatsoever, who shall create, enter into, become a member of or a party to any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding with any other corporation, partnership, individual or any other person or association of persons, to regulate or fix the price of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever, or the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm, or to maintain said price when so regulated or fixed, or shall enter into, become a member of or a party to any pool, agreement, combination, contract, association or confederation to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever, or the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning, storm, cyclone, tornado, or any other kind of policy issued by any corporation, partnership, individual, or association of persons aforesaid, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and to be subject to the penalties as provided by this act.

"Sec. 2. A 'monopoly' is any union or combination or consolidation or affiliation of capital, credit, property, assets, trade, custom, skill, or acts, or of any other valuable thing or possession, by or between persons, firms or corporations, or association of persons, firms or corporations, whereby any one of the purposes or objects mentioned in this act is accomplished or sought to be accomplished, or whereby any one or more of said purposes are promoted or attempted to be executed or carried out, or whereby the several results described herein are reasonably calculated to be produced; and a 'monopoly,' as thus defined and contemplated, includes not merely such combinations by and between two or more persons, firms or corporations acting for themselves, but is especially defined and intended to include all aggregations, amalgamations, affiliations, consolidations or incorporations of capital, skill, credit, assets, property, custom, trade or other valuable thing or possession, whether effected by the ordinary methods of partnership or by actual union under the legal form of a corporation or an incorporated body resulting from the union of one or more distinct firms or corporations, or by the purchase, acquisition or control of shares or certificates of stock or bonds, or other corporate property or franchises, and all corporations or partnerships that have been or may be created by the consolidation or amalgamation of the separate capital, stock, bonds, assets, credit, properties, custom, trade or corporate or firm belongings of two or more firms or corporations or companies are especially declared to constitute monopolies within the meaning of this act, if so created or entered into for any one or more of the purposes named in this act; and a 'monopoly,' as defined in this section, is hereby declared to be unlawful and against public policy, and any and all persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons engaged therein shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and shall be subject to the penalties prescribed in this act.

"Sec. 5. Any person, partnership, firm or association, or any representative or agent thereof, or any corporation or company, or any officer, representative or agent thereof, violating any of the provisions of this act shall forfeit not less than two hundred dollars nor more than five thousand dollars for every such offense, and each day such person, corporation, partnership or association shall continue to do so shall be a separate offense, the panalties in such cases to be recovered by an action in the name of the State, at the relation of the Attorney General or the district or county attorney; the moneys thus collected to go into the State treasury, and to become a part of the general fund, except as hereinafter provided.

"Sec. 7. Any corporation created or organized by or under the laws of this State, which shall violate any of the provisions of the preceding sections of this act, shall thereby forfeit its corporate rights and franchises; and its corporate existence shall, upon proper proof being made thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction in the State, be by the court declared forfeited, void and of non-effect, and shall thereupon cease and determine; and any corporation created or organized by or under the law of any other State or country, which shall violate any of the provisions of the preceding sections of this act shall thereby forfeit its right and privilege thereafter to do any business in this State, and upon proper proof being made thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction in the State, its rights and privileges to do business in this State shall be declared forfeited; and in all proceedings to have such forfeiture declared, proof that any person who has been acting as agent of such foreign corporation in transacting its business in this State, has been, while acting as such agent, and in the name, behalf, or interest of such foreign corporation, violating any provisions of the preceding sections of this act, shall be received as prima facie proof of the act of the corporation itself; and it shall be the duty of the clerk of said court to certify the decree thereof to the Secretary of State, and if it be an insurance company, to the Commissioner of Insurance, Statistics and History of the State, who shall take notice and be governed thereby as to the corporate powers and rights of said corporation."

Sections 1, 2, 3, 8, 11 and 17 of the Act of 1903:

"Section 1. That a trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons, or either two or more of them for either, any, or all of the following purposes:

"1. To create or which may tend to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce or aids to commerce or in the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this State.

"2. To fix, maintain, increase or reduce the price of merchandise, produce, or commodities, or the cost of insurance, or of the preparation of any product for maket or transportation.

"3. To prevent or lessen competition in the manufacture, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or commodities, or the business of insurance, or to prevent or lessen competition in aids to commerce, or in the preparation of any product for market or transportation.

"4. To fix or maintain any standard or figure whereby the price of any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce, or the cost of transportation, or insurance, or the preparation of any product for market or transportation, shall be in any manner affected, controlled or established.

"5. To make, enter into, maintain, execute or carry out any contract, obligation or agreement by which the parties thereto bind, or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of, transport or to prepare for market or transportation any article or commodity, or to make any contract of insurance at a price below a common standard or figure, or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article or commodity or charge for transportation or insurance, or the cost of the preparation of any product for market or transportation at a fixed or graded figure, or by which they shall in any manner affect or maintain the price of any commodity or article or the cost of transportation or insurance or the cost of the preparation of any product for market or transportation between them or themselves and others, to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity or business of transportation or insurance or the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or by which they shall agree to pool, combine or unite any interest they may have in connection with the sale or purchase of any article or commodity or charge for transportation or insurance or charge for the preparation of any product for market or transportation whereby its price or such charge might be in any manner affected.

"6. To regulate, fix or limit the output of any article or commodity which may be manufactured, mined, produced or sold, or the amount of insurance which may be undertaken, or the amount of work that may be done in the preparation of any product for market or transportation.

"7. To abstain from engaging in or continuing business or from the purchase or sale of merchandise, produce or commodities partially or entirely within the State of Texas, or any portion thereof.

"Sec. 2. That a monopoly is a combination or consolidation of two or more corporations when effected in either of the following methods:

"1. When the direction of the affairs of two or more corporations is in any manner brought under the same management or control for the purpose of producing, or where such common management or control tends to create a trust as defined in the first section of this act.

"2. Where any corporation acquires the shares or certificates of stock or bonds, franchise or other rights, or the physical properties, or any part thereof, of any other corporation or corporations, for the purpose of preventing or lessening, or where the effect of such acquisition tends to affect or lessen competition, whether such acquisition is accomplished directly or through the instrumentality of trustees or otherwise.

"Sec. 3. That either or any of the following acts shall constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade:

"1. Where any two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons who are engaged in buying or selling any article of merchandise, produce or any commodity, enter into an agreement or understanding to refuse to buy from or sell to any other person, firm, corporation, or association of persons any article of merchandise, produce or commodity.

"2. Where any two or more persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons shall agree to boycott or threaten to refuse to buy from or sell to any person, firm, corporation or association of persons for buying from or selling to any other person, firm, corporation or association of persons.

"Sec. 8. Every foreign corporation violating any of the provisions of this act is hereby denied the right, and is prohibited from doing any business within this State, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to enforce this provision by injunction or other proceedings in the district court of Travis county, in the name of the State of Texas.

"Sec. 11. Each and every firm, person, corporation or association of persons who shall in any manner violate any of the provisions of this act shall for each and every day that such violation shall be committed or continued, forfeit and pay the sum of fifty dollars, which may be recovered in the name of the State of Texas in any county where the offense is committed or where either of the offenders reside, or in Travis county, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General, or the district or county attorney under the direction of the Attorney General, to prosecute for the recovery of the same, and the fees of the prosecuting attorney for representing the State in proceedings under this act shall be over and above the fees allowed him under the general fee bill.

"Sec. 17. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act, be and the same are hereby repealed, and that Title CVIII of the Revised Civil Statutes of the State of Texas of 1895, and Articles 5313, 5314, 5315, 5316, 5317, 5318, 5319, 5320, 5321 and 5321a, thereof, be and the same are hereby expressly repealed; and that Articles 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 988a, 988b, 988c, 988d of Chapter 7, in Title XVIII, of the Penal Code of the State of Texas of 1895, be and the same are hereby expressly repealed; and that an act entitled 'An Act to define trusts, provide for penalties and punishment of corporations, persons, firms and associations of persons connected with them, and promote free competition in the State of Texas, and to repeal all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act,' approved April 30, 1895, and known and published as Chapter 83 of the General Laws of the Twenty-fourth Legislature, be and the same is hereby expressly repealed; and that an act entitled 'An Act to prohibit pools, trusts, monopolies and conspiracies to control business and prices of articles, to prevent the formation or operation of pools, trusts, monopolies and combinations of charters of corporations that violate the terms of this act and to authorize the institution and prosecution of suits therefor,' approved May 25, 1899, and published and known as Chapter CXLVI of the General Laws of the Twenty-sixth Legislature, be and the same are hereby expressly repealed; and that an act entitled 'An Act to amend Article 5318, Title 108, of the Revised Civil Statutes, of the State of Texas, prescribing penalties against trusts and conspiracies against trade,' approved June 5, 1899, and known as Chapter CLXXII of the General Laws of the Twenty-sixth Legislature, be and the same is hereby expressly repealed; provided nothing in this act shall be held or construed to affect or destroy any rights of the State of Texas to recover penalties or forfeit charters of domestic corporations, or prohibit foreign corporations from doing business in this State, for acts committed before this act takes effect."

As is apparent from the opinion of the Court of Civil Appeals, which sets out in full the charge of the trial court, the issues involved in the State court were whether or not the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had violated the first and second sections of the Act of 1899, and the first; second and third sections of the Act of 1903. In other words, the questions submitted to the jury were:

First.—Whether or not the Waters-Pierce Oil Company entered into or became a party to an agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey to fix or regulate the price in Texas of oil refined from petroleum, and whether or not said company remained or continued to be a party to said agreement or understanding, if there was any such agreement or understanding, during any portion of the time from June 1, 1900, to March 31, 1903.

Second.—Whether or not the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had brought about or permitted any combination or union of its capital with that of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey whereby the price in Texas of oil refined from petroleum other than oil which was the subject of interstate as distinguished from local commerce was sought to be fixed or regulated, or whereby the price in Texas of such oil would be reasonably calculated to be fixed or regulated, or whereby the trade in such oil in Texas was sought to be controlled or regulated.

Third.—Whether or not the Waters-Pierce Oil Company entered into a combination of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey for the purpose of creating in Texas, or which tended to create in Texas, or carry out in Texas, restrictions in the free pursuit in said State of the business of selling oil refined from petroleum other than oil which was the subject of interstate as distinguished from local commerce, or to fix, maintain or increase the price of such oil in Texas or to prevent or lessen competition in Texas in the sale of such oil, and that the plaintiff in error remained or was a party to and acted under such combination, if any such there was, on any date subsequent to March 31, 1903, and prior to April 29, 1907.

Fourth.—Whether or not the direction of the affairs of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and the affairs of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey were under the same management or control on March 31, 1903, or any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907, and whether or not they were placed under such common management and control, if any such there was, by their respectively authorized officers under such circumstances that such common management and control, if such there were, created or tended to create or carry out restrictions in the sale in Texas of oil refined from petroleum other than oil which was the subject of interstate as distinguished from local commerce, or to fix, maintain or increase the price in Texas of such oil, or to prevent or lessen in Texas competition in the sale of such oil.

Fifth.—Whether or not the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had on March 31, 1903, or on any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907, acquired a majority of the capital stock of the defendant corporation and thereby effected a combination of said two corporations; if said stock was acquired and combination effected, if any, with the purpose and intention on the part of the managing officers and directors of said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of preventing or lessening the competition in the sale in Texas of the character and kind of oil mentioned in the other paragraphs, or if the effect of said combination, if such there were, tended to affect or lessen the competition in the sale in Texas of said oil, and whether or not the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, if it entered into a monopoly of this character, remained a party to such monopoly for any period of time between March 30, 1903, and April 29, 1907.

The opinion of the Court of Civil Appeals which embraces the entire charge of the trial court is as follows (R., pp. 1141 to 1161):

No. 4212.

THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY, APPELLANT,

vs.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, APPELLEE.

APPEAL FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF TRAVIS COUNTY.

This case involves alleged violations of the anti-trust laws of this State, and as the charge of the able judge who tried the case sufficiently states the nature of the suit as it was submitted to the jury, and correctly defines the provisions of the anti-trust statutes applicable to the case, and states the issues that were decided by the jury, it is deemed proper to set out the charge in full, which is as follows:

"Gentlemen of the Jury:

"In this case the State of Texas, as plaintiff, has sued the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, a private corporation chartered under the laws of the State of Missouri and doing business in Texas by virtue of a permit issued to it by the State of Texas on May 31, 1900, as defendant, to cancel said permit and to recover penalties for violations of the anti-trust laws of Texas which the State alleges the defendant has committed on each and every day from May 31, 1900, to April 29, 1907.

"The State alleges that on or about January 1st, 1870, John D. Rockefeller, John P. Archbold, H. H. Rogers, Henry M. Flagler, and a number of other persons conceived the scheme of monopolizing and controlling the business of refining, transporting and selling petroleum and the products thereof throughout the United States, including the State of Texas, and that said persons to that end and for that purpose entered into a conspiracy among themselves and with other individuals and corporations, including the defendant corporation, which conspiracy the State alleges continued in force and effect from the date of its formation until the date of the filing of the State's second amended petition in this case, and the State further alleges that in pursuance of said alleged conspiracy the defendant has done various acts and entered into various agreements which constitute violations of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"The State further alleges that the defendant's predecessor, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, incorporated in 1878, on or about the 5th day of October, 1894, entered into a contract with the Eagle Refining Company, A. W. Clem and certain other individuals named in its petition, by the terms of which defendant acquired the property of said Eagle Refining Company, situated in the city of Dallas, Texas, and the right to operate its business under the name of the said Eagle Refining Company. It further alleges that the defendant did, subsequent to May 31, 1900, operate said Eagle Refining Company and maintain the plant thereof at Dallas, as an apparently competing concern for various purposes prohibited by the anti-trust laws.

"The State further alleges that, in the year 1896, the defendant's said predecessor bought out the business of the Texas Oil and Gasoline Company and of one Roy Campbell, who were at that time doing business in the city of San Antonio, Texas, and elsewhere, and entered into contracts and agreements with the said Texas Oil and Gasoline Company and Roy Campbell, whereby said Texas Oil and Gasoline Company was thereafter to be operated under said name by defendant as an apparently competing concern with defendant at San Antonio, in the sale of the products of petroleum. It further alleges that said Texas Oil and Gasoline Company was operated by defendant as a concern apparently competing with it at San Antonio subsequent to May 31st, 1900, for various purposes in violation of the anti-trust laws of the State. For full particulars of the State's allegations you are referred to its second amended original petition.

"The defendant denies all and singular the allegations of the State, and in addition to various of her special defenses, pleads specially that, if it has entered into any of the agreements or committed any of the acts alleged by the State, none of same constitute violations of the anti-trust laws of Texas, because said agreements were made and said acts done (if at all) solely with reference to subjects of interstate commerce. For full particulars of defendant's allegations, you are referred to its third amended original answer.

"As the law of the case you are instructed as follows, viz.:

"I. The burden of proof rests upon the State to establish the affirmative of the issues which will hereafter be submitted in this charge for your consideration by a preponderance of the evidence, and you will find in favor of the defendant on each issue so submitted for your consideration, except such issue or issues, if any, as you find that the State has established by a preponderance of the evidence, and you will return a general verdict for the defendant, unless you find that the State has established by a preponderance of the evidence some combination or combinations of facts which will entitle it to recover under the law as it is given you in charge by the court.

"II. The statute known as the Anti-trust Law of 1899 was in force on May 31, 1900, and thereafter remained continuously in force until March 31st, 1903.

"For the purposes of this charge you are instructed that this act made it unlawful for any corporation transacting or conducting any kind of business in this State to enter into, or become a party to, any agreement or understanding with any other corporation or individual to fix or regulate the price in Texas of any article of manufacture or merchandise or to control or limit in Texas the trade in any article of manufacture or merchandise.

"You are further instructed that said statute also made it unlawful for any corporation transacting or conducting any kind of business in this State to bring about or permit any union or combination of its capital, property, trade or acts with the capital, property, trade or acts of any other person or corporation, whereby the price in Texas of any article of manufacture or merchandise would be fixed or sought to be fixed, regulated or sought to be regulated; or whereby the price in Texas of any article of manufacture or merchandise would be reasonably calculated to be fixed or regulated, or whereby the trade in such article of manufacture or merchandise in Texas would be sought to be controlled or limited, or would be reasonably calculated to be controlled or limited.

"The statute known as the Anti-trust Law of 1903 became effective on March 31st, 1903, and has since continued in force. For the purposes of this charge you are instructed that this statute defines a trust to be a combination of capital, skill or acts, by two or more persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any or all of the following purposes, viz.:

"1. To create or which may tend to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce in Texas, or to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit in Texas of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this State.

"2. To fix, maintain or increase the price of merchandise in Texas.

"3. To prevent or lessen competition in Texas in the sale of merchandise.

"4. To abstain from engaging in business or in the sale of merchandise in Texas, or any portion thereof.

"Said statute of 1903 further defines a monopoly to be a combination or consolidation of two or more corporations when effected in any of the following methods, viz.:

"1. When the direction of the affairs of two or more corporations is in any manner brought under the same management or control for the purpose of producing, or where such common management or control tends to create, a trust as above defined.

"2. When any corporation acquires the shares or certificates of stock, franchise or other rights, or the physical properties or any part thereof of any other corporation for the purpose of preventing or lessening, or where the effect of such acquisition tends to affect or lessen competition, whether such acquisition is accomplished directly or through the instrumentality of trustees or otherwise.

"III. Oil, all other products of petroleum, and goods, wares or merchandise of any character which the defendant or its agents may have purchased or acquired in any manner outside of the State of Texas and caused to be transported to its agents or others within the State, are the subjects of interstate commerce when they enter this State, and so remain until such commodities are removed from the original tanks, vessels or other packages in which they are imported into the State and become mixed with the common mass of property of similar character in this State. The anti-trust laws of Texas have no reference to agreements or pools or arrangements of any character concerning subjects of interstate commerce, and no agreement, pool or other arrangement, if any, which the defendant may have entered into with reference to the sale of any subject of interstate commerce can be considered by you as violating any anti-trust law of Texas. But neither oil purchased by the defendant from the Corsicana Refinery or elsewhere in Texas, nor other merchandise purchased by defendant at points in Texas, nor such oil or other merchandise purchased by defendant at points outside the State and transported into the State and removed from the original packages or vessels in which it was brought into the State and mingled with other property of similar character in the State, is the subject of interstate commerce, but on the contrary is the subject of local commerce, and any agreement or pool or arrangement entered into by defendant with reference to such property or the sale thereof, if any such sale there were, would be unlawful, if in violation of the anti-trust laws of this State.

"IV. A corporation such as defendant can only act through its agents and servants, but such a corporation is not liable for all of the acts of its agents or servants. It is liable, however, for the acts done in the scope of their employment and agency, and is also liable for the acts of its agents which it has authorized such agents to perform, and it is also liable for the unauthorized acts of its agents, if any, which have been knowingly acquiesced in or ratified by the governing body of said corporation.

"V. Much evidence has been introduced before you relating to the doings and agreements of the agents of corporations other than defendant, and to the doings and agreements of defendant's predecessor's agents prior to June 1st, 1900, and to the doings and agreements of defendant's agents, and the agents of other corporations, outside the State of Texas, and to the doings and agreements of individuals both prior and subsequent to June 1st, 1900, and both outside and within the State of Texas. None of this evidence is competent or can be considered by you against the defendant, except within the limitations and for the purposes hereinafter stated, viz.:

"If you find from a preponderance of the other evidence in the case, independent of all declarations or statements made by any person or persons, except their evidence given while testifying by deposition or personally as witnesses on the trial of this case, that on June 1, 1900, there was formed or existed an agreement between the governing officers of defendant and the governing officers of any of the other corporations alleged in the State's petition to be co-conspirators with defendant relating to the management of defendant's business, or between the governing officers of defendant and any of the individuals alleged in the State's petition to be co-conspirators with defendant relating to the management of defendant's business, then you may consider for what, if anything, you think it worth, such acts or declarations of all the parties to said agreement, if any, and such acts and declarations of their authorized agents, if any, as were done or made, as the case may be, during the existence of said agreement, if any, and in furtherance of its execution, for the purpose of determining the character of said agreement, and whether or not it contemplated a violation by defendant of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"You may further consider for what, if anything, you think it worth as tending to show or explain the course of defendant's dealing in Texas, said evidence, if any, of what it did through its duly appointed and authorized agents, if any, outside the State.

"None of said evidence can be considered by you against the defendant for any other purpose whatsoever, and none of it can be so considered by you against the defendant for said purposes, except such of it, if any, as you think proper to be considered when tested by the rules above stated relating to its competency.

"VI. No agreement made by the defendant outside the State of Texas, to violate the anti-trust laws of Texas, if any such there were, can be made the basis for forfeiting its permit to do business in Texas, or for imposing penalties upon it, unless such agreement was executed or attempted to be executed in Texas by the duly authorized agents of defendant; but inasmuch as the undisputed evidence in the case shows that the defendant has continuously maintained its agents in this State and prosecuted its business therein since May 31, 1900, you will be authorized to convict it of violating the anti-trust laws of Texas, if you find from a preponderance of the evidence in favor of the State on the issues submitted for your consideration in paragraphs VII, VIII, IX, X or XI of this charge.

"VII. If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant company, acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents, entered into or became a party to an agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, on June 1, 1900, to fix or regulate the price in Texas of oil refined from petroleum, and if you further find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant company remained or continued to be a party to said agreement or understanding, if any, and persisted in carrying same out in Texas, if any, through its duly authorized agents on June 1, 1900, or on any other date or dates subsequent to June 1, 1900, and prior to March 31, 1903, and if you further find from a preponderance of the evidence that the oil with reference to which said agreement or understanding, if any, was so made and carried out, was the subject of local as distinguished from interstate commerce, you will return a verdict for the State and say by your verdict, we the jury find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph seven of the court's charge. You are instructed in this connection that if you find in favor of the State on the issue above submitted for your consideration in this paragraph of the charge, each day embraced between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, during which the defendant remained a party to the agreement or understanding herein mentioned, if there were any such agreement or understanding, and if it remained a party to same on any of said days, would constitute a separate and distinct violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"If you do not find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant was on June 1st, 1900, or on some date subsequent thereto and prior to March 31, 1903, through the action of its duly appointed and authorized agents, a party to an agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey to fix or regulate the price in Texas of oil refined from petroleum, and if you do not further find from a preponderance of the evidence that the oil with reference to which defendant entered into said agreement or understanding, if any such there were, was the subject of local, as distinguished from interstate commerce, you will say by your verdict, we the jury find for the defendant on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph seven of the court's charge.

"VIII. If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that on June 1st, 1900, or on any date subsequent thereto, and prior to March 31st, 1903, the defendant acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents, had brought about or permitted any combination or union of its capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, whereby the price in Texas oil refined from petroleum, other than oil which was the subject of interstate, as distinguished from local commerce, was sought to be fixed or regulated, or whereby the price in Texas of such oil would be reasonably calculated to be fixed or regulated, or whereby the trade in such oil in Texas was sought to be controlled or limited, you will return a verdict for the State and say by your verdict, we the jury find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph eight of the court's charge. In this connection you are instructed that if the defendant became a party to a pool of the character mentioned in this paragraph of the charge, each day between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, that it remained a party to such pool, if there were any such days, would constitute a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas. If you do not find from a preponderance of the evidence that on June 1, 1900, or that on some date subsequent thereto and prior to March 31, 1903, the defendant acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents had brought about or permitted a combination or union of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, and if you do not further find from a preponderance of the evidence that by said combination or union, if such there were, the price in Texas of oil refined from petroleum, other than oil which was the subject of interstate as distinguished from local commerce, was sought to be fixed or regulated, or that thereby the price in Texas of such oil was reasonably calculated to be fixed or regulated, or that thereby the trade in such oil in Texas was sought to be controlled or limited, you will say by your verdict, we the jury find for the defendant on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph eight of the court's charge.

"IX. If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant, acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents, entered into a combination of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey for the purpose of creating in Texas, or which tended to create in Texas, or carry out in Texas, restrictions in the free pursuit in this State of the business of selling oil refined from petroleum, other than oil which was the subject of interstate as distinguished from local commerce, or to fix, maintain or increase the price of such oil in Texas, or to prevent or lessen competition in Texas in the sale of such oil, and that the defendant remained or was a party to and acted under such combination, if such there were on March 31st, 1903, or any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29th, 1907, you will return a verdict for the State and say by your verdict, we the jury find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph nine of the court's charge. In this connection you are instructed that if the defendant became a party to a trust of the character mentioned in this paragraph of the charge, each day between March 30, 1903, and April 29th, 1907, that it remained a party to and acted under such trust, if there were any such days, would constitute a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"If you do not find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant, acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents, entered into a combination of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, for the purpose of creating in Texas, or which tended to create or carry out in Texas restrictions in the free pursuit in this State of the business of selling said character and kind of oil, or to fix, maintain, or increase the price of such oil in Texas, or to prevent or lessen competition in Texas, in the sale of such oil, and that the defendant remained or was a party to, and acted under such combination, if such there were subsequent to March 30, 1903, and prior to April 30, 1907, you will say by your verdict, we the jury find for the defendant on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph nine of the court's charge.

"X. If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the direction of the affairs of the defendant corporation and the affairs of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey were under the same management or control on March 31, 1903, or on any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29th, 1907, and that they were placed under such common management or control, if any, by their respectively authorized officers, under such circumstances, that such common management or control, if such there were, created or tended to create or carry out restrictions in the sale in Texas of oil of the kind and character mentioned in the last preceding paragraph of this charge, or to fix, maintain or increase the price in Texas of such oil, or to prevent or lessen in Texas the competition in the sale of such oil, you will return a verdict for the State and say by your verdict, we the jury find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph ten of the court's charge. In this connection you are instructed that if the defendant entered into a monopoly of the character mentioned in this paragraph of the charge, each day between March 30, 1903, and April 29th, 1907, that it remained a party to such monopoly, if there were any such days, constituted a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"If you do not find from a preponderance of the evidence that the direction of the affairs of the defendant corporation and the affairs of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey were under the same management or control on March 31, 1903, or on some date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907, and that they were brought under such a common management or control, if any, by their respectively authorized officers under such circumstances that such common management or control, if such there were, created or tended to create or carry out restrictions in the sale in Texas of such oil, or fix, maintain or increase the price in Texas of such oil, or to prevent or lessen in Texas the competition in the sale of such oil, you will say by your verdict, we the jury find for the defendant on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph ten of the court's charge.

"XI. If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had on March 31, 1903, or on any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29th, 1907, acquired a majority of the captial stock of the defendant corporation and thereby effected a combination of said two corporations, and if you further find from a preponderance of the evidence that said stock was acquired and combination effected, if any, with the purpose and intention on part of the managing officers and directors of said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of preventing or lessening the competition in the sale in Texas of the character and kind of oil above mentioned, or that the effect of said combination, if such there were, tended to affect or lessen the competition in the sale in Texas of said oil, you will return a verdict for the State and say by your verdict, we the jury find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph eleven of the court's charge. In this connection you are instructed that if the defendant entered into a monopoly of the character mentioned in this paragraph of the charge, each day between March 30, 1903, and April 29th, 1907, that it remained a party to such monopoly, if there were any such days, constituted a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"If you do not find from a preponderance of the evidence that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had on March 31, 1903, or on some date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907, acquired a majority of the capital stock of the defendant corporation, and if you do not further find from a preponderance of the evidence that said stock was acquired and combination effected, if it were at all, with the purpose and intention on the part of the managing officers and directors of said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of preventing or lessening the competition in the sale in Texas of said character and kind of oil, or that the effect of said combination, if such there were, tended to affect or lessen the competition in the sale in Texas of said oil, you will say by your verdict, we the jury find in defendant's favor on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph eleven of the court's charge.

"XII. The evidence introduced before you does not show with sufficient definiteness that the defendant has, since May 31st, 1900, acted under or persisted in the performance of either the contract with Clem and the Eagle Refining Company and others, or the contract with Roy Campbell and the Texas Oil and Gasoline Company, in such a manner as to violate the Anti-trust Laws of 1899 or 1903. You are therefore instructed to find in defendant's favor on the issues pleaded by the State with reference to said contracts.

"XIII. Evidence has been introduced before you tending to show that the defendant has given rebates and discounts in the course of its dealings; evidence has also been introduced before you tending to show that defendant has made contracts and entered into understandings other than those which have been submitted for your consideration in paragraphs seven to eleven, inclusive, of this charge. Evidence has also been introduced before you tending to show the general course of dealings of defendant in Texas and elsewhere, including some of its business methods in meeting competition. You are instructed that none of this evidence shows or tends to show any violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas, unless it tends in some degree to establish some one or more of the issues submitted for your consideration in the last above mentioned paragraph of this charge; and you are therefore instructed to acquit the defendant and return a general verdict for it—notwithstanding any and all of said evidence, unless you find in favor of the State on the issues submitted for your consideration in some one or more of said paragraphs of the charge.

"XIV. If you convict the defendant under the foregoing instruction of any violation or violations of the Anti-trust Law of 1899, you will specify in your verdict the date or days for which it is convicted of having violated said law, and will further specify in your verdict that for said violation or violations, if any you find, that its permit to do business in Texas shall be forfeited, and the amount of money which shall be adjudged against it as penalties for said violations, if any. In fixing the penalties, if any, which you assess against the defendant for any violations of which you may convict it, of the Anti-trust Law of 1899, you will fix same at not less than two hundred dollars, or more than five hundred dollars per day for each day you find it has so violated the law. If you convict the defendant of any violations of the Anti-trust Law of 1903, you will specify in your verdict the date or days for which it is so convicted and further specify therein that as a result of said conviction, its permit to do busines in Texas shall be forfeited, and the sum of money that shall be adjudged against it as a penalty for such violation, fixing said sum at fifty dollars per day for each and every day that you convict it of having violated said law.

"XV. In order to aid you in preparing your verdict in proper form, when you have reached same, the following forms of verdicts are submitted for your consideration:

"1. If you find in favor of the State on all of the issues submitted to you and for the entire time for which penalties are claimed by the State against the defendant in its petition, you will say: 'We the jury find for the plaintiff against the defendant on each of the issues submitted to us for each of the days between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, being 1033 days, and for the penalties at.....dollars; and we find for the plaintiff against the defendant on each of the issues submitted for each of the days between April 1, 1903, and April 29, 1907, being fourteen hundred and eighty-eight days and fix the penalties at seventy-four thousand four hundred dollars. We further find that the permit of the defendant to do business in the State of Texas should be canceled. We find for the defendant upon all the issues made by the pleadings and not submitted in the charge of the court.'

"2. If you find in favor of the State on some of the issues submitted for your consideration, relating to the alleged violation of the Anti-trust Law of 1899, and in favor of the State with reference to some of the alleged violations of the Anti-trust Law of 1903, you may use the following form of verdict:

"'We the jury find in favor of the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in the following paragraphs of the court's charge:

"'We further find that the defendant violated the anti-trust laws of Texas on the following days embraced between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903.

"'We further find that on account of said violations the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be forfeited, and that penalties should be imposed upon it in the amount of .....dollars. We further find that the defendant violated the Anti-trust Laws of 1903, on the following days embraced between the 30th day of March, 1903, and the 29th day of April, 1907.

"'We further find that on account of said violations the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be forfeited, and that penalties should be imposed upon it in the amount of .....dollars. On all other issues raised by the pleadings, we find in favor of the defendant.'

"3. If you find in favor of the State with reference to some or all of the alleged violations of the Anti-trust Law of 1899, submitted for your consideration, and if you find in favor of the defendant on other of said alleged violations, and if you find in favor of the defendant on the issue of all of the alleged violations of the Anti-trust Law of 1903, you may use the following form of verdict:

"'We the jury find in favor of the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in the following paragraph of the court's charge..... We further find that the defendant has violated the anti-trust laws of Texas on each of the following days embraced between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, .....; we further find that because of said violations the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be forfeited and penalties should be imposed upon it in the amount of..... dollars. We further find in defendant's favor on all alleged violations of the Anti-trust Laws of 1903, and on all other issues made by the pleading.'

"4. If you find in defendant's favor on all issues submitted for your consideration relating to its alleged violation of the Anti-trust Laws of 1899, but find in favor of the State on all or some of the issues relating to defendant's alleged violation of the Anti-trust Law of 1903, you may use the following form of verdict: 'We the jury find in defendant's favor on all issues submitted for our consideration relating to its alleged violation of the Anti-trust Laws of 1899, but find in favor of the State under the following paragraphs of the court's charge, ....., for alleged violations of the Anti-trust Laws of 1903. We further find that the defendant has violated said anti-trust laws on each of the following days embraced between March 30, 1903, and April 29, 1907, ..... We further find that on account of said violations the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be forfeited, and that penalties should be imposed upon it in the sum of.....dollars.'

"5. If you desire to return a general verdict for defendant you may use the following form of verdict: 'We the jury find for the defendant.'

"XVI. You are the exclusive judges of the facts proved, of the credibility of the witnesses, and of the weight to be given to their testimony; but you are bound to take the law as it is given you in charge by the court and to be governed thereby in arriving at your verdict."

All requested instructions were refused. The verdict of the jury reads as follows:

"We the jury find for the plaintiff against the defendant on each of the issues submitted to us for each of the days between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, being 1033 days, and for penalties, 1,549,500.00 dollars.

"And we find for the plaintiff against the defendant on each of the issues submitted for each of the days between April 1, 1903, and April 29, 1907, being fourteen hundred and eighty-eight days, and fix the penalties at seventy-four thousand four hundred dollars.

"We further find that the permit of the defendant to do business in the State of Texas should be canceled.

"We find for the defendant upon all issues made by the pleadings and not submitted in the charge of the court."

The court rendered judgment for the State in accordance with the verdict for $1,623,900, and a cancellation of the defendant's permit to do business in this State. The defendant has appealed and presents the case in this court on one hunded and twenty-nine assignments of error.

There is evidence in the record which supports the findings of the jury, and we find the facts to be as found by the verdict.

OPINION.

"1. Assisted by elaborate briefs and arguments submitted by able counsel on both sides, this court has given to this important case earnest and careful consideration. The volume of business on our docket and the great number of questions presented preclude extended consideration in this opinion of many of the questions raised in appellant's brief. We therefore announce, in general terms, our conclusion to the effect, that it is not shown that error was committed in overruling appellant's application for a change of venue, in various rulings upon exceptions to pleadings, and as to admissibility of testimony.

"A majority of the court also hold that no positive error has been assigned upon the charge of the court. The writer of this opinion is of a different view concerning the eleventh section of the charge, and concurs with counsel for appellant in their contention that it was calculated to mislead the jury into the belief that they could find against the defendant upon the issues therein submitted, regardless of whether it had any knowledge of, participated with, or aided or abetted the Standard Oil Company in the wrongful conduct therein referred to. The provision of the Anti-trust Statute of March 31, 1903, upon which the charge in question was evidently founded, seems to be addressed, in the main, against the corporation which acquires stock or other property of another corporation with the intention of using it for the purpose specified in the statute and it can not properly be construed to include the corporation whose stock or property has been acquired, and subject it to the penalties prescribed by the statute, unless that corporation is, in some manner, responsible for the unlawful acts of the acquiring corporation.

"These are my individual views, and the other members of the court do not concur in the construction placed by me upon the charge. However, we are all agreed that, if the charge in question be erroneous, it affords no ground for reversal, because the jury found that appellant had violated other provisions of the Anti-trust Act of 1903, and awarded only one penalty for each day's violation. Having found for the State on these other issues, if the verdict had been in appellant's favor on the issues submitted by the charge under consideration, the judgment should have been the same; and, therefore, if that section of the charge was erroneous, such error is now harmless and immaterial.

"In reference to the assignment of error complaining of the order of the court appointing a receiver, it is sufficient to say that appellant has exercised its right to prosecute a separate appeal from that order, and this court, in considering that appeal, has decided against appellant. It is not entitled to have the order appointing a receiver reviewed by this court twice or in two distinct proceedings.

"2. The constitutionality and validity of the Anti-trust Acts of May 25th, 1899, and March 31st, 1903, have been vigorously assailed in numerous respects. We overrule these objections and hold that these statutes authorize and sustain this suit. (State vs. Laredo Ice Company, 96 Texas, 467; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. vs. The State, 44 S. W., 936.)

"The contention that these statutes are too indefinite and uncertain in the particulars involved in this case is not regarded as tenable. The Sherman Anti-trust Law enacted by Congress is not more definite and specific than these statutes, and that law has stood the test against similar objections in the Supreme Court of the United States. (United States vs. Knight Company, 156 U. S., 1; United States vs. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U. S., 291; United States vs. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U. S., 505; Hopkins vs. United States, 171 U. S., 578; Anderson vs. United States, 171 U. S., 604; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. vs. United States, 175 U. S., 211; Montague & Co. vs. Lowry, 193 U. S., 38; Northern Securities Company vs. United States, 193 U. S., 196.)

"3. This suit was instituted on September 22, 1906, and the defendant interposed a special exception to the petition in so far as it sought to recover penalties for alleged violation of the anti-trust laws of this State prior to the 22d day of September, 1904, for the reason that it appeared from the face of the plaintiff's petition that the right to recover such penalties accrued more than two years before the suit was filed; and was, therefore, barred by the statute of limitation of two years, as prescribed in Article 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of this State. That exception was overruled, and the court refused to give the jury a special instruction, requested by appellant, announcing and applying the same proposition of law. These rulings of the trial court are assigned as error, and present one of the most important questions in the case. Chapter 1 of Title 4 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is headed thus: 'The time within which criminal actions may be commenced.' Article 219 reads as follows: 'For all misdemeanors an indictment or information may be presented within two years from the commission of the offense and not afterward.'

"By the Penal Code offenses which are punishable by pecuniary fine only are designated misdemeanors; and appellant's contention seems to be that the things condemned by the Act of May 25th, 1899, upon which this suit in part is based, constitute misdemeanors; and that, although civil in form, the suit is criminal in nature and barred by Article 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is also contended that the pecuniary penalties imposed by the Act of March 31, 1903, constitutes part of the punishment prescribed by that act, and that the suit for the penalties accruing thereunder constitutes a criminal case, and is barred by Article 218 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which bars prosecutions for felonies.

"The second, third, fourth and sixth sections of the Act of May 25, 1899, declare that all persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons who violate those sections 'shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and shall be subject to the penalties prescribed in this act.' The eleventh section states that all who do the things therein condemned shall be 'adjudged a monopoly and be subject to all the pains and penalties provided in this act.' The seventh section provides for the forfeiture of the charter of any domestic corporation and permit to do business granted to any foreign corporation for violations of the statute. The fifth section reads as follows: 'Any person, partnership, firm or association, or any representative or agent thereof, or any corporation or company, or any officer, representative or agent thereof, violating any of the provisions of this act, shall forfeit not less than two hundred dollars nor more than five thousand dollars for every such offense, and each day such person, corporation, partnership or association shall continue to do so shall be a separate offense, the penalties in such cases to be recovered by an action in the name of the State at the relation of the Attorney General or the district or county attorney; the moneys thus collected to go into the State treasury, and to become a part of the general fund, except as hereinafter provided.'

"The pertinent part of the ninth section is expressed in these words: 'It shall be the duty of the Attorney General and the prosecuting attorney of each district or county, respectively, to enforce the provisions of this act. The Attorney General and the prosecuting attorney shall institute and conduct all suits begun in the district courts, and upon appeal the Attorney General shall prosecute said suits in the Courts of Civil Appeals and Supreme Court.'

"The first section of the Anti-trust Act of March 31st, 1903, defines a trust. The second section defines a monopoly, and the third section prescribes what act shall constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade. The fourth section declares all trusts, monopolies and conspiracies in restraint of trade to be illegal. The fifth, sixth and seventh sections make provision for the forfeiture of charters of domestic corporations violating that act, and the eighth section makes a similar provision in reference to the permit of foreign corporations to do business in this State. The seventh and tenth sections use the word 'convicted,' but the seventh relates to the subject of the forfeiture of charter rights, and the tenth to the subject of forfeiture of a foreign corporation's right to do business in the State, which shows that the Legislature did not have in mind a proceeding by indictment or criminal information. The eleventh section reads as follows:

" 'Each and every firm, person, corporation or association of persons who shall in any manner violate any of the provisions of this act shall for each and every day that such violation shall be committed or continued, forfeit and pay the sum of fifty dollars, which may be recovered in the name of the State of Texas in any county where the offense is committed or where either of the offenders reside, or in Travis county, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General, or the district or county attorney, under the direction of the Attorney General, to prosecute for recovery of the same, and the fees of the prosecuting attorney for representing the State in proceedings under this act shall be over and above the fees allowed him under the general fee bill.'

"The thirteenth section of that act reads as follows: 'And in addition to the penalties and forfeitures herein provided for every person violating this act may further be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than one nor more than ten years.'

"We agree with counsel for appellant that these statutes are penal. They were enacted for the purpose of suppressing and preventing certain things regarded by the Legislature as detrimental to the public interest. The penalties prescribed were intended as punishment, but it does not follow that this is a criminal case within the purview of Article 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. After a careful consideration of all their terms, we have reached the conclusion that it was the intention of the Legislature in enacting the two statutes under consideration to create a cause of action in behalf of the State for the pecuniary penalties therein prescribed, to be recovered in a civil suit. We reach this conclusion mainly from the language of the fifth section of the Act of 1899, and the eleventh section of the Act of 1903. These sections declare that those who violate any of the provisions of those acts shall forfeit and pay, in the one instance not less than $200 nor more than $5000, and in the other instance $50, to be recovered in an action in the name of the State. It is true that in some places in these laws the procedure is designated 'prosecutions,' but in others they are spoken of as 'actions' and 'suits.' In the ninth section of the Act of 1899 it is declared to be the duty of the Attorney General and district and county attorneys 'to institute and conduct all suits begun in the district courts, and upon appeal the Attorney General shall prosecute said suits in the Courts of Civil Appeals and Supreme Court.'

"Section 5 of that act, construed in connection with Section 9, indicates with absolute certainty a legislative purpose to authorize civil suits for the recovery of the pecuniary penalties prescribed. The two sections together indicate that it was not intended that such penalties should be enforced by a criminal proceeding, because if that act creates a criminal offense such offense would be a misdemeanor, of which the district court would have no jurisdiction. The Constitution confers upon that court exclusive jurisdiction of suits by the State for forfeitures and penalties; and it must be presumed that in enacting that statute the Legislature intended to provide for such suits as were authorized by that provision of the Constitution, and not to create criminal offenses of which the county court alone would have original jurisdiction, otherwise the Legislature would not have used the language, 'shall institute and conduct all suits begun in the district courts.'

"It is true that both of these statutes contain some expressions common to criminal procedure, such as 'offense,' 'guilty,' and 'convicted.' The word 'guilty,' however, is frequently used in civil cases, as 'guilty of fraud,' 'guilty of negligence.' And the word 'offense,' as used in these statutes, has reference to violations of their provisions, and is not equivalent to the words 'felony,' or 'misdemeanor.' However, we do not hold that it is necessary to use either of the latter terms to create a criminal offense; nor, on the other hand, do we think that the words 'offense,' 'guilty' and 'convicted' necessarily determine that these are criminal statutes to be enforced exclusively by indictment or information. The word 'suit' is very generally used to designate a civil case, and seldom, if ever, applies to criminal cases.

"As these statutes do not, in terms, require a resort to criminal procedure for their enforcement, then, even if they do not direct any method of enforcement, we are of the opinion that the State had the right to proceed in a civil action for a recovery of the pecuniary penalties. In such cases it is a well established rule that an action of debt will lie for the recovery of statutory penalties. (5th Ency. Plead and Prac., 907, and authorities there cited.) It has been so decided in this State in Davidson vs. Missouri Pacific Ry. Co., 3 Texas Court App., 173, where it was held that a suit to recover a statutory penalty was an action of debt, and barred by our statute of limitation, which requires actions for debt, where the indebtedness is not evidenced by a contract in writing, to be commenced within two years. That the State may also bring an action for debt for the recovery of statutory penalties seems to be equally well settled. It was so held by the Supreme Court of the United States in Stockwell vs. United States, 13 Wall., 531. That was an action by the government to recover double the value of certain shingles, alleged to have been illegally imported into the United States. The act of Congress upon which the suit was founded reads as follows: 'That if any person or persons shall receive, conceal or buy any goods, wares or merchandise, knowing them to have been illegally imported into the United States, and liable to seizure by virtue of any act in relation to the revenue, such person or persons shall, on conviction thereof, forfeit and pay a sum double the amount of value of the goods, wares or merchandise so received, concealed or purchased.' In that case, among other things, the court said:

"'A verdict and judgment having been recovered against the defendants in the court below, the record has been removed into this court and four errors have been assigned.

"'The first is that a civil action of debt will not lie, at the suit of the United States, to recover the forfeitures or penalties incurred under this act of Congress, and that the court below erred in holding that such an action might be maintained. It is not contended that an action of debt will not lie to recover duties, if the defendant be the owner or importer of the goods imported, for it is conceded that, by the act of importing, an obligation to pay the duties is incurred. The obligation springs out of the statutes which impose duties. Nor is it doubted that when a statute gives a private person a right to recover a penalty for a violation of law he may maintain an action of debt, but it is insisted that when the government proceeds for a penalty based on an offense against law it must be by indictment or by information. No authority has been adduced in support of this position, and it is believed that none exists. It can not be that whether an action of debt is maintainable or not depends upon the question who is the plaintiff. Debt lies whenever a sum certain is due to the plaintiff, or a sum which can readily be reduced to a certainty—a sum requiring no future valuation to settle its amount. It is not necessarily founded upon contract. It is immaterial in what manner the obligation was incurred, or by what it is evidenced, if the sum owing is capable of being definitely ascertained. The A ' of 1823 (3 Stat. at L., 781) fixes the amount of the liability at double the value of the goods received, concealed or purchased, and the only party injured by the illegal acts, which subject the perpetrators to the liability, is the United States. It would seem, therefore, that whether the liability incurred is to be regarded as a penalty or as liquidated damages for an injury done to the United States, it is a debt, and as such it must be recoverable in a civil action.

"'But all doubts respecting the matter are set at rest by the fourth section of the act, which enacted that all penalties and forfeitures incurred by force thereof shall be sued for, recovered, distributed and accounted for in the manner prescribed by the Act of March 2, 1799 (1 Stat. at L., 627), entitled "An Act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage." By referring to the eighty-ninth section of that act, it will be seen that it directs all penalties accruing by any breach of the act, to be sued for and recovered, with costs of suit, in the name of the United States of America, in any court competent to try the same; and the collector within whose district a forfeiture shall have been incurred is enjoined to cause suits for the same to be commenced without delay. This manifestly contemplates civil actions, as does the proviso to the same section, which declares that no action or prosecution shall be maintained in any case under the act unless the same shall have been commenced within three years after the penalty or forfeiture was incurred. Accordingly, it has been frequently ruled that debt will lie at the suit of the United States to recover the penalties and forfeitures imposed by statutes. U. S. vs. Colt Pet. (C. C.), 145; Jacob vs. U. S., 1 Brock, 520; U. S. vs. Bougher, 6 McLean, 277; Walsh vs. U. S., 3 Wood. & M., 342; U. S. vs. Lyman, 1 Mas., 482; U. S. vs. Allen, 4 Day, 474. It is true that the statute of 1823 imposes the forfeiture and liability to pay double the value of the goods received, concealed or purchased with knowledge that they had been illegally imported, "on conviction thereof." It may be, therefore, that an indictment or information might be sustained. But the question now is whether a civil action can be brought and, in view of the provision that all penalties and forfeitures incurred by force of the act shall "be sued for and recovered" as prescribed by the Act of 1799, we are of the opinion that debt is maintainable. The expression "sued for and recovered" is primarily applicable to civil actions, and not to those of a criminal nature.'

"As to the point made in reference to the penaties being indefinite under the Act of 1899, in addition to the case just cited, we refer to Rockwell vs. The State, 11 Ohio, 130, where the law fixed the penalty at not less than $5 nor more than $50, and the objection referred to was overruled, and it was held that an action of debt would lie. Other courts have held that statutes somewhat similar to those under consideration confer upon the State a cause of action to be maintained in a civil suit (Burgh vs. The State, 118 Ind., 133; Davis Admr. vs. State, 119 Ind, 555; State vs. Grove, 77 Wis., 448; Territory of New Mexico vs. Baca, 2 New Mex., 183). Interesting discussions of the terms 'fines,' 'forfeitures' and 'penalties' will also be found in People vs. Nedrow, 122 Ill., 363; Gosselink vs. Campbell, 4 Iowa, 300.

"Our conclusion is that the statutes under consideration vest in the State a civil right of action for the pecuniary penalties prescribed for violations of the provisions of those statutes. This being true, and as our statute of limitations applicable to civil cases does not include and bar the State, we hold that limitation is not available as a defense in this case. We do not rest this ruling upon the ground that the statutes under consideration do not create criminal offenses. If it be conceded that they create such offenses, criminal prosecutions for which would be barred within two years, it does not follow that the penalties which might have been recovered by such prosecutions can not, when authorized, be recovered in a civil action. Our Penal Code and Code of Criminal Procedure deal exclusively with criminal cases, and that portion of the latter which deals with the subject of limitation only purports to fix the time within which criminal actions may be commenced; and Article 219, relied on by appellant, merely forbids prosecutions by indictment or information after two years from the commission of the offense.

"It is argued on behalf of appellant that, even though a statute creating an offense may confer upon the State the right to maintain a civil action to recover a pecuniary penalty for violating the statute, still that right would be barred by Article 219, which would bar the right to enforce the penalty by indictment or information. If Article 219, or any other statute, declared that no right of action should exist or no sort of proceeding be instituted for the collection of a penalty after two years, appellant's contention would be correct; but that article is much narrower in its scope and merely prohibits prosecutions in the manner and by the means prescribed for the prosecution of criminal cases. It may be true that the same general result would be sought in the one case as in the other, viz., recovery of the penalty, and, if that were the only thing to be considered, there would be force in the argument that in prohibiting criminal prosecutions after a specified time the Legislature intended thereby to prevent any other character of procedure which had for its purpose the accomplishment of the same general result. If the two proceedings, civil and criminal, were not so essentially different the contention urged might be sustained; but the statutes under consideration apply to natural persons as well as corporations, and as to such person, civil and criminal proceedings are widely different. In a civil action against an individual to recover a penalty, he is notified of the suit by delivering to him a citation. When the case is tried, if he loses, the only result is a personal judgment against him for a specified sum of money to be collected by execution and not otherwise. But if he is proceeded against criminally for the enforcement of a penalty he is arrested and required to give bond or stay in jail until after the case is tried. Upon trial, if he is convicted, the judgment not only goes against him for the penalty, but, unless he pays it, he is again incarcerated in jail. Thus it will be seen that in a criminal proceeding to enforce the penalty the defendant would necessarily be subjected to the ignominy of an arrest by a public officer; and, upon contingencies which often occur, would be incarcerated in jail. Now when the Legislature prescribed a time which would prevent a prosecution fraught with these serious consequences, does it necessarily follow that it intended to cut off any right the State might have to obtain a personal judgment for a pecuniary penalty, without resorting to a procedure that would bring about any such harsh results? We think not. In prescribing limitation for criminal proceedings we believe the Legislature had in mind cases criminal, both in substance and form, and had no intention of affecting any right the State might assert in a civil action.

"Chief Justice Marshall, in Adams vs. Woods, 2 Cranch., 337, announced that if a law should merely declare that no indictment or information should be presented after a specified time, such law would be pleadable only in bar of indictments or informations, and would not bar a civil action for a recovery of the penalty prescribed for violating a statute.

"An offense which is punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, absolutely or in the alternative, is a felony; and as the Anti-trust Act of 1903 fixes confinement in the penitentiary as an alternative punishment, appellant pleaded Article 218 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in bar of the State's right to recover part of the penalties sued for under that act. Article 218 is framed like Article 219, and would apply to a criminal prosecution based upon the Act of 1903 and bar such prosecution after three years. As we hold that it was the intention of the Legislature to confer upon the State the right to maintain a civil action for the pecuniary penalties therein prescribed, we hold that such right of action is not barred by Article 218. In other words, while the penalties referred to were intended, in a certain sense, as punishment, they were not imposed as punishment to be inflicted through the onerous instrumentalities of a criminal prosecution.

"Appellant also pleaded the statute of limitation of two and four years embodied in the Revised Statutes and applicable to civil cases. It is contended that the two years' statute has application upon the theory that if the State's suit is an action of debt, and not instituted for the preservation of the public rights, revenues or property, then the State should not be exempt from limitation, but should be treated as any other litigant. It is the rule of the common law of England that, unless so expressly enacted, limitation does not run against the sovereign, and that is the rule in the American States. We are not prepared to place upon that rule the restriction urged, but if we should do so it would not be proper to apply it to this case. In seeking to recover the penalties here involved, the State is endeavoring to enforce statutes enacted for the protection of the public interest. One of the main objects of the suit is to protect and preserve public rights and promote a well established public policy.

"In view of what we have already said, it is hardly necessary to add that we regard the four years' statute of limitation as equally unavailing. In Brown vs. Sneed, 77 Texas, 471, which holds that limitation does not apply to the State unless so expressly provided, the authorities are collated and reviewed. We also hold that no error was committed in refusing a charge to the effect that the State must prove its case beyond reasonable doubt. Being a civil case, that rule does not apply.

"4. It is contended on behalf of appellant that the Anti-trust Act of May 25th, 1899, was rendered unconstitutional by the passage of another statute at the same session of the Legislature entitled 'An Act to protect workingmen in the right of organization and the purposes thereof,' approved May 27th, 1899, wherein it was provided that from and after its passage it should be lawful for any and all persons engaged in any kind of work or labor, manual or mental, or both, to associate themselves together and form trades unions and other organizations for the purpose of protecting themselves in their personal work, personal labor and personal service in their respective pursuits and employments. By the third section it is declared that that act shall not apply to combinations or associations of capital or capital and persons, natural or artificial, formed for the purposes of limiting the production or consumption of labor's products, or for any other purpose in restraint of trade, and that nothing therein contained shall be held to interfere with the terms and conditions of private contracts with regard to the time of service or other stipulations between employers and employes, and 'that nothing herein contained shall be construed to repeal, affect or diminish the force and effect of any statute now existing on the subject of trusts, conspiracies against trade, pools and monopolies.' In view of these limitations placed upon that act, we are of the opinion that it was not the intention of the Legislature to authorize anything to be done that was prohibited by the Act of May 25th, 1899. Hence we hold that this statute engrafts no exemptions upon the anti-trust statute referred to.

"5. The Anti-trust statute of May 25th, 1899, having been superseded and repealed by the Act of March 31st, 1903, which diminished the pecuniary penalties, appellant sought to have the latter statute applied to the time before as well as after it went into effect. This was refused, and we think properly so, on account of this proviso in the latter act: 'Provided nothing in this act shall be held or construed to affect or destroy any rights of the State of Texas to recover penalties or forfeit charters of domestic corporations, or prohibit foreign corporations from doing business in this State, for acts committed before this act took effect.' We are of opinion that this proviso preserved whatever rights the State had under the former law, including the right to enforce the penalties prescribed by that act. We are unable to concur in the proposition that it was merely intended to preserve the right to, but not the amount of, the penalties. Nor can we sanction the proposition that because of the location of a comma in the proviso quoted it was the intention of the Legislature to protect and preserve the rights of the State to recover penalties from domestic corporations and not preserve such right as against foreign corporations. No reason existing for making such a marked discrimination, we are not willing to hold that it was the intention of the Legislature to do so, merely because a comma was so used as to render that construction plausible. In construing written laws, courts are not bound by rules of grammar, and may disregard them in order to give effect to manifest legislative intention.

"6. It is claimed that the trial court should have granted appellant's motion for a new trial based upon the ground that the judgment imposes excessive fines, and operates as a deprivation of property without due process of law. It is also contended that the Act of 1899 should be declared void, because it authorizes excessive fines and forfeitures. That question has already been decided against appellant's contention in State vs. Laredo Ice Co., 96 Texas, 467. The verdict, while large, is much under the maximum permitted by the law. Its magnitude is mainly attributable to appellant's repeated and long-continued violations of the law, covering a period of six years. Hence we have reached the conclusion that the verdict is not so large as to render it manifest that the jury were actuated by prejudice or other improper motives.

"7. In appellant's motion for a new trial in the court below, and in its presentation of the case here, the verdict of the jury has been challenged, the contention being that the testimony fails to show that appellant has violated any of the anti-trust laws of this State. The evidence is very voluminous, and it is not necessary that it be set out or epitomized in this opinion. It is sufficient, we think, to show that from the date of its permit to do business in this State, May 31, 1900, appellant has been a party to an agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, one object of which was to create a monopoly and control the price of petroleum oil and prevent competition in its sale in a large and specified territory, including the State of Texas; and that, to a large extent, such object has been accomplished. In so far as that agreement related to this State, appellant, acting by its agents, performed it within this State; and such performance within the limits of the State constitutes violations of Texas laws and renders appellant amenable to such laws, although the agreement between it and the Standard Oil Company may not have been made in this State. To a large extent the case rests upon circumstantial evidence; but we can not say that the jury were not warranted in the conclusions drawn from it. Hence we hold that the verdict is supported by testimony, and no error was committed in overruling the motion for a new trial.

"Upon the whole case our conclusion is that reversible error has not been shown, and, therefore, the judgment will be affirmed.

"Affirmed.

In this connection we desire to call the court's attention to an evident misprint of Section 8 of the charge of the court as it appears in the opinion copied in the record, because upon examination of said Section 8 appearing on page 289 of the record it is apparent that there is a misprint or clerical omission in such section as copied in the opinion of the Court of Civil Appeals.

The verdict of the jury was that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had violated each and every section of the Act of 1899 and of the Act of 1903 submitted for their consideration in the charge of the court for each and every day charged. The Court of Civil Appeals held that there was evidence in the record which supported such findings of the jury and that court found the facts to be as found by the verdict, viz., that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had violated each of the provisions of each of the acts for the number of days charged in so far as such issues were submitted to the jury.

The questions then for determination are, whether or not there is a Federal question involved in this case, and, second, whether or not such Federal question is a real question as distinguished from a colorable or fictitious one.

There are various assignments of error made by the plaintiff in error upon which it asks this court to revise the decision of the Court of Civil Appeals.

The first, second, fourth, fifth, sixth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, thirteenth, fourteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth assignments of error all complain of the action of the court and the holdings of the court based upon provisions of the Acts of 1899 and 1903 which, it is asserted, are invalid because of their repugnance to various provisions of the Federal Constitution. As will be noticed, all of these matters involve purely the question of the ownership of a majority of the stock by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. It will be sufficient to say that as the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was only tried and convicted for remaining a party to the unlawful combination after the acquisition of the stock for the illegal purpose by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, there can possibly be no Federal question in the case under any phase of the matter, but it is not necessary for this court to investigate to ascertain whether or not such Federal question could be raised for the reason that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was found by the jury to have been guilty of violations of other provisions of the anti-trust laws, both of 1899 and 1903, without regard to the question of stock ownership, and there is no rule better settled by this court than the one that the Federal question must have been the controlling question in the decision of the case in the State court, and there must not have been any other independent question upon which the State court predicated its opinion or could have predicated its opinion without involving the decision of the Federal question.

See M., K. & T. R. R. Co. vs. Ferris, 179 U. S., 602.
Hammond vs. Johnson, 142 U. S., 73.
Harrison vs. Morton, 171 U. S., 38.
Klinger vs. Missouri, 13 Wall., 257.

The Court of Civil Appeals held and decided that irrespective of the question of stock ownership, irrespective of any error that might have been committed by the trial court in charging on this question, the charge did not affect the case, because they say, in discussing whether or not the court correctly charged on the stock ownership proposition:

"However, we are all agreed that if the charge in question be erroneous it affords no ground for reversal, because the jury found that appellant had violated other provisions of the Anti-trust Act of 1903, and awarded only one penalty for each day's violation. Having found for the State on these other issues, if the verdict had been in appellant's favor on the issues submitted by the charge under consideration, the judgment should have been the same, and, therefore, if that section of the charge was erroneous, such error is now harmless and immaterial."

As shown by the record, and as stated by the Court of Civil Appeals, the jury found the Waters-Pierce Oil Company guilty of violating provisions of the Anti-trust Laws of 1899 and 1903, other than sections which made it an offense for one corporation to acquire the capital stock of another corporation for the purpose of affecting competition. They were charged with and found guilty of violating the provisions of both the Act of 1899 and 1903 prohibiting agreements or understandings between two or more persons, firms or corporations fixing or regulating prices in Texas of oil refined from pertoleum.

There can not then possibly be a Federal question predicated upon the holding of the State court giving validity to so much of the anti-trust laws of the State of Texas which prohibited the acquisition of the stock of one corporation by another corporation for the purpose of affecting competition or controlling or regulating the prices and output of oil.

As stated, this court has too often held that where the State court, although it may pass upon a Federal question and decide the validity of a State statute that is claimed contravenes the Federal Constitution, yet, if there is another independent ground upon which the State court rests its decision or could have rested its decision, then this court will not review the decision of the State court in deciding such Federal question because this court does not pass on moot cases.

Assignments 3 and 15 challenge the action of the court in allowing a recovery for acts that it was claimed were committed prior to the passage of the Acts of 1899 and 1903, respectively, and the introduction of testimony concerning such acts, and thus undertakes to raise a Federal question, but an examination of the charge of the court shows that this attempt is but "the not infrequent one of an attempt to clutch at the jurisdiction of this court as an afterthought when all other resources of litigation have been exhausted."

See Chicago I. & L. R. Co. vs. McGuire, 196 U. S., 127.

The lower court expressly charged "no agreement made by the defendant outside the State of Texas to violate the anti-trust laws of Texas, if any such there were, can be made the basis for forfeiting its permit to do business in Texas or for imposing penalties upon it unless such agreement was executed or attempted to be executed in Texas by the duly authorized agents of defendant." (R., p. 1145.)

And, again, the court charged the jury as follows:

"V. Much evidence has been introduced before you relating to the doings and agreements of the agents of corporations other than defendant, and to the doings and agreements of defendant's predecessor's agents prior to June 1, 1900, and to the doings and agreements of defendant's agents, and the agents of other corporations, outside the State of Texas, and to the doings and agreements of individuals both prior and subsequent to June 1, 1900, and both outside and within the State of Texas. None of this evidence is competent or can be considered by you against the defendant, except within the limitations and for the purposes hereafter stated, viz.:

"If you find from a preponderance of the other evidence in the case, independent of all declarations or statements made by any person or persons, except their evidence given while testifying by deposition or personally as witnesses on the trial of this case, that on June 1, 1900, there was formed or existed an agreement between the governing officers of defendant and the governing officers of any of the other corporations alleged in the State's petition to be co-conspirators with defendant relating to the management of defendant's business, or between the governing officers of defendant and any of the individuals alleged in the State's petition to be co-conspirators with defendant relating to the management of defendant's business, then you may consider for what, if anything, you think it worth, such acts or declarations of all the parties to said agreement, if any, and such acts and declarations of their authorized agents, if any, as were done or made, as the case may be, during the existence of said agreement, if any, and in furtherance of its execution, for the purpose of determining the character of said agreement, and whether or not it contemplated a violation by defendant of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"You may further consider for what, if anything, you think it worth, as tending to show or explain the course of defendant's dealing in Texas, said evidence, if any, of what it did through its duly appointed and authorized agents, if any, outside the State.

"None of said evidence can be considered by you against the defendant for any other purpose whatsoever, and none of it can be so considered by you against the defendant for said purposes, except such of it, if any, as you think proper to be considered when tested by the rules above stated relating to its competency."

Again, assignments 7 and 8 undertake to raise a Federal question because the statutes of 1899 and 1903 were so indefinite, vague and uncertain, and so indefinitely framed and of such doubtful construction that it could not be ascertained by the language used that particular acts constituted an offense and that they could not be understood either from the language in which they were expressed or from some other written law of the State, and that therefore the defendant was deprived of its property without due process of law because of the infliction of penalties thereunder. This is but another attempt to clutch at the jurisdiction of this court when all other litigation has proved ineffectual.

As was stated in the case of Simon vs. Craft, 183 U. S., 427, the essential elements of due process of law are notice and an opportunity to defend.

In this case the record shows that notice was issued and that the plaintiff in error not only had an opportunity to defend but did defend and had a trial in the court before a jury, took their appeals in the regular course, had the matters passed on by the appellate courts of the State. In other words, they have had their day in court, and it makes no difference whether the trial court erroneously administered the law or whether it correctly administered the law, the plaintiff in error can not complain of the want of due process of law for the reason that it has had every chance to be heard, was heard, and had all these matters passed on in a court of competent jurisdiction.

See Remington Paper Co. vs. Watson, 173 U. S., 443.
New Orleans Waterworks vs. Louisiana, 185 U. S., 336.
Kennard vs. Louisiana, 92 U. S., 480.
Lent vs. Tillson, 140 U. S., 316.
C., B. & Q. R. R. Co. vs. Chicago, 166 U. S., 226.

In the case of the Remington Paper Co. vs. Watson, supra, this court says:

"The appointment of a receiver to take possession of the property of an insolvent corporation upon the petition of a creditor is certainly due process. This, of course, is not denied, but the invalidity of the order of appointment is asserted because it was made ex parte and because Watson had not fully qualified. It is hence argued that the appointment was a nullity and constituted no legal obstacle to the proceedings in the United States Circuit Court. * * * The action was regularly proceeded with and was determined against plaintiff in error on grounds that it did not involve Federal questions, and, therefore, it is not within our power to review the judgment of the Supreme Court of the State. The plaintiff in error then sought in the State court, and was given an opportunity to litigate the rights claimed by it, and it can not complain that the guarantees of the Constitution of the United States were denied because the litigation did not result successfully."

As was held further in the case of Simon against Craft, supra, "the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment does not necessitate that the proceedings in a State court should be by particular mode but only that there shall be a regular course of proceeding in which notice is given of the claim asserted and an opportunity afforded to defend against it. * * * If the essential requisites of full notice and opportunity to defend were present, this court will accept the interpretation given by the State court as to the regularity under the State statute of the practice pursued in the particular case."

Again, an examination of these statutes will disclose that they are not vague, indefinite and uncertain, and not only has the State court of Texas repeatedly held that they were not vague and indefinite, but the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of National Cotton Oil Co. vs. Texas, 197 U. S., 115, upheld the provisions of both of said laws.

So far as the acts done and committed by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company were concerned for which it was convicted and penalties assessed, the acts themselves would have all been unlawful at common law, and Texas is a common law State, and the infliction of penalties was all that was necessary for the statute to do, because the acts, as stated, that were committed would have been illegal if there had been no statute denouncing the commission of such acts.

If a Federal question could be made by the mere statement in an assignment of error that a statute is so vague, indefinite and uncertain in its provisions that a defendant is not put on notice of what acts are charged to be a violation of the law, then every case in every State court that is prosecuted for violations of a State statute could be brought to this court on a writ of error by simply alleging that the provisions of the act were vague, indefinite and charged no offense. This court will require more than such bare assertions. If upon an inspection by this court of the law itself it should determine that such criticism was without merit, then it will hold that there is no Federal question, although it may be necessary to examine the statute to do so, and we respectfully say that if the court does examine the two statutes it will find that not only is there no merit in the claim of plaintiff in error that the statutes are vague, indefinite and uncertain in their terms, but that the State court was right in holding that they defined an offense.

In so far as the question of whether or not particular acts shown to have been done constituted an offense under those statutes, this court will not concern itself for the reason that it is bound by the holding of the State court on those points, whether there was much or little evidence to support the finding of that court. The only thing this court will or can concern itself with is, does the legislation, not the act of the court under it, but does the legislation complained of violate the Constitution of the United States or the laws made under it?

Assignments 12 and 19 complain of the refusal of the trial court because it is said that it did not properly charge the law or that it failed to give proper charges.

These are matters of practice, mere irregularities, and can not be considered by this court, even if there were merit in the contentions.

Kennard vs. Louisiana, 92 U. S., 480.
Lent vs. Tillson, 140 U. S., 316.
C., B. & Q. R. R. Co. vs. Chicago, 166 U. S., 226.

The twentieth assignment of error is as follows:

"There is also manifest error in this, that the penalties of $1,549,500 and $74,400 assessed by the jury are, respectively, so plainly excessive that the defendant is thereby deprived of its property without due process of law."

The statement of this assignment is a refutation of the claim that it raises a Federal question, because as has repeatedly been held by this court the provision in the Federal Constitution against excessive fines and penalties only applies to acts of Congress and not to State legislation. There is identically the same provision in the Constitution of the State of Texas against excessive bail, fines and cruel and unusual punishment being required or inflicted as is contained in the Constitution of the United States, and whether or not the Acts of 1899 and 1903 impose such fines and penalties is a matter for the State courts to decide and not this court, and the contention of the plaintiff in error was not only decided adversely to it in this case, but the Supreme Court of the State had already held in the case of State vs. Laredo Ice Company, 96 Texas, 461, that the Act of 1899 did not impose excessive fines or penalties or cruel and unusual punishment. But, in any event, if a Federal question could be predicated upon the excessiveness of the fines and penalties, certainly no such Federal question is here presented or was presented in the State court, because it is claimed that the excessive penalties deprive plaintiff in error of its property without due process of law, not that it was denied the equal protection of the law, or any other question that might have been raised in connection therewith, but simply that it is deprived of its property without due process of law, although it had a full and complete hearing in the State court and tried this and every other issue involved in the case.

As stated, the mere statement of the assignment of error refutes the assignment itself, because every element of due process of law is found not only in the act itself, but in the conduct of the case all the way through the State court, because the act provides for the infliction of penalties only upon conviction in the ordinary course, and the penalties were inflicted only upon a conviction in the ordinary course, and, therefore, due process of law has been meted out to the defendant. The trouble is that due process has been administered to the plaintiff in error and that is the basis of its complaint.

The twenty-first assignment of error relates purely to the refusal of the court to sustain the contention of the plaintiff in error that the cause of action of the State was barred by limitation.

The construction of the State courts upon its statutes of limitation is binding upon the Federal courts, and as no right is guaranteed or denied by limitation statutes of any kind, there can be no Federal question predicated upon any construction of a limitation statute of a legal character.

Pim vs. St. Louis, 164 U. S., 273.

The twenty-second and twenty-third assignments of error complain of the action of the trial State court in refusing to sustain exceptions to portions of defendant in error's petition and refusal to give special charges asked by the plaintiff in error covering the phase of the case made by the pleadings of the defendant in error, charging agreements about divisions of territory between the plaintiff in error and the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. It is sufficient to say that the court did not authorize a conviction of the plaintiff in error for any such agreement, no such question was passed on in the State court of appeal, and, therefore, there is nothing upon which to base this assignment of error. On the contrary, the State trial court instructed the jury to find for the plaintiff in error upon all issues made by the pleadings and not submitted to the jury in paragraphs VII to XI, inclusive, in the charge of the court, and we submit that an examination of the charge will disclose that not the shadow of a cause of action or offense is submitted in either of these charges of the court growing out of any such division of territory.

The twenty-fourth assignment of error challenges the trial court's action in admitting certain testimony. It is absurd to say that irregularities or mistakes of the trial court in admitting testimony could be made the basis of a Federal question.

Assignments of error Nos. 25, 26, 27 and 28 undertake to call in question the action of the trial court in appointing a receiver for the property and assets of the plaintiff in error.

It is sufficient to say that in this case the Court of Civil Appeals expressly declined to pass upon the questions here raised in this cause, and said:

"In reference to the assignments of error, complaining of the order of the court appointing a receiver, it is sufficient to say that the appellant has exercised its right to prosecute a separate appeal from that order, and this court in considering that appeal has decided against appellant. It is not entitled to have the order appointing a receiver reviewed by this court twice or in two distinct proceedings."

It is respectfully submitted that the writ of error should be dismissed, because there is not the shadow of a Federal question made in the record, and if it should not be dismissed that then the case should be affirmed because the alleged Federal questions are not real but frivolous and without merit.

WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY . . . PLAINTIFF IN ERROR

AND

---

ANSWER of the Plaintiff in error to the Motion of the Defendant in error to dismiss.

1. This cause was advanced by an order of this Court made on the 4th May last upon the motion of the Defendant in error and was thereby assigned for argument on last Tuesday, the 13th October, after the cases already set down for that day.

2. At the same time the cause No. 360 of this term, between the same parties and having the same title as this cause, was advanced by a like order and assigned for argument on the same day, and a motion previously made by the Defendant in error to dismiss the writ of error in that cause was postponed to the hearing of the case on its merits.

3. Both of the said causes now stand on the list of causes for argument on the said 13th October and have not yet been reached, and a motion has been made by the Plaintiff in error to consolidate the cause No. 360 with this cause.

4. The questions raised by the motion of the Defendant in error to dismiss the writ of error in this cause involve the merits of the case and are discussed in the brief which is about to be filed on behalf of the Plaintiff in error, and they cannot be dealt with separately from the merits of the whole case. It is submitted that these questions can be best discussed and considered at the hearing of the case on its merits, which will probably be had within a very short time, but if the Court prefers to consider them previously, reference is hereby made to the said brief which is about to be filed and in which they are fully discussed.

5. The Plaintiff in error prays that the said motion may be postponed, as in the case of the like motion in No. 360, to the hearing of the case on its merits.

Plaintiff-in-Error,
vs.
STATE OF TEXAS,
Defendant-in-Error.

STATEMENT.

In 1899, the Legislature of Texas enacted a law in fifteen sections against pools, trusts and monopolies in trade which took effect January 31, 1900, the substantial provisions of which, so far as this cause is concerned, are comprised in Sections 1 to 8, which are as follows:

> "Section 1. Any corporation organized under the laws of this or any other state or country, and transacting or conducting any kind of business in this State, or any partnership, or individual or other association of persons whatsoever, who shall create, enter into, become a member of or a party to any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding with any other corporation, partnership, individual or any other person or association of persons, to regulate or fix the price of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever, or the price or the premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm, or to maintain said price when so regulated or fixed, or shall enter into, become a member of or a party to any pool, agreement, combination, contract, association or confederation to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever, or the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning, storm, cyclone, tornado, or any other kind of policy issued by any corporation, partnership, individual, or association of persons aforesaid, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and be subject to the penalties as provided by this act.

Section 2. A 'monopoly' is any union or combination or consolidation or affiliation of capital, credit, property assets, trade, custom, skill or acts, or of any other valuable thing or possession, by or between persons, firms or corporations, or association of persons, firms or corporations, whereby any one of the purposes or objects mentioned in this act is accomplished or sought to be accomplished, or whereby any one or more of said purposes are promoted or attempted to be executed or carried out, or whereby the several results described herein are reasonably calculated to be produced; and a 'monopoly,' as thus defined and contemplated, includes not merely such combinations by and between two or more persons, firms or corporations acting for themselves, but is especially defined and intended to include all aggregations, amalgamations, affiliations, consolidations or incorporations of capital, skill, credit, assets, property, custom, trade, or other valuable thing or possession, whether effected by the ordinary methods of partnership or by actual union under the legal form of a corporation or an incorporated body resulting from the union of one or more distinct firms or corporations, or by the purchase, acquisition or control of shares or certificases of stock or bonds, or other corporate property or franchises, and all corporations or partnerships that have been or may be created by the consolidation or amalgamation of the separate capital, stock, bonds, assets, credit, properties, custom, trade or corporate or firm belongings of two or more firms or corporations or companies are especially declared to constitute monopolies within the meaning of this act, if so created or entered into for any one or more of the purposes named in this act; and a 'monopoly,' as defined in this section, is hereby declared to be unlawful and against public policy, and any and all persons, firms, corporations or association of persons engaged therein shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and shall be subject to the penalties prescribed in this act.

Section 3. If any person, persons, company, partnership, association or corporation, engaged in the manufacture of any article of commerce or consumption from the raw material produced or mined in this State, shall, with the intent or purpose of driving out competition, or for the purpose of financially injuring competitors, sell at less than the cost of manufacture, or give away their manufactured products, for the purpose of driving out competition or financially injuring competitors engaged in the manufacture and refining of raw material in this State, said person, persons, company, partnership, association or corporation resorting to this method of securing a monopoly in the manufacture, refining and sale of the finished product produced or mined in this State, shall be deemed guilty of a conspiracy to form or secure a trust or monopoly in restraint of trade, and on conviction shall be subject to the penalties of this act.

Section 4. If any person, persons, company, partnership, association, corporation or agent engaged in the manufacture or sale of any article of commerce or consumption produced, manufactured or mined in this State or elsewhere, shall, with the intent or purpose of driving out competition, or for the purpose of financially injuring competitors, sell within this State at less than cost of manufacture or production, or sell in such a way, or give away within this State, their products for the purpose of driving out competition or financially injuring competitors engaged in similar business, said person, persons, company, partnership, association, corporation or agent resorting to this method of securing a monopoly within this State in such business, shall be deemed guilty of a conspiracy to form or secure a trust or monopoly in restraint of trade, and on conviction thereof shall be subject to the penalties of this act.

Section 5. Any person, partnership, firm or association, or any representative or agent thereof, or any corporation or company, or any officer, representative or agent thereof, violating any of the provisions of this act shall forfeit not less than two hundred dollars nor more than five thousand dollars for every such offense, and each day such person, corporation, partnership or association shall continue to do so shall be a separate offense, the penalties in such cases to be recovered by an action in the name of the State, at the relation of the Attorney-General or the district or county attorney; the moneys thus collected to go into the state treasury, and to become a part of the general fund, except as hereinafter provided.

Section 6. If any two or more persons or corporations who are engaged in buying or selling any article of commerce, manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining or any article or thing whatsoever, shall enter into any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association or understanding to control or limit the trade in any such article or thing; or to limit competition in such trade by refusing to buy from or sell to any other person or corporation any such article or thing aforesaid, for the reason that such other person or corporation is not a member of or a party to such pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association or understanding; or shall boycott or threaten any person or corporation for buying from or selling to any other person or corporation who is not a member of or a party to such pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association or understanding any such article or thing aforesaid, it shall be a violation of this act; and any person, firm, corporation or association of persons committing such violation shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and shall be subject to the penalties prescribed in this act.

Section 7. Any corporation created or organized by or under the laws of this State, which shall violate any of the provisions of the preceding sections of this act, shall thereby forfeit its corporate rights and franchises; and its corporate existence shall, upon proper proof being made thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction in the State, be by the court declared forfeited, void and of non-effect, and shall thereupon cease and determine; and any corporation created or organized by or under the law of any other state or country, which shall violate any of the provisions of the preceding sections of this act shall thereby forfeit its right and privilege thereafter to do any business in this State, and upon proper proof being made thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction in the State, its rights and privileges to do business in this State shall be declared forfeited; and in all proceedings to have such forfeiture declared, proof that any person who has been acting as agent of such foreign corporation in transacting its business in this State, has been, while acting as such agent, and in the name, behalf, or interest of such foreign corporation, violating any provisions of the preceding sections of this act, shall be received as prima facie proof of the act of the corporation itself; and it shall be the duty of the clerk of said court to certify the decree thereof to the Secretary of State, and if it be an insurance company, to the Commissioner of Insurance, Statistics and History of the State, who shall take notice and be governed thereby as to the corporate powers and rights of said corporation."

This act was repealed by an act which became effective March 31, 1903, the provisions of which substantially affecting this case are comprised in the first thirteen sections, which are as follows:

"Section 1. BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF TEXAS: That a trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons, or either two or more of them for either, any, or all of the following purposes: 1. To create or which may tend to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce or aids to commerce or in the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this State. 2. To fix, maintain, increase or reduce the price of merchandise, produce, or commodities, or the cost of insurance, or of the preparation of any produce for market or transportation. 3. To prevent or lessen competition in the manufacture, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or commodities, or the business of insurance, or to prevent or lessen competition in aids to commerce, or in the preparation of any product for market or transportation. 4. To fix or maintain any standard or figure whereby the price of any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce, or the cost of transportation, or insurance, or the preparation of any product for market or transportation, shall be in any manner affected, controlled or established. 5. To make, enter into, maintain, execute or carry out any contract, obligation or agreement by which the parties thereto bind, or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of, transport or to prepare for market or transportation any article or commodity, or to make any contract of insurance at a price below a common standard or figure, or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article or commodity or charge for transportation or insurance, or the cost of the preparation of any product for market or transportation at a fixed or graded figure, or by which they shall in any manner affect or maintain the price of any commodity or article or the cost of transportation or insurance or the cost of the preparation of any product for market or transportation between them or themselves and others, to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity or business of transportation or insurance or the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or by which they shall agree to pool, combine or unite any interest they may have in connection with the sale or purchase of any article or commodity or charge for transportation or insurance or charge for the preparation of any product for market or transportation whereby its price or such charge might be in any manner affected. 6. To regulate, fix or limit the output of any article or commodity which may be manufactured, mined, produced or sold, or the amount of insurance which may be undertaken, or the amount of work that may be done in the preparation of any product for market or transportation. 7. To abstain from engaging in or continuing business or from the purchase or sale of merchandise, produce or commodities partially or entirely within the State of Texas, or any portion thereof.

Section 2. That a monopoly is a combination or consolidation of two or more corporations when effected in either of the following methods: 1. When the direction of the affairs of two or more corporations is in any manner brought under the same management or control for the purpose of producing, or where such common management or control tends to create a trust as defined in the first section of this Act. 2. Where any corporation acquires the shares or certificates of stock or bonds, franchise or other rights, or the physical properties, or any part thereof, of any other corporation or corporations, for the purpose of preventing or lessening, or where the effect of such acquisition tends to affect or lessen competition, whether such acquisition is accomplished directly or through the instrumentality of trustees or otherwise.

Section 3. That either or any of the following acts shall constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade: 1. Where any two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons who are engaged in buying or selling any article of merchandise, produce or any commodity, enter into an agreement or understanding to refuse to buy from or sell to any other person, firm, corporation, or association of persons any article of merchandise, produce or commodity. 2. Where any two or more persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons shall agree to boycott or threaten to refuse to buy from or sell to any person, firm, corporation or association of persons for buying from or selling to any other person, firm, corporation or association of persons.

Section 4. Any and all trusts, monopolies and conspiracies in restraint of trade as herein defined, are hereby prohibited and declared to be illegal.

Section 5. Any corporation holding a charter under the laws of the State of Texas, which shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall thereby forfeit its charter and franchise, and its corporate existence shall cease and determine.

Section 6. For a violation of any of the provisions of this act by any corporation mentioned herein, it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General, upon his own motion, and without leave or order of any judge or court, to institute suit or quo warranto proceedings in Travis County, at Austin, or at the county seat of any county in the State, where such corporation exists, does business, or may have a domicile, for the forfeiture of its charter rights and franchise, and the dissolution of its corporate existence.

Section 7. When a corporation organized under the laws of this State shall have been convicted of a violation of any of the provisions of this Act, and its charter and franchise has been forfeited, as provided in section 5, no other corporation to which the defaulting corporation may have transferred its properties and business, or which has assumed the payment of its obligations, shall be permitted to incorporate or do business in Texas.

Section 8. Every foreign corporation violating any of the provisions of this Act is hereby denied the right, and is prohibited from doing any business within this State, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to enforce this provision by injunction or other proceedings in the district court of Travis County, in the name of the State of Texas.

Section 9. The provisions of Chapter 92 of the Revised Statutes of this State of 1895, to prescribe the remedy and regulate the proceedings by quo warranto, etc., shall, except in so far as they conflict herewith, govern and control the proceedings when instituted to forfeit any charter under this Act.

Section 10. When any foreign corporation has been convicted of a violation of any of the provisions of this Act, and its right to do business in this State has been forfeited, as provided in Section 8 of this Act, no other corporation to which the defaulting corporation may have transferred its properties and business, or which has assumed the payment of its obligations shall be permitted to incorporate or do business in Texas.

Section 11. Each and every firm, person, corporation or association of persons who shall in any manner violate any of the provisions of this Act shall for each and every day that such violation shall be committed or continued, forfeit and pay the sum of fifty dollars, which may be recovered in the name of the State of Texas in any county where the offense is committed or where either of the offenders reside, or in Travis County, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General, or the district or county attorney under the direction of the Attorney-General, to prosecute for the recovery of the same, and the fees of the prosecuting attorney for representing the State in proceedings under this Act shall be over and above the fees allowed him under the general fee bill.

Section 12. Any contract or agreement in violation of the provisions of this Act shall be absolutely void and not enforcible either in law or equity.

Section 13. And in addition to the penalties and forfeitures herein provided for, every person violating this Act may further (be) punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than one nor more than ten years.

Under the provisions of these two acts, the Attorney-General of Texas and the County Attorney of Travis County of that State, on the 22nd of September, 1906, instituted a suit against the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to recover penalties under the Act of 1899, from the 29th day of May, 1900, until the 31st day of March, 1903, at the rate of five thousand dollars per day and under the Act of 1903 from the 31st day of March, 1903, until April 29, 1907, the date at which the last amended petition was filed, at the rate of fifty dollars per day.

The facts are: That in 1878 a Waters-Pierce Oil Company was organized to succeed the partnership of Waters, Pierce & Company, oil merchants of St. Louis. Its capital was one hundred thousand dollars, divided into one thousand shares of the par value of one hundred dollars each and was subscribed and owned, 40 per cent by Waters, Pierce & Company; 20 per cent by Chess Carley & Company; and 40 per cent by Hutchings & Thompson. In June, 1882, its capital was increased to four hundred thousand dollars and at that time its stock ownership stood: Hutchings & Thompson and Chess Carley & Company, 2,750 shares; H. C. Pierce, 1,250 shares. Subsequent to this time Hutchings & Thompson and Chess Carley & Company transferred their 2,750 shares to the trustees under what is generally known as the Standard Oil Trust Agreement of January 2, 1882, which we will later refer to. Mr. Pierce continued to own his shares up to the date of the dissolution of the company in May, 1900, and from the date of the organization of the company down to the date of its dissolution, managed and controlled its affairs.

When this company was first organized, it was distinctly agreed that its management should be conducted by Mr. H. C. Pierce who was then an experienced oil merchant, familiar with the trade and territory to which its business was to be confined, and this agreement was complied with until the dissolution of the company at the time above stated. The territory which this company was organized to develop and serve was a small part of Illinois, a part of Louisiana, and practically all that part of Missouri south of the Missouri River, Arkansas, Texas the Indian Territory and the Republic of Mexico. The oil business was then comparatively new and insignificant and the territory allotted to this company practically undeveloped in the oil trade. The business, in the opinion of the management of the company required great detail in facility for merchandising and watchfulness in upbuilding the business. To encourage the purchase of oil and popularize it and make its merchandise convenient and easy and to economize in the cost, the company, under Mr. Pierce's management, acquired tank cars for transporting the oil in bulk from the refineries to distributing stations where large local tanks were built to receive it in bulk; provided tank wagons in which to locally distribute oil in large or small quantities to dealers within a radius of ten to fifteen miles; and contrived iron barrels to ship to longer distances that could not be reached by wagon wherein the evaporation of oil would not take place and thereby occasion loss to the merchant—in short, every convenience that would administer in the economy of handling the oil, both to the consumer and its customers, and cheapen its use was instituted and enlarged upon as the business grew in proportions and the population of the territory in which its plant was constructed increased. By reason of these facilities and the increase in the population of this territory, the company's business grew from the sale of a few hundred thousand barrels at the date of its organization into millions of barrels before its dissolution.

This company was never a manufacturing or refining company in the United States. The only sources from which it could get in quantity and quality with promptness the oil necessary to supply its customers was the Standard Oil Company of Ohio and its successors in the refining business. From 1892 until the dissolution of the company its directorate consisted of Mr. Pierce, Mr. Findley, Mr. Pierce's brother-in-law, Mr. C. M. Adams, who had been with the company nearly all of its corporate life as an employee, Mr. Gruet, who had been employed by Mr. Pierce, and Mr. H. M. Tilford who resided in

New York. The home office of the company was at all times located at St. Louis and its business managed and ordered from there.

In 1900 a suit, which had been brought against this company by the State of Texas for the cancellation of its license to do business there because of a violation of some provision of the Anti-Trust Law of that State, culminated in a final judgment against it. This proceeding was based upon the acts of some of the agents of the company in making so-called exclusive contracts with local dealers which were held to be forbidden by the laws of Texas.

The Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Tex., 177 U. S., 28.

Thereupon, on the 28th day of May, 1900, this company was dissolved and a new company with the same name was, on the 29th day of May, 1900, organized under and pursuant to the laws of the State of Missouri. It was organized with a capital of four hundred thousand dollars by Mr. Pierce who subscribed and paid for the entire issue of stock. It took over all the property of the old company and gave notes in payment therefor which were subsequently honored at maturity.

At the time of the dissolution of the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had acquired the 2,750 shares which had previously been owned by Hutchings & Thompson and Chess Carley & Company and their successors, the trustees under the Standard Oil Trust Agreement of January 2, 1882. It is not pretended that Mr. Pierce did not consult the owner of the majority of stock in disposing of the property of the old company and its acquisition by the new. Counsel reported to Mr. Pierce, after a consultation with counsel representing the larger interests, that it had been understood that if the Standard Oil Company should retain the same interest in the new company it had in the old, it could do so, and accordingly, in the following September, Mr. Pierce transferred to it in blank the same number of shares in the new company that it had held in the old with the understanding that the shares should remain in his name on the stock book so as to give him the technical as well as the actual control of the company.

After the new company was organized its affairs and policies were managed by an executive committee at St. Louis, composed of Mr. Pierce, Mr. Findley, Mr. Pierce's brother-in-law, Mr. Adams, who had been employed by Mr. Pierce in the old company, Mr. Gruet, who had also been employed by Mr. Pierce in the old company, Mr. Johnson, general counsel, who had been Mr. Pierce's personal attorney, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Pierce's brother-in-law, and Mr. Ackert, a relative of Mr. Pierce. Neither the old nor the new Waters-Pierce Oil Company was ever a producer or refiner of oils in the United States, but acted as merchant for the brands of oil which had been established by the old company, and were manufactured for it and the new company by the refineries of the Standard Oil Company; both of them refined in Mexico oils which were sold there from crude oils which were purchased from the Standard Oil Company.

Mr. Pierce owned no stock or other interest in any oil producing or merchandising company other than the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. His business life had been devoted to developing and building up the business and trade of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, and during all of the time of its existence he was the principal manager and director of its affairs and controlled its policies. Because of the large volume of business between the Standard Oil Company and the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, there was of necessity a great volume of correspondence between the St. Louis officers of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and those of the Standard Oil Company at 26 Broadway, New York. This correspondence related to business dealings between the two companies of such character as would usually take place between persons engaged in constant trade as manufacturer and merchant. The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey was an owner of a little more than a two-third interest in the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and had a just and legal right to be informed from the offices of the latter, or through appointed agents, of the financial and business condition of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. The testimony is clear, conclusive and positive that, as to the purchasing of oil and the sale of oil in its territory, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company's management was entirely independent of any control or agreement between it and the officers of the Standard Oil Company or any other company whatsoever. It was neither claimed nor proven that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company of 1900, since its organiztion, had combined or confederated with any person or corporation, either in Texas or elsewhere, to fix or maintain the prices of any commodities in which it dealt or became a member of any trust or pool through which it shared in the earnings of any competitor, or that in any manner or form it sought to limit or control the output of any commodities in which it dealt.

The most important claim of infraction of either the Acts of 1899 or 1903, is that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey owned about 60 per cent. of the shares of its capital stock.

This plainly will appear from the charge of the court to the jury and the evidence. During the course of the trial, against the defendant's objections, the State offered in evidence an agreement commonly called the Standard Oil Trust Agreement, dated the second day of January, 1882, made "Exhibit A" to the bill and an agreement supplemental thereto, marked "Exhibit B." It was agreed that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did not sign this agreement, neither did Mr. Pierce nor was Mr. Pierce's stock ever deposited under the agreement.

The Standard Oil Company could not do business in Texas without a permit. It never did any business in Texas and never applied for a permit to engage in business there. It was always a refining company from which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company purchased its supplies.

The petition of the State of Texas charged that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had conspired with John D. Rockefeller, John D. Archbold, Henry M. Flagler and a number of other persons and corporations on, or about January 1st, 1870, for the purpose of monopolizing and controlling the business of refining, transporting and selling petroleum and the products thereof throughout the United States and in the State of Texas; that the predecessor of this plaintiff-in-error, the (old) Waters-

Pierce Oil Company, incorporated in 1878, had become a party to said conspiracy, and had entered into contracts with certain corporations and individuals engaged in the business of selling petroleum and the products thereof in the State of Texas by the terms of which said plaintiff-in-error acquired the properties of said individuals and corporations, all for the purpose of monopolizing the business of selling petroleum and the products thereof within said State and suppressing competition therein. Said petition further alleged that the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company, plaintiff-in-error, had entered into an agreement with the Standard Oil Company, a corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey, for the further purpose of monopolizing the trade in petroleum and the products thereof in the State of Texas; and, for the further purpose of carrying out said contract and conspiracies, had permitted the said Standard Oil Company to acquire a majority of the shares of stock of the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company and had thereby transferred the management and control of the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company to the said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey; that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, plaintiff-in-error, not only succeeded to all the property of its predecessor, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, which voluntarily dissolved May 29, 1900, but also assumed all the contracts and agreements of said predecessor, especially those above referred to, with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and other corporations and individuals; and that said plaintiff-in-error had effected a mere nominal reorganization for the purpose of perpetrating a fraud upon the State of Texas, and to enable the company to maintain its business in said State, and that the permit of said plaintiff-in-error to do business in Texas was fraudulently obtained. Said petition further charged that the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company was dominated and controlled in its business by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey; that through the contracts and conspiracies aforesaid a large number of individuals and corporations doing business in the sale of oil and petroleum products were excluded from doing business within said State, whereby competition was suppressed and destroyed and a substantially complete monopoly in petroleum products established. Said petition further alleged that said acts, conspiracies and agreements were done, continued and performed by plaintiff-in-error upon each and every day from the 31st day of May, 1900, to the 31st day of March, 1903, in violation of the Anti-Trust Act of 1899, and from the 31st day of March, 1903, up to the time of bringing this suit upon each and every day within said period in violation of the Anti-Trust Act of 1903. (Transcript, pp. 1 to 39.)

To the petition of the State of Texas, plaintiff-in-error made answer by general and special exceptions, general denial and certain special pleas wherein plaintiff-in-error denied the constitutionality of said Acts of 1899 and 1903 in so far as it was sought thereunder to hold plaintiff-in-error liable for the acts and things alleged and charged in said petition, and further defended that if the petition of the State of Texas and the prayer therein should be granted, this plaintiff-in-error would be denied the equal protection of the laws, be subjected to ex post facto laws, deprived of its property without due process of law, and have the obligation of its contracts impaired, all contrary to the express provisions of the United States Constitution. (Transcript, pp. 43 to 95.)

Trial was had at the May Term, 1907, of the District Court of Travis County, Texas, resulting, on June 1st, 1907, in a verdict in favor of said State of Texas and against this plaintiff-in-error for the sum of $1,623,900.00, and cancelling said permit of plaintiff-in-error to do business in the State of Texas, whereupon said District Court of Travis County, Texas, entered judgment in accordance with said verdict, that the State of Texas have and recover from plaintiff-in-error herein the sum set forth in said verdict, with interest and cost of suit and did order and decree that the permit of the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company, plaintiff-in-error, to do business in the State of Texas be cancelled and that the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company be perpetually enjoined and prohibited from doing any and all business, except interstate business, within the State of Texas. (Transcript, pp. 334 and 335.)

In due time, plaintiff-in-error filed its motion for a new trial, which motion was overruled by said District Court, whereupon plaintiff-in-error excepted and gave notice of appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas. (Transcript, pp. 315 to 320.)

Subsequent to overruling the above motion for a new trial and before plaintiff-in-error had given its supersedeas appeal bond from said judgment against it, said District Court, upon motion of the State of Texas, filed in the main case, appointed a receiver of the property, assets and business of said Waters-Pierce Oil Company, situate in the State of Texas, to which action of said court this plaintiff-in-error duly excepted and gave notice of appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas. (Transcript, pp. 327 to 328.) The Court of Civil Appeals affirmed the judgment, decree and orders of the court below. (Transcript. p. 1162.)

In due time plaintiff-in-error filed with the Supreme Court of Texas its application for a writ of error to said Court of Civil Appeals, which said application was on February 26, 1908, refused by said Supreme Court of Texas. (Transcript, p. 1187.)

Whereupon, said Waters-Pierce Oil Company, plaintiff-in-error herein, applied for and obtained from this court a writ of error to said Court of Civil Appeals to review its judgment upon assignments of error which are substantially in part epitomized under the title of Points and Authorities.

ARGUMENT.

I.

THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY CANNOT BE HELD LIABLE AND PUNISHED FOR THE ACTS OR ENGAGEMENT OF THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY, WHICH IT COULD NEITHER ORDER, FORBID OR CONTROL.

As self-evident and incontrovertible as the above proposition would seem to be, the record in this case clearly shows that the foundation upon which the State of Texas built its prosecution of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in this suit, consists wholly in an absolute negation of this proposition. Everything alleged to have been done by plaintiff-in-error in violation of the Anti-Trust Laws of Texas, every act alleged to have been committed, and for which plaintiff-in-error stands convicted, is referred back in every instance to the one fact insistently alleged by the State (and freely admitted by plaintiff-in-error), that the Standard Oil Company had acquired and owned a majority of the stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company; and for this grievious sin an enormous fine is imposed and its valuable business in the State of Texas destroyed at one blow, by the cancellation of its permit.

In the 11th paragraph of the trial court's charge to the jury, this language is employed (Record p. 1148):

> "If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had on March 30, 1903, or any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907, acquired a majority of the capital stock of the defendant corporation and thereby effected a combination of said two corporations, and if you further find from a preponderance of the evidence that said stock was acquired and combination effected, if any, with the purpose and intention on the part of the managing officers and directors of said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of preventing or lessening the competition in the sale in Texas of the character and kind of oil above mentioned or that the effect of said combination, if such there were, tended to affect or lessen the competition in the sale in Texas of said oil, you will return a verdict for the State and say by your verdict: We, the jury, find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph 11 of the court's charge. In this connection, you are instructed that if the defendant entered into a monopoly of the character mentioned in this paragraph of the charge, each day between March 30, 1903, and April 29, 1907, that it remained a party to such monopoly, if there were any such days, constituted a separate violation of the Anti-Trust Laws of Texas.

If you do not find from a preponderance of the evidence that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had on March 31, 1903, or on some date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907, acquired a majority of the capital stock of the defendant corporation, and if you do not further find from a preponderance of the evidence that said stock was acquired and combination effected, if it were at all, with the purpose and intention on the part of the managing officers and directors of said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of preventing or lessening the competition in the sale in Texas of said character and kind of oil or that the effect of said combination, if such there were, tended to affect or lessen the competition in the sale in Texas of said oil, you will say by your verdict, we, the jury, find in defendant's favor on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph 11 of the court's charge."

The above is a fair sample of the attitude assumed both by the State of Texas in its petition and by the trial court in the trial of said cause. The underlying idea, as exhibited by the record, is clearly that in the mind of the court the simple fact that the Standard Oil Company had at some time in the past acquired and at the dates above mentioned owned a portion of the stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, was in and of itself enough to convict the Waters-Pierce Oil Company of a violation of the Anti-Trust Laws of the State. Not one single shred of evidence can be found in the voluminous record herein to indicate, even remotely, that the acquisition of said stock by the Standard Oil Company was with the knowledge or consent of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company or that such acquisition could in any manner have been prevented by it. On the contrary, the uncontradicted evidence shows that the stock in the old Waters-Pierce Company, the predecessor of this plaintiff-in-error, was originally acquired, many years before the filing of this suit, by purchase from some of the stockholders of the old Waters-Pierce Company, and that upon the dissolution of that company in 1900, and the distribution of its assets, among its then existing stockholders, the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company, which succeeded to the property and good-will of its predecessor, purchased the same from the owners thereof, and the stock of the new company in that transaction given to the Standard Oil Company was naught but the legitimate exchange of one valuable property for the other, to-wit: the stock of the new company for the interest of one stockholder as tenant-in-common with the other stockholders of the property of the old Waters-Pierce Company which had been dissolved.

There is absolutely nothing in the record to show that this plaintiff-in-error was in a position to forbid or prevent the Standard Oil Company acquiring a portion of its stock. There is nothing to show that that acquisition was unlawful, but, on the contrary, the charter of the Standard Oil Company, as the record shows, distinctly gave it the right to acquire, own and hold stock in other corporations. Whether the exercise of this power was lawful or unlawful in the State of Texas is outside the question, for that power never was exercised in the State of Texas. The stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was acquired by the Standard Oil Company in the State of Missouri, where the former corporation was domiciled.

But, admitting even, for the sake of argument, that the acquisition of stock of one corporation by another corporation is unlawful, it surely cannot be urged that this will furnish ground for criminal charges against the corporation whose stock is so acquired.

There are some things so deeply written in the natural spirit of justice in the human race that we need not seek for them in written law or constitution, and no principle would seem to be more deeply founded in justice and right than this, that no man shall be called upon to answer for any but his own acts, or at most, for those of others which he could either legally control or prevent. The most despotic monarch has never dared to assert a contrary principle. And surely, in this land of ours, in a government erected by the people, for the protection of their rights and their liberties, this principle must be recognized to its fullest extent.

It is not to be wondered, therefore, that few cases can be found either in the English or American courts in which this point has ever been directly raised. The question involved here is perhaps rather one dealing with the philosophy of government than with the science of law as interpreted by the courts, and yet, every great constitutional question which has come before the courts of this land, especially those which have been the subject of such careful investigation by this court and in which the question of "due process of law" has been presented, has almost invariably given rise to some expression on the part of the eminent expounders of the constitution emphasizing the fact that the "law of the land," secured to the Anglo-Saxon race even before the days of Magna Charta, seeks to hold no man liable save for his own acts or omissions, or those which he was under legal duty to control or prevent and where the means and opportunity to exercise the duty was given.

The question here involved has been presented to the courts in one way on numerous occasions, namely: in the matter of the succession of one corporation to the property or business of another; and the rule of law established in those cases that there is no liability on the part of the successor corporation, which in good faith and for value has purchased the property of its predecessor, for the latter's torts or contracts has become so firmly established and so universally recognized that comment upon it would seem superfluous.

In the Capitol Traction Company v. Offutt (17 App. D. C. 292; 53 L. R. A. 390), in discussing the question of the liability of such successor corporation, the court, speaking through Morris, J., uses this language:

> "The assignments of error are exceedingly numerous, amounting to seventy-seven in all, but we do not deem it necessary to consider all of these or, indeed, more than one of them, for we are of the opinion that this suit cannot be sustained against the Capitol Traction Company for the alleged delinquency of the Washington & Georgetown Railroad Company. We know of no rule or principle of the common law that would authorize suit to be maintained against one person who is sui juris for the default of another person who is equally sui juris whether the persons be natural persons or corporations, for one corporation can no more be held for the default of another corporation than can one natural person for the default of another natural person."

In Durkin v. Kingston Coal Co., (171 Penn. 193; 29 L. R. A. 808), the question was presented to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court of the liability of the Coal Company for injuries received by plaintiff, caused by the negligence of a mine boss whom the mine owner, by statute, was compelled to employ, and with whose acts he could not interfere, his duties being prescribed by the Act. In holding the imposition of liability upon the mine owner for the negligence of such foreman unconstitutional and void the court, speaking through Williams, J., uses the following language:

> "Incredible as it may seem, obedience on the part of the mine owner does not protect him, but if the mine foreman fails to do properly what the statute directs him to do, the mine owner is declared to be responsible for all of the consequences of the incompetency of the representative of the State. This is a strong case of binding the consequences of the faut or folly of one man upon the shoulders of another. This is worse than taxation without representation. It is civl responsibility without blame for the fault of another."

In Commonwealth ex rel. v. Pouxentawney Water Works (197 Pa. St. 569; 47 At. 843), it was sought to forfeit the charter of defendant because it had transferred its property and franchises to the Lindsey Water Company and thereby rested in the latter company the management and control of the defendant. Proof offered to sustain the allegations consisted of evidence of the fact that by purchase from the stockholders of the defendant company, the Lindsey Water Company had acquired a majority of the stock of the defendant. In refusing to hold defendant liable, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, speaking through Brown, J., says:

> "What the majority of the stockholders did was to sell their stock, as was their right, and through the purchasers it passed into the control of the Lindsey Water Co. * * Though such sales may give to the Lindsey Water Co. subquently acquiring the stock, a controlling interest in the Pouxentawney Water Works, the latter could not have prevented the sales, and not having been a party to them, is not accountable for them or for their effect. * * * * No misconduct of the Lindsey Water Co., and nothing that one or more of the majority of the stockholders of the defendant water company may have done in disposing of their stock, can be charged to it. If it is to be punished, it must be for its own sins and not for those of another."

From the above it will be seen that the courts admit, without discussion almost, the truth of the proposition that the right to be held responsible only for one's own acts or omissions or for those of others over whom one has some legally recognized control is fundamental. This is not a right born of any particular system of law, but is imbedded and inherent in human nature itself. Nor can it be conceived that the consent of the individual, upon which government alone is based, could ever be construed to yield or surrender this right to any government. If there ever was a "natural law," surely this is one and the fact that the books reveal so few cases in which this proposition has ever been squarely presented to the courts is a strong argument in favor of its axiomatic nature. As well raise the question whether a man is entitled to defend his own life. It is a "self-evident truth," included in the "right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," the foundation stone upon which our constitution and government rests. No man ever surrendered to any government authority for the imposition of vicarious punishment. No despotism ever claimed its surrender.

The section of the law in regard to which the instruction of the court above noted was given to the jury, is section 2 of the Act of March 31, 1903, which provides:

> "That a monopoly is a combination or consolidation of two or more corporations when effected in either of the following methods:
> (1.) * * * * * * * * * *
> (2.) Where any corporation acquires the shares of certificates of stock or bonds, franchises or other rights or the physical properties or any part thereof of any other corporation or corporations for the purpose of preventing or lessening competition or where the effect of such acquisition tends to affect or lessen competition, whether such acquisition is accomplished directly or through the instrumentality of trustees or otherwise."

Examining the charge of the court in the light of the above, it is evident that the court gave to this act an ex post facto operation in that it made the question of defendant's guilt or innocence under said Act of March 31, 1903, depend upon the purpose and intention on the part of the managing officers and directors of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey in doing an act, to-wit: purchasing the stock of this plaintiff-in-error long prior to the taking effect of said Act of March 31, 1903, contrary to the provisions of paragraph 1, section 10, article 1 of the Constitution of the United States. It was not only shown by the evidence introduced at the trial of said cause but was plainly alleged in the petition on the part of the State of Texas that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey on May 29, 1900, acquired and since that date had continuously owned a majority of the capital stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. Notwithstanding this, however, it is attempted to assert a liability under the Act of 1903, for acts done and intentions formed at least three years prior to the passage thereof.

(a.) THE CAPACITY OF THE STANDARD OIL CO. TO ACQUIRE AND HOLD THE STOCK OF THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY MUST BE DETERMINED BY ITS CHARTER AND THE CONDITIONS OF SUBSCRIPTION AND NATURE OF THE STOCK CERTIFICATES

UNDER THE LAW OF THE STATE WHEREIN THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL CO. WAS CREATED, TO-WIT: THE STATE OF MISSOURI, AND NOT THE STATE OF TEXAS.

It is a rule well-recognized in corporation law that the law of the corporation's domicile governs exclusively in all matters affecting its creation, organization and internal management. "The validity and effect of a transfer of shares are governed by the laws of the state or country in which the corporation was created, although the transfer may be made in another state or country and both of the parties may reside there." (Marshall on Corporations, p. 805.)

In Black v. Zacharie (3 Howard, 483), Mr. Justice Story lays down the following rule:

> "From the nature of the stock of a corporation, which is created by and under the authority of a state, it is necessarily like every other attribute of a corporation to be governed by the local law of that state and not by the local law of any foreign state."

In Meramec Mining Company v. Levy, (54 Penn. St. 227; 93 Am. Dec. 697), the plaintff, a Michigan corporation, brought suit to recover from an original subscriber the instalments on the stock called since he became a stockholder, and, in deciding the question involved, the Pennsylvania Court clearly recognized the above doctrine by declaring that in determining the duties and obligations of stockholders in the Michigan Company, the court would be guided by the ruling of the Michigan Court.

In Ireland v. Globe Milling & Reduction Co. (R. I. 1895), 32 Atl. 921, the Supreme Court of Rhode Island, in passing upon the question as to the situs of stock for the purpose of attachment, uses the following language:

> "The situs of the stock for the purpose of attachment and execution is the domicile of the corporation and that place only." (Citing Cook S. & S., 3rd ed. paragraph 485, and cases cited, and Plimpton v. Bigelow, 93 N. Y. 592, 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 632, and cases cited. Winslow v. Fletcher, 53 Conn. 394.) "And a corporation can have but one legal residence and that must be within the state or sovereignty creating it, although by comity it may be allowed to do business through its officers and agents in other jurisdictions."

Judge Lowell, in his able treatise on the Law of Stocks, paragraph 50, declares that:

"Whatever the general principles of international law in relation to assignment of personal claims may be, the validity of a transfer of stock is governed by the law of the place where the corporation is created."

And this principle is distinctly recognized in Masury v. Ark. National Bank (87 Fed. Rep. 381), in which it is distinctly held that unless the transfer of the stock in question is valid under the laws of Arkansas, (the state which created the corporation) the laws of the state where the transfer was itself actually made cannot control.

From the above authorities, the conclusion would seem to be inevitable that it is beyond the constitutional powers of a state to declare who shall or shall not be qualified to own and hold stock in a corporation chartered in a foreign state, and especially, as in this case, to attempt to regulate or prohibit such stock ownership on the part of persons wholly outside the jurisdiction of the state.

No question is raised here as to the right of a state to declare as a condition precedent to admission of a foreign corporation who shall or shall not be stockholders therein, or even to make the continued right of the foreign corporation to do business within the state dependent upon such conditions subsequently enacted and declared, but it is contended that no power is given a state to determine the qualifications of stockholders in a corporation organized in a foreign state.

In this connection, the case of Greenwood v. Curtis, 6 Mass., 358, is not without considerable weight. The action was one of assumpsit on a promissory note for the delivery of slaves and the payment of "bars," an African currency. The note was made at Rio Pongos on the coast of Africa for the delivery of slaves there on demand. The action on the note was brought in Massachusetts, where contracts of this sort were wholly and and entirely unlawful. In answer to the argument urging the invalidity of such a contract in Massachusetts, Judge Story uses the following language:

> "By the common law upon principles of national comity, a contract made in a foreign place and to be there executed, if valid by the laws of that place, may be a legitimate ground of action in the courts of this state; although such contract may not be valid by our laws or even may be prohibited to our citizens."

The above case is referred to primarily for the purpose of showing how deeply rooted in our system of jurisprudence is the rule that contracts, if valid where made, are valid everywhere. As bearing upon the case at bar, if the acquisition of the stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company by the Standard Oil Company is looked upon solely from its contractual side then it is obvious that the law of the State of Missouri alone can govern.

There is nothing whatever in the law of the State of Missouri which in any manner forbids, prevents or limits the right of the owner of stock in a corporation selling such stock to whomsoever he pleases; while it is true that the right of such purchaser to exercise the privileges and rights of the stockholder in such corporation may be questioned under circumstances, this nevertheless remains as an established principle of law in the state, that such limitations or restrictions can and do affect only the vendee and not the vendor of the stock.

Section 965 of the Revised Statutes of the State of Missouri, 1899, reads as follows:

> "The stock of every company formed under this article, providing or the organization and general powers, duties and liabilities of corporations with incidental matters of practice, shall be deemed personal estate and shall be transferable in the manner prescribed by the by-laws of the company; but no shares shall be transferred until all previous calls thereon shall have been fully paid in."

Such has been the law in Missouri with respect to the status of stock in a corporation ever since the organization of the state, and time and again the courts of the state have denied the right to limit, obstruct or forbid the free transfer of stock upon the ground that this would constitute an unlawful restraint in the freedom of alienation of property. To all intents and purposes, corporation stock has been practically treated as negotiable paper. Says the Missouri Court of Appeals, in Watson v. Woody Printing Co.(56 Missouri Appeals, 151).

> "Stock in a corporation is personal property and the certificate is only evidence of the title thereto. The stock certificates are the declarations in writing by the company's officers as to who are entitled to participate in its benefits—its profits or losses, the latter being limited by the extent of stock owned. They are not negotiable paper in the sense in which the term is applied to commercial notes, bonds and the like, but the stock is considered transferred when a certificate is assigned, thus differing from other muniments of title."

In Bank v. Durfee, (118 Mo. 442), the Supreme Court of Missouri, again declaring corporation stock to be personal property and the right of alienation to be incident thereof, held that the by-law which provided that no transfer of stock should be allowed or valid as long as the holder was in arrears to the corporation, and whereby a lien was reserved on the stock to secure any debt of the stockholder, was in restraint of trade, against public policy, and therefore void.

In the leading case of Trust & Savings Company v. Home Lumber Company (118 Mo. 459), the Supreme Court had occasion to re-examine the freedom of alienation of stock, and after re-affirming all that had been heretofore said by the courts of the state, as shown in the above citations, further declared that unless some restriction was placed upon the transfer of stock, by the public law of the state, or the owner of the stock was bound by some valid restrictive contract of which the purchaser had notice, the latter who bought in good faith and for consideration could not be held bound by any restriction or lien of which he did not have notice.

The most recent discussion of this question appears in the Boatmens Bank v. Gillespie, (209 Mo. 217), decided in 1907. Questions very similar to the questions at bar were raised in the Missouri case. The legal existence of the corporation was attacked, among other grounds upon this, that the persons who signed the articles of incorporation, or at least a majority of them, were residents of Kansas, and not of Missouri, and that the charter was procured in Missouri for the purpose of evading the liability of stockholders under the Kansas law. In commenting upon this proposition, the Supreme Court of Missouri, speaking through Burgess, J. says:

> "The evidence shows that the corporation did but a small portion of its business in Kansas City. Besides we understand it to be a universal doctrine that where citizens of one state desire to do business under a charter obtained in another state whose corporation laws seem to them more favorable than the laws of the state in which they resided, they have the right to do so upon compliance with the laws of such other state. There is nothing in our laws which forbids citizens of this state who have incorporated here to sell all their stock to non-residents."

From the above, it would seem clearly apparent that there was nothing in the law of the State of Missouri, in which said plaintiff-in-error was organized, forbidding or preventing it from selling any portion of its stock to the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, if it had chosen to do so. With respect to this point, however, the record clearly shows that this stock was originally acquired by the Standard Oil Company, not from the Waters-Pierce Company, but by the purchase and assignment from some of the stockholders of the latter company.

The record further shows that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey possessed complete and adequate authority under its charter to purchase the stock or any portion thereof of the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. although it is submitted that the use or abuse of its powers by the Standard Oil Company can hardly be drawn into question here.

(b.) IF THE HOLDING OF STOCK BY THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF NEW JERSEY IN THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY OF MISSOURI WAS UNLAWFUL, IT WAS AN OFFENSE ON THE PART OF THE HOLDING COMPANY, AND NOT OF THE COMPANY WHOSE STOCK WAS SO HELD, THE ACQUISITION OF WHICH IT COULD NEITHER FORBID NOR PREVENT.

Paragraph 2 of section 2 of the Act of March 31, 1903, above quoted, defines a monopoly as a combination or consolidation of two or more corporations when effected (among other methods) by the acquisition of the shares or certificates of stock, etc., of another corporation, for the purpose of preventing or lessening competition, etc.

The plain language of this provision of the statute can be susceptible of no other construction than that, if it defines any offense at all, it makes the offense consist of acquiring the shares or certificates of stock of another corporation—an offense by the corporation so acquiring such shares or certificates of stock, and not an offense by the corporation whose shares of stock are so acquired. The combination or consolidation is therefore under the terms of the Act effected only by the act of the acquiring corporation.

It is apparent that all the evils sought to be prevented in the above act could be accomplished without the knowledge or consent of the corporation whose shares or certificates of stock were thus acquired, and without the knowledge or consent of the other stockholders. Under the instructions of the trial court and in the interpretation of the law by the Court of Appeals, the corporation whose shares of stock were thus acquired without its knowledge and without the knowledge of the other stockholders is subjected to the penalties provided by the Act, and innocent stockholders made to suffer with the guilty corporation whose act and purpose in acquiring the stock alone constitutes the gravamen of the offense.

To illustrate this contention, it being admitted as true, that a corporation cannot prevent its individual stockholders from transferring their certificates of stock to such persons or corporations as they may see fit, if the corporation desiring to acquire a majority of the stock of another corporation for the purpose of affecting or lessening, or even destroying, competition should constitute certain persons its agents for the purpose of buying such stock, go into the open market and buy the same or by separate private contracts and for valuable consideration purchase the holdings of respective stockholders, taking the transfers in the names of such agents as trustees for the acquiring corporation and keeping the fact of the beneficial ownership of the acquiring corporation in such stock absolutely concealed from every stockholder of the other corporation and from all its officers and directors—if the ruling of the court below be correct, the corporation whose stock is so acquired is guilty of an offense, although it did not commit the offense and did not even know that it had been committed, contrary to the fundamental and well-recognized principle of justice and right which declares that no one shall be punished for the commission of an act for which he is in no wise responsible. It is certainly something new in criminal jurisprudence for a court to hold that A can be punished for an act committed by B, when A. was wholly ignorant of the commission of the act and in no way knowingly contributed to its commission. If the law as interpreted by the court below is correct and if it be true that the question as to whether or not the corporation whose stock is acquired by another corporation is guilty of an offense can be made to depend solely and alone upon the purpose had by such other corporation then so acquiring such stock, then, the corporation whose stock is so acquired can be made to suffer the penalties imposed by the act by the other corporation acquiring even less than a majority of the stock with the purpose and intention of forming a combination with other individual stockholders so as to obtain control of the corporation and affect or lessen competition. Now, in such a case, even if the managing officers and directors of the corporation whose stock is thus acquired are cognizant of the fact that the other corporation has acquired a majority of its stock, can it be held under any principle of law or justice that the corporation whose stock has been so acquired would be guilty of an offense without anything done by it to contribute to such acquisition, without even knowing the purpose and intent of such acquisition by such other corporation?

In answer to the above argument, it may be contended on behalf of the State of Texas, that the acquisition by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of a majority of the stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was made with the knowledge and consent of all the stockholders of the latter corporation. Admitting this, for the sake of the argument, to be true, we nevertheless contend that whether or not the Waters-Pierce Oil Company thereby became guilty of an offense cannot be made to depend upon the purpose and intention of the managing officers and directors of the Standard Oil Company, as the trial court instructed the jury and the appellate court interpreted the law. Admitting that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and its stockholders actually knew of such acquisition, they could very easily have been wholly ignorant of the purpose and intention of the Standard Oil Company to affect or lessen competition by such acquisition of stock, if such was its intention. Mr. Pierce, tendered as a witness for the State of Texas, was the only witness who testified with reference to this question and he testified that when this plaintiff-in-error was formed and organized, the officers composing the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey agreed that he, Mr. Pierce, should manage the Waters-Pierce Oil Company without any interference, dictation or control by the Standard Oil Company. No evidence appears in the record to contradict this; on the contrary, all the officers of the company, whose testimony was offered in evidence by the State, confirmed Mr. Pierce's statement in every particular in declaring that at no time—with the exception of the brief period mentioned by Mr. Pierce—was the company managed or controlled by any one but Mr. Pierce and his chosen officers and agents. Now, taking this statement as true, if the secret purpose of the officers and agents of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey was to violate the agreement made with Mr. Pierce and to utilize the acquisition of stock in the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to prevent or lessen competition in the sale of oil in Texas, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, under the charge of the trial court and the interpretation of the law in the appellate court, would be held guilty under the Act, however ignorant Mr. Pierce and the other officers of plaintiff-in-error may actually have been with respect to the real purpose and intent of the Standard Oil Company, and however much they may have trusted in the good faith of the officers of that company in promising and agreeing that no attempt would be made on the part of the Standard Oil Company to interfere with Mr. Pierce's management and control of plaintiff-in-error. The agreement to which Mr. Pierce testified was by no means an unusual one. Under the facts as shown by the record, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was doing a large and profitable business, a business built up by years of painstaking effort by Mr. Pierce, and Mr. Pierce could very easily have believed that the Standard Oil Company would be satisfied with the dividends which would accrue to it as a stockholder and that they would not attempt to do what they had promised not to do—interfere with his management or control. Under all the facts and circumstances, the agreement was a perfectly natural and reasonable one.

There is nothing in the record to show that the acquisition of the stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, was effected by anything in the nature of a voluntary sale of said stock to the Standard Oil Company, by the Waters-Pierce Oil Co., but on the contrary, the uncontradicted evidence conclusively shows that the entrance of the Standard Oil Company into the affairs of the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company was brought about entirely by the action of certain stockholders of the latter company in selling their stock to the Standard Oil Company or transferring it to the trustees under the Standard Oil Trust Agreement, a thing which, so far as the law of the State of Missouri (wherein the old company was organized), is concerned, was wholly lawful. As hereinafter more clearly pointed out, upon the dissolution of the old company, the various stockholders thereof became tenants-in-common of its property, both tangible and intangible, and were as legally qualified to dispose thereof in such manner and form as they saw fit, as was the holder of any personal property in the State of Missouri. The uncontradicted evidence shows that upon the organization of the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company, Mr. Pierce himself subscribed for all of the stock and paid therefor himself, and that thereafter he purchased the interest which the Standard Oil Company had in the property of the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company, paying therefor in stock, and then turned that property over to the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company, taking in payment therefor, the notes of the company which were subsequently liquidated.

Whatever view may be taken of the transaction or transactions through which the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey was vested with the ownership of the majority of the stock of the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company, this fact (as we have above pointed out) must not be overlooked, namely, that so far as the vendor of that stock—be it the Waters-Pierce Oil Company or Mr. Pierce—was concerned, the right to sell the same to anyone who would buy was unquestioned. Certainly when by the law of the State where the corporation is created the freedom of alienation of stock is emphatically recognized, it can hardly be contended that a foreign state in which said corporation does business can declare that to be a crime and punishable offense, which by the law of the corporation's domicile is valid and authorized.

From the above, the conclusion seems irresistible that if any offense has been committed under the above Act, it is an offense on the part of the Standard Oil Company and not on the part of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company.

(c.) IN DECLARING IT UNLAWFUL FOR THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY TO OWN STOCK IN THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY AND PUNISHING THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY ON ACCOUNT OF

SUCH OWNERSHIP, THE LATTER IS NOT ONLY DEPRIVED OF ITS PROPERTY WITHOUT DUE PROCESS OF LAW AND DENIED THE EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS, BUT SUCH LAW DIRECTLY IMPAIRS THE OBLIGATION OF A CONTRACT IN THAT IT DENIES A STOCKHOLDER OF THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY THE RIGHT TO TRANSFER HIS STOCK TO WHOM HE PLEASES.

A stockholder in a corporation has an absolute right, prior to the dissolution of the corporation, to transfer his shares to whomsoever he may see fit, provided the transfer is bona fide and to a person having capacity to assume the obligations of a stockholder, unless such right is restricted by the charter of the corporation or some statutory provision, by a valid by-law or by a valid agreement with the corporation, and he cannot be deprived of this right by the corporation or the other stockholders without his consent. (Marshall on Corporations, paragraph 314; 1 Cook on Corporations, paragraph 12 and paragraph 331.)

In the latter authority above cited, Mr. Cook declares, "that shares of stock in a corporation are transferable the same as other personal property and that this is a principle of law coeval with the principle of stock itself."

As has already been pointed out, the right to transfer shares is given and subject to regulations and limitation only by the law of the state by which the corporation was created.

There are numerous cases, both in America and England, in which this question in one form or another has been presented to the courts, and the rule as above laid down has been uniformly recognized. The conclusion therefrom is that a stockholder, having once gained title to the stock of a corporation, stands in a relation of contract to that corporation in that no limitation may be placed upon his freedom of alienation of such stock without his consent, and in a like contractual situation with respect to the state, and from both situations there arises a duty on the part of the corporation whose stock he holds, as well as upon the state which created the corporation, to enact no rule, regulation or law without his consent which shall in anywise abridge or limit this freedom of alienation which was a part of the property right in his stock when he acquired the same. Any law, therefore, of the state, the effect of which is to place a limitation or restriction upon this freedom of alienation, is within the prohibition of the Federal Constitution, in that it plainly interferes with the obligation of the contract between the stockholder and the corporation—if not between him and the state—through which arises and is secured the absolute freedom of alienation of his stock to whom he pleases.

The courts have always been jealous in their protection of this right of the stockholder to dispose of his stock when and how and to whom he pleases, and in a multitude of cases have declared that by-laws of the corporation restricting this right—by-laws which were in existence even when the stock was sold to the stockholder originally—were void, in that they constituted an unreasonable and evident restraint upon the alienation of property and in that respect were contrary to public policy.

Moore v. Bank of Commerce, 52 Mo. 377;

In re Klous, 67 Wis. 401;

Brinkerhoff-Farris Trust & Saving Co. v. Home Lumber Co. 118 Mo. 447;

Feckheimer v. National Exchange Bank of Norfolk, 79 Va. 80.

In Trisconi v. Winship, (43 La. Annual 45, 26, Am. St. Rep. 175,) the Supreme Court of Louisiana held that as a general rule stockholders indisputably have the right to sell their shares at pleasure, and in the Victor G. Bloede Co. v. Bloede, (84 Md. 129-142, 57 Am. St. Rep. 373,) the same principle was enunciated and applied.

In McNulte v. Corn Belt Bank, (164 Ill. 427; 56 Am. St. Rep. 203,) the Supreme Court of Illinois, speaking through Magruder J., declared that a by-law which attempted to restrain freedom of alienation of stock was illegal and void.

> "Not only because it seeks to keep the future action of the stockholders in reference to the increase of the stock in subjection to the original directors who passed the by-laws, but also because it attempts to limit the right to sell or transfer stock by imposing unreasonable conditions. Shares of stock in a corporation are as transferable as any other kind of personal property: and all unreasonable attempts to restrain the right to transfer such shares are void as being against public policy."

(Citing 1, Cook on S. & S, sec. 331.)

In Weston's Case (L. R. 4 Ch. App. 20), this question of the right of alienating shares at will was squarely presented to the English Court of Appeals, in Chancery, and the same principle was recognized as being fundamental in the English law. The language of Sir W. Page Wood, L. J., is pertinent to the case at bar. He says:

> "It would be a very serious thing for the shareholders in one of these companies to be told that the shares, the whole value of which consists in being marketable and passing freely from hand to hand, are to be subject to a clause of restriction which they do not find in the articles.

Applying this language to the case under discussion, we may well say that it would be a very serious thing for the shareholders in the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to be told that their shares were subject to a law of the State of Texas restricting the alienation thereof, especially when such law had been enacted long after such shares had been acquired and by a state in which the company was not organized or chartered nor in which any of its stockholders are or were domiciled but which state had the power—we do not say the right—to punish the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and through it every shareholder therein, because such shares had been acquired by persons or corporations contrary to the will of the State of Texas. The mere statement of such a proposition is in itself a sufficient answer to it.

The plain effect of the statute, in the preceding paragraph of this argument referred to, as interpreted both by the trial and appellate court of Texas, is to punish the innocent stockholders of a corporation because one stockholder has transferred his stock to some person or corporation contrary to the law of a foreign state, and this punishment is imposed in the nature of a heavy fine, the payment of which means an equivalent reduction of assets of the corporation and of the value of every share of stock, thus directly affecting the value of every share of stock outstanding, and, consequently, the property of every stockholder.

Such a law distinctly impairs the obligation of the contract between the stockholder and the corporation when he bought his stock, which obligation adheres to the stock into whosoever hands it comes.

We wish to be clearly understood in our contention in this respect. We do not assert that it is not within the power of the State of Texas to place limitations upon the alienation of stock as a condition precedent to a foreign corporation coming within the state and doing business, or even after such foreign corporation has come in to create such a condition as a precedent requirement for its future continuation in business. We willingly concede this, but with that admit only the right of the state to forbid the entrance of the corporation or to cancel its right to continue in the state, in the event that such conditions are not complied with. The question above presented is a far different one. The point there involved is primarily this: can the State of Texas, or any other state, enact a law, the effect of which is to render that unlawful which prior to such enactment was lawful—take away the property of a corporation, diminish the value of stock in the hands of every stockholder for acts which neither the corporation nor the stockholders could prevent, as punishment for the exercise of a right well recognized and universally admitted.

II.

TO PUNISH THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY BECAUSE PART OF ITS STOCK WAS HELD BY THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY, THE SAME HAVING BEEN ACQUIRED LONG BEFORE THE PASSAGE OF THE TEXAS ANTI-TRUST ACTS OF 1903 AND 1899 AND WHEN SUCH ACQUISITION WAS WHOLLY LAWFUL IS TO SUBJECT THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY TO AN EX POST FACTO AND RETROSPECTIVE LAW AND DEPRIVE IT OF ITS PROPERTY WITHOUT DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

The old Waters-Pierce Company was incorporated in 1878, and obtained a permit to do business in the State of Texas, on or about July 6, 1889, which permit was cancelled on May 31, 1900. This company dissolved under the law of the State of Missouri in May, 1900, and the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company, plaintiff in error, was formed and took over for value the property and good will of its predecessor, purchasing the same from the owners thereof, viz., the stockholders of the old Waters-Pierce Company. At the time of the dissolution of the old Waters-Pierce Company, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey owned 2750 shares of the stock of that company, and upon the incorporation of the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company, 2748 shares of stock of said company was transferred to the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey in exchange for its right, title and interest as stockholder in and as tenant-in-common of the surplus assets of the defunct Waters-Pierce Company. At the time when the shares in the old Waters-Pierce Company were acquired by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, such acquisition was wholly lawful as far as the record in this cause shows. The same is true with respect to the acquisition of stock in the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company when the same was formed in 1900. If, then, there was no law in force which denied to the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey the right to acquire stock in the Waters-Pierce Oil Company when it did acquire such stock. the continued ownership of that stock was a vested right, and could not be disturbed by subsequent legislation without violation of the Federal Constitution. The Act of 1903 is, therefore, unconstitutional and void, in so far as it seeks to subject plaintiff-in-error to penalties and take its property by reason of the stock ownership of the Standard Oil Company existing prior to the passage of this Act, unless it can be shown or unless it is held that the prior law in existence at the time of such acquisition made such acquisition illegal. There is nothing in the record to show that some stock ownership of the Standard Oil Company on May 31, 1900, when the permit was granted to plaintiff-in-error to transact business in Texas, was in violation of any law of the State of Texas and in the absence of any such evidence it must be presumed that such stock ownership was lawful. It was consequently not competent or within the constitutional power of the State of Texas to interfere with such ownership or divest said Standard Oil Company of its property in said stock or make it an offense by this plaintiff-in-error, subjecting it to penalties and to a forfeiture of its permit for such vested and prior ownership to continue.

We do not desire to burden the court with any lengthy discussion of the phrases "ex post facto law," and "due process of law," as used in the Federal Constitution, nor do we think that such discussion is at all necessary. Both are phrases perhaps better understood than defined, and indeed any attempt at definition except with respect to the particular case, must of necessity be unfortunate. "Due process of law" has been declared, both by this court and most of the state appellate tribunals, to be synonymous with that simple and sturdy old Anglo-Saxon phrase, "the law of the land," a phrase which rings with the assertion of individual liberty, equality before the law, judgment only after hearing, condemnation only after opportunity for defense. This "law of the land" is the priceless heritage brought to these shores by our forefathers and upon which the whole structure of our republican government is erected. Upon it is built a government, not of men or of institutions, but a government of laws, and he who moulds his conduct within the law may ever invoke the protection of this principle when it is sought by arbitrary or despotic power, be it executive, legislative or judicial, to punish him for that which at the time of commission was not unlawful, in that it was not forbidden. The prohibition laid upon the states by the constitution with respect to the passage of ex post facto laws received its proper enlargement in the 14th Amendment to that constitution, which limited the power of the state to pass any law by which a man might be deprived of his property, his life or his liberty, without "due process of law"—contrary to the "law of the land." The 14th Amendment was an express recognition of a limitation which most of our courts had declared to exist long before the passage of that amendment, especially with respect to the right of state legislatures to pass laws unreasonable, unjust, oppressive and contrary to the well known principles of right and of law as they had come down to us in the Anglo-Saxon struggle for personal freedom and liberty of conscience.

It is not necessary to quote authorities to substantiate the proposition that a corporation is a "person" within the meaning of that portion of the 14th Amendment above referred to. And it will be equally admitted that the rule above enunciated applies to foreign as well as to domestic corporations doing business within the state. Neither can be deprived of its property without "due process of law."

Can it be contended, then, that "due process of law" is being applied to a corporation which is declared guilty and subjected to an enormous penalty because of an act which it could not control or prevent for an act committed long prior to the enactment of the statute which declares the same unlawful and punishable, for an act which was committed wholly outside of the jurisdiction of the state administering this "due process of law" and which was wholly lawful in the state wherein and when such act was committed—can it be contended that this is the "law of the land?" An examination of the record in this cause cannot fail to show that it is precisely upon such reasoning as this that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company has been penalized by the State of Texas through a fine equal, if not exceeding, the total value of all its tangible property within the state, and has had that property rendered practically useless by taking it from the corporation in the revocation of its permit to do business, and placing it under the charge and in the control of a receiver, even pending appeal.

To give a retrospective construction to a statute ordinarily clothes it with the character and all the mischiefs of an ex post facto law. (Kent Com. 455. Potter's Dwarris, 162, 163, note 9.)

In the leading case of Calder v. Bull, (3 Dallas, 386), Mr. Justice Chase uses the following pertinent language:

> "I cannot subscribe to the omnipotence of the state legislature or that it is absolute and without control, although its authority should not be expressly restrained by the constitution or fundamental law of the state. The people of the United States erected their constitutions or forms of government to establish justice, to promote the general welfare, to secure the blessings of liberty and to protect their persons and property from violence. The purposes for which men enter into society will determine the nature and terms of the social compact, and, as they are the foundation of legislative power, they will decide what are the proper objects of it. The nature and ends of legislative power will limit the exercise of it. This fundamental principle flows from the very nature of our free republican governments. That no man should be compelled to do what the laws do not require nor refrain from the acts which the laws permit. These are acts which the federal or state legislature cannot do without exceeding their authority. There are certain federal principles in our free republican government which will determine and overrule an apparent and flagrant abuse of legislative power as to authorize manifest injustice by positive law or to take away that security for personal liberty or private property for the protection whereof the government was established. An act of the legislature (for I cannot call it a law) contrary to the great first principles of the social compact cannot be considered a rightful exercise of legislative authority. The obligation of the law in governments established on express compact and on republican principles must be determined by the nature of the power on which it is founded. A few instances will suffice to explain what I mean. A law that punishes a citizen for an innocent action, or in other words for an act which when done was in violation of no existing law; a law that destroys or impairs the lawful private contracts of citizens; a law that makes a man a judge in his own cause or a law that takes the property of A and gives it to B. It is against all reason and justice for a people to entrust a legislature with such powers, and therefore it can not be presumed that they have done so. The genius, the nature and the spirit of our state governments amount to a prohibition of such acts of legislation and the general principles of law and reason forbid them. The legislature may enjoin, permit, forbid and punish; they may declare new crimes; and establish rules of conduct for all its citizens in future cases; they may command what is right and prohibit what is wrong; but they cannot change 'innocence into guilt' or punish 'innocence as a crime' or violate the right of an antecedent lawful private contract or the right of private property. To maintain that our federal or state legislature possessed such powers, if they had not been expressly restrained, would, in my opinion, be a political heresy altogether inadmissible in our free republican government."

And, in discussing the meaning of the term "ex post facto law," the learned Justice uses this language:

> "The prohibition in the latter is not to pass any law concerning and after the fact; but the plain and obvious meaning and intention of the prohibition is this: that the legislatures of the several states shall not pass laws after a fact done by a subject or citizen which shall have relation to such fact and shall punish him for having done it."

And then follows the classification of ex post facto laws which has become so well known to our American Courts, the first one of which—applicable to the case at bar—is this:

> "Every law that makes an action, done before the passing of the law and which was innocent when done, criminal; and punishes such action."

In Fletcher v. Peck (6 Cranch, 87), Chief Justice Marshall defines an ex post facto law as one which renders an act punishable in a manner in which it was not punishable when it was committed, and declares further that such law may inflict penalties on the person or may inflict pecuniary penalties which swell the public treasury. The legislature is then prohibited from passing a law by which a man's estate or any part of it shall be seized for a crime which was not declared by some previous law to render him liable to that punishment, and, in applying the rule thus announced to the case under discussion, the Chief Justice, in holding that a law annulling a previous grant was ex post facto, says:

> "Why, then, should violence be done to the natural meaning of words for the purpose of leaving to the legislature the power of seizing for public use the estate of an individual in the form of a law annulling the title by which he holds that estate? The court can perceive no safe grounds for making this distinction; this rescinding act would have the effect of an ex post facto law. It forfeits the estate of Fletcher for a crime not committed by himself, but by those from he purchased. This cannot be effected in the form of an ex post facto law or bill of attainder; why, then, is it allowable in the form of a law annulling the original grant?"

See also in this connection Watson v. Mercer, 8 Peters, 88; Coffin v. Rich, 45 Me. 507; American Building & Loan Association v. Rainboat, 48 Neb. 434; Stevens v. Southern Pacific Co., 109 Calif. 86; 41 Pac. 783; 29 L. R. A. 751.

(a.) THE EX POST FACTO EFFECT OF A LAW CANNOT BE EVADED BY GIVING A CIVIL FORM TO THAT WHICH IS ESSENTIALLY CRIMINAL.

The prohibition against the passage of ex post facto laws has been so often held to apply only to criminal statutes that are certain to meet with the contention that the Act which is the basis of the suit in the State of Texas against the Waters-Pierce Oil Company does not fall within the constitutional provision herein invoked, in that that Act is not a criminal law but merely provides for the recovery of penalties by civil suit.

"A crime," says Mr. Walker in his American Law (10 ed. p. 571), "in its legal acceptation signifies any act to which the law attaches a penalty of punishment without any reference to its moral turpitude." Mr. Bishop, in his Criminal Law, Vol. 1, Sec. 32, defines a crime as:"

> "Any wrong which the government deems injurious to the public at large and punishes through a judicial proceeding in its own name."

These definitions might be multiplied to show that it is the nature of the act comitted that constitutes the criminal offense, and not the form of proceeding by which the state seeks to punish the offender.

It is true that this proceeding is civil in its form, but, notwithstanding this, it must readily appear that the cause of action is essentially and in its nature criminal. The first section of the Anti-Trust Act, of May 25, 1899, provides that corporations or persons doing the things therein set forth "shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and be subject to the penalties as provided by this Act." The second section, after defining a monopoly, provides that "any and all persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons engaged therein shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and shall be subject to the penalties prescribed in this act." The sixth section of the Act, after citing further forbidden things, provides that "any person, firm, corporation or association of persons committing such violation shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and shall be subject to the penalties prescribed in the Act." Other sections of the same Act, which are not involved in this case, conclude in a similar manner. The fifth section is as follows:

> "Any person, partnership, firm or association, or any representative or agent thereof, or any corporation or company, or any officer, representative or agent thereof, violating any of the provisions of this Act shall forfeit not less than Two Hundred Dollars nor more than Five Thousand Dollars for every such offense, and each day such person, corporation, partnership or association shall continue to do so shall be a separate offense. The penalties in such cases to be recovered by an action in the name of the state at the relation of the attorney-general or the district or county attorney; the monies thus collected to go into the state treasury and to become a part of the general fund, except as hereinafter provided."

The Texas Anti-Trust Act of 1903, after defining a trust, monopoly and conspiracy in restraint of trade and declaring the same prohibited and illegal, provides in paragraph 11 of said Act as follows:

"Each and every firm, person, corporation or association of persons who shall in any manner violate any of the provisions of this Act shall for each and every day that such violation shall be committed or continued forfeit and pay the sum of Fifty Dollars which may be recovered in the name of the State of Texas in any county where the offense is committed or where either of the offenders reside or in Travis County. And it shall be the duty of the attorney-general or of the district or county attorney, under the direction of the attorney-general, to prosecute for the recovery of the sum, and the fees of the prosecuting attorney for representing the state in proceedings under this Act shall be over and above the fees allowed him under the general fee bill."

Section 13 of the same Act provides as follows:

"And in addition to the penalties and forfeitures herein provided for, every person violating this Act may further be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than one nor more than ten years.

The language above quoted from the Anti-Trust Laws of 1899, and 1903, is certainly appropriate to the definition of an offense against the law, and itself characterizes every violation of either act as an offense. If we apply the definitions above noted, there cannot be the slightest doubt that violations of either of these Acts constitute a crime. It is needless to observe that the word "crime" and the word "offense" are synonymous. Reference to the penal code of the State of Texas will show that they are used interchangeably throughout the code.

In the case of Huntington v. Attrill (146 U. S. 657), the Supreme Court of the United States, in the following language, clearly lays down the test which shall be applied to determine when or whether a law is penal.

> "The test whether a law is penal in the strict and primary sense is whether the wrong sought to be redressed is a wrong to the public or a wrong to the individual. According to the familiar classification of Blackstone wrongs are divisible into two sorts or species, private wrongs and public wrongs. The former are an infringement or privation of the private or civil rights belonging to individuals considered as individuals, and are therefore frequently termed civil injuries; the latter are a breach and violation of public rights and duties which affect the whole community considered as a community, and are distinguished by the appellation of crimes and misdemeanors."'

The principle that a crime is any wrong which the government deems injurious to the public at large, and punishes through a judicial proceeding in its own name, finds expression in many cases, and the fact that the judicial proceeding may be civil in form has been repeatedly held not to change the nature of that which in its real character is criminal.

From among the many cases, we select only a few to illustrate the law upon this subject.

In Wisconsin v. Pelican Insurance Co. (127 U. S. 265), the State of Wisconsin filed in the Supreme Court of the United States a civil suit to collect a judgment rendered in one of its courts against the Pelican Insurance Company, a Louisiana corporation, for penalties imposed by the State of Wisconsin for doing an insurance business in that state without having deposited with the proper officer the statement, required by the laws of Wisconsin, of the property and business of the corporation during previous years. The question was raised by the defendant that, though the judgment sued upon had been rendered in a proceeding in the form of a civil suit, nevertheless the Supreme Court should look through the form to the substance, and, that if it did so, it would ascertain that the judgment had been recovered upon a cause of action which was criminal in its character, and that, under the well-recognized rule that the courts of no country will execute the penal laws of another, which must be held applicable to an original suit filed in the Supreme Court of the United States between a state and citizens of another state, the Supreme Court of the United States could not properly entertain jurisdiction of the suit. The contention of the defendant was sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States, and judgment rendered for defendant on demurrer.

In holding that the cause of action of the State of Wisconsin, in the suit which had been instituted in one of its courts against the insurance company for penalties, and in which the judgment sued upon in the Supreme Court of the United States had been rendered, was penal, the Court, among other things, Mr. Justice Gray delivering the opinion, observed:

> "The cause of action was not any private injury, but solely the offense committed against the State by violating her law. The prosecution was in the name of the State, and the whole penalty would accrue to the State and be paid one-half into her treasury and the other half to her Insurance Commissioner, who pays all expenses of prosecuting for and collecting such forfeitures (Laws of Wisconsin, 1885, chap. 395). The real nature of the case is not affected by the forms provided by the law of the State for the punishment of the offense; it is immaterial whether by the law of Wisconsin the prosecution must be by indictment or by action or whether under her law a judgment there obtained the penalty might be enforced by execution, by scire facias or by new suit. In whatever form the State pursues her right to punish the offense against her sovereignty, every step of the proceeding tends to one end—the compelling the offender to pay a pecuniary fine by way of punishment for the offense."

In the case of Boyd v. U. S. (116 U. S. 616), which was a proceeding in rem to enforce a forfeiture of property for the violation of a revenue law, it appeared that the statute under which the suit was brought empowered the court in all suits and proceedings, other than criminal, arising under the revenue laws of the United States, to require the defendant or claimant, on motion, to produce any of his books or invoices for the purpose of examination and proof under the penalty of having the allegations made in the motion deemed as confessed, and that the claimant in that case had been required by an order of the court to produce an invoice tending to show the quantity and value of the goods seized and had done so, and that the invoice had been introduced in evidence over his objections, to the effect that the law was unconstitutional and the order unauthorized.

One of the questions presented was whether the proceeding in rem, which was a civil action, in form at least, was a criminal case within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which declares that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. The Supreme Court of the United States reversed the judgment of the trial court, and in its opinion, delivered by Mr. Justice Bradley, observed:

> "We are also clearly of the opinion that proceedings instituted for the purpose of declaring a forfeiture of a man's property by reason of offenses committed by him, though they may be civil in form, are in their nature criminal. In this very case the ground of forfeiture declared in the 12th section of the Act of 1874, on which the information is based, consists of the certain acts of fraud committed against the public revenue in relation to imported merchandise which are made criminal by statute, and it is declared that the offender shall be fined not exceeding Five Thousand Dollars nor less than Fifty Dollars or be imprisoned not exceeding two years or both; and in addition to such fine such merchandise shall be forfeited. These are the penalties affixed to a criminal act, the forfeiture sought by the suit being one of them. If an indictment had been presented against the criminal, upon conviction, the forfeiture of the goods would have been included in the judgment. If the government prosecutor elects to waive an indictment and to file a civil information against the criminal—that is, civil in form—can he by this defense take from the proceeding its criminal aspect and deprive the criminals of their immunities as citizens and extort from them the protection of their private papers or as an alternative a confession of guilt? This cannot be. The information, though technically a civil proceeding is in substance and effect a criminal one. As showing the close relation between the civil and criminal proceeding on the same statute in such cases, we may refer to the recent case of Cofey v. United States, 116 U. S. 436, in which we decided that an acquittal on a criminal information was a good plea in bar to a civil information for the forfeiture of goods arising upon the same acts; as, therefore, suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred by the commission of offenses against the law of this quasi criminal nature, we think that they are within the reason of criminal proceedings for all the purposes of the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution, and of that portion of the Fifth Amendment which declares that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself."

In the case of Lees v. United States (150 U. S. 476), a civil suit was brought in the United States District Court to recover penalties and forfeitures for the violation of the Act of Congress prohibiting the importation of foreign laborers. Lees, one of the defendants, was called as a witness by the government, whereupon his attorney objected to his being compelled to testify, invoking the protection of the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution. The trial court overruled the objection and required Lees to testify. The case went up to the United States Supreme Court on writ of error, and the court, in passing upon the action of the trial court in compelling defendant to testify over his objections, declared through Mr. Justice Brewer:

"This, though an action in civil form, is actually criminal in its nature, and in such a case a defendant cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself. It is unnecessary to do more than to refer to the case of Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616. The question was fully and elaborately considered by Mr. Justice Bradley in the opinion delivered in that case, and within the rule there laid down it was error to compel this defendant to give testimony in behalf of the government."

In the case of the United States v. Shapleigh (54 Fed. Rep. 126), a civil action was begun against the defendant for damages and penalties for violating an act of Congress rendering any person liable for penalties and damages for exhibiting a false or fraudulent claim against the United States to one of its officers for payment or approval. The trial court instructed the jury that, to entitle the government to a verdict in the case, every fact necessary to conviction must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. The defendant was acquitted and the government carried the case by writ of error to the Circuit Court. Judge Sanborn of the Circuit Court delivered an elaborate opinion in the case, reviewing all the authorities upon the subject, and sustained the ruling of the trial court, holding that, though civil in form, the action was criminal and that the rules of criminal law were applicable in so far as to demand that the guilt of the defendant should be shown beyond a reasonable doubt.

In Burgess v. Salmon (97 U. S. 381), an action was begun against the defendant to recover an additional tax upon manufactured tobacco under an act passed after the manufactured goods had been surrendered and transported. The Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Mr. Justice Hunt, declared the action, though civil in form, to be criminal and within the prohibition of passing an ex post facto law. To the same purport are the decisions in Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wallace, 277; Pierce v. Carskaden, 16 Wallace, 234; United States v. Hughes, Fed. Cases, No. 15,416.

In the latter case, an action of debt was brought against the defendants to recover the value of certain importations of merchandise alleged to have been entered by them at the custom house, New York, on fraudulent invoices. On the trial of the cause, the United States District Attorney, under the Act of 1874, attempted to compel defendants to produce certain books and papers in connection with such invoices. Blatchford, District Judge, in holding that such order was void and that defendants could not be compelled to testify against themselves, says:

"It has always been held that the provisions of the Constitution of the United States that no ex post facto law shall be passed by Congress, and that no State shall pass any ex post facto law, apply not merely to criminal laws and cases, but to cases for the recovery of penalties and forfeitures."

In State ex inf. v. Bland (144 Missouri, 534), the Supreme Court of Missouri was called to pass upon the nature and character of the Corrupt Practices Act of that State. The court, speaking through Marshall, J., says:

"This Act is penal in its every nature and fiber. It provides for punishment as for felonies and as for misdemeanors, and also for forfeiture of office even after the incumbent has received a majority of the votes cast at the election and has been inducted into office. The Act should, therefore, be strictly construed, and nothing should be regarded as included in it which is not clearly and intelligently described in its very words. (Citing Connell v. Union Telegraph Company, 108 Mo. 459; Rozelle v. Harmon, 103 Mo. 339; State ex rel. v. Smith, 114 Mo. 180; Dudley v. Western Union Telegraph Company, 54 Mo. App. 391.)"

In State ex inf. v. Firemen's Fund Insurance Company (152 Mo. 1), the Supreme Court again declared such acts to be penal in their nature, and that they should be strictly construed; in this case directing its remarks particularly to the Missouri Statute forbidding the formation of pools and trusts, and punishing those who participated therein.

Judge Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations, 7th Ed., page 375, sums up the rule in this language:

"It is not essential, however, in order to render a law invalid on these grounds (ex post facto) that it should expressly assume the action to which it relates to be criminal or provide for its punishment on that ground. If it shall subject an individual to a pecuniary penalty for an act which when done involved no responsibility or if it deprives a party of any valuable right—like the right to follow a lawful calling—for acts which were innocent or at least not punishable by law when committed, the law will be ex post facto in the constitutional sense, notwithstanding it does not in terms declare the acts to which the penalty is attached criminal."

If our contention, then, is correct, that the Anti-Trust Act of 1899 is a penal act, and that suits brought thereon are criminal suits, the conclusion must logically follow that to give such act a retroactive effect upon acts committed prior to its passage is to clothe it with all the characteristics of an ex post facto law—and the same in equal measure is true of the Act of 1903—and thereby to render these acts void.

III.

THE STATE OF TEXAS CANNOT CONSTITUTIONALLY ENACT A LAW WHICH DENOUNCES AS AN OFFENSE AN ACT COMMITTED IN ANOTHER STATE AND PUNISH PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR FOR AN ALLEGED OFFENSE COMMITTED WHOLLY OUTSIDE OF THE JURISDICTION OF THE STATE OF TEXAS.

Says Mr. Justice Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations, (7th Ed.), page 176:

> "The legislative authority of every State must spend its force within the territorial limits of the State. The legislature of one State cannot make laws by which people outside of the State must govern their actions, except as they may have occasion to resort to remedies which the State provides or to deal with property situated within the State. It can have no authority upon the high seas beyond State lines, because there is the point of contact with other nations, and all international questions belong to the national government. It cannot provide for the punishment as crimes of acts committed beyond the State boundary, because such acts, if offenses at all, must be offenses against the sovereignty within whose limits they have been done."

Our contention is that, in so far as it is sought to hold the Waters-Pierce Oil Company liable and to punish it because of the fact that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey acquired a portion of its stock, which transaction took place entirely outside of the jurisdiction of the State of Texas, and within the jurisdiction of the State of Missouri, and in so far as it sought to hold the Waters-Pierce Oil Company liable and punish it for entering into an alleged agreement with the Standard Oil Company, which said agreement, if made at all, was made outside the jurisdiction of the State of Texas, the said State of Texas is exceeding its constitutional powers, in that it is attempting to denounce and punish as an offense the doing of an act wholly outside of the territorial jurisdiction of the State.

> "Crimes are in their nature local and the jurisdiction of them is local. They are cognizable and punishable exclusively in the country where they are committed." (Lewis' Sutherland, Statutory Construction, Vol. 1, Sec. 13.)

"Criminal laws," says Mr. Justice Story, in the case of The Apollon (9 Wheaton, 362), "must always be restricted in construction to places and persons upon whom the legislature have authority and jurisdiction."

In the State v. Knight, Taylor 65 (N. C. 1799), an attempt was made by the State of North Carolina to punish the defendant for counterfeiting in another state. The court said:

> "The legislature of one State cannot define and punish crimes committed in another."

In in re Grice (79 Fed. Rep. 627), the petitioner, who was imprisoned by the State of Texas awaiting trial on an indictment charging a violation of the Texas Anti-Trust Act, sought to be released on habeas corpus before the Federal Court on the ground that the said Act was in violation of the federal constitution. That portion of the Act in question reads as follows:

> "9. Persons out of the State may commit and be liable to indictment and conviction for committing any of the offenses enumerated in this Act, which do not, in their commission, necessarily require a personal presence in this State, the object being to reach and punish all persons offending against its provisions, whether within or without the State."

The Circuit Court of the United States, speaking through Judge Swain, in discharging relator under the writ, uses the following language (page 638):

"The fifth paragraph of the said Act in which it is attempted to claim jurisdiction for offenses committed outside the State of Texas, is so absurd that a denial thereof is scarcely necessary. It has been decided in emphatic language by Mr. Justice Taney, in United States v. Booth, 21 Howard, 524, as follows: 'No judicial process, whatever form it may assume, can have any lawful authority outside of the limits of the jurisdiction of the court or judge by whom it is issued, and an attempt to enforce it beyond these boundaries is nothing less than lawless violence.' This principle is elementary and not only common law but the commonest of common sense. It has been properly suggested that should this feature of this Act be carried out and administered, it would be unnecessary for any other State or the nation at large to have any other laws upon the subject, as all persons within the limits of the United States could be regulated in their dealings and conduct of their business according to the wishes of the legislature of Texas. The State in its criminal jurisdiction as to Acts committed within its own boundaries and within the limits prescribed by the Federal Constitution is sovereign, and its process should not be interfered with where it does not contravene said constitution, but beyond the boundaries of the State, it has no more authority in New York, Missouri or Ohio than it has in Great Britian or Austria, and that part of the Act which proposes this extra-territorial jurisdiction is absolutely null and void."

This case was appealed to the United States Supreme Court (Baker v. Grice, 169 U. S. 285), and reversed, solely, however, upon the jurisdiction of the subject matter involved.

In State v. Cutshall (110 N. C. 538; 16 L. R. A. 130), defendant was indicted for the violation of the criminal code defining and punishing bigamy, it being charged that the defendant contracted the second marriage in the State of South Carolina and outside of the State of North Carolina. The Supreme Court, speaking through Avery, Justice, in a carefully reasoned opinion in which all the authorities are examined, says:

> "The attempt to evade the organic law by making the coming into this State (after committing an offense in another) a crime is too palpable in view of the admitted fact that the Constitution of the United States gives to citizens of all the States the immunities and privileges of its own citizens, of their guaranteed right under the interstate commerce clause to pass through another State without arrest and inquiry into their accountability for offenses against their own sovereignty, but especially because the trial of the new felony involves an investigation of the original bigamy by a jury not of the vicinage and remote from the witnesses."

In Allgeyer v. Louisiana (165 U. S. 578), the Supreme Court of the United States held that the State of Louisiana could not constitutionally punish as an offense an act of one of its citizens in entering into a contract of insurance outside of the State of Louisiana with a foreign insurance company for the insurance of property within that State. Mr. Justice Peckham, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

> "The mere fact that a citizen may be within the limits of a particular State does not prevent his making a contract outside its limits while he himself remains within it (citing Milliken v. Prate, 125 Mass. 374; Tilden v. Blair, 21 Wallace, 241).
> The contract in this case was thus made, it was a valid contract, made outside of the State, to be performed outside of the State, although the subject was property temporarily within the State. * * *
> Any act of the State legislature which would prevent the entering into of such a contract or the mailing within the State of Louisiana of such a notification as is mentioned in this case is an improper and illegal interference with the conduct of the citizen, although residing in Louisiana, and his right to contract and to carry out the terms of a contract validly entered into outside and beyond the jurisdiction of the State."

If our contention, based upon these authorities, is correct, the conclusion naturally follows that the imposition of penalties upon the Waters-Pierce Oil Company for alleged acts done and alleged agreements entered into wholly outside of the jurisdiction of the State of Texas deprives the Waters-Pierce Oil Company of its property without due process of law, and in so far is unconstitutional and void.

IV.

THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY CANNOT BE HELD LIABLE BECAUSE OF ANY ALLEGED AGREEMENT BETWEEN ITS PREDECESSOR, THE OLD WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY AND THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF NEW JERSEY, SOLELY ON ACCOUNT OF THE PURCHASE BY THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY OF ITS PREDECESSOR'S BUSINESS, PROPERTY AND GOOD WILL.

The record herein shows that the Standard Oil Company, from some time in the year 1882, owned a majority of the shares of the old Waters-Pierce Company down to the incorporation of this plaintiff-in-error on the 29th of May, 1900, and that, on or about the 24th of September, 1900, a majority of the shares of plaintiff-in-error which had up to that time been held by H. C. Pierce in trust for the said Standard Oil Company (the same having by agreement been so issued to him upon the formation of plaintiff-in-error on account of the interest of the said Standard Oil Company in the old Waters-Pierce Company) were transferred to the said Standard Oil Company by an indorsement of the certificates thereof in blank by the said H. C. Pierce without registration of any transfer of the same on the books of plaintiff-in-error until early in the year 1904, when the said Standard Oil Company caused the same to be transferred and registered on the books in the name of M. M. Van Beuren. And the record further shows that evidence was adduced at the trial that the old Waters-Pierce Company carried on its business throughout the whole of Texas and in several other States and in Mexico, and obtained its supplies of refined oil almost exclusively from the Standard Oil Company, and that the said Standard Oil Company did not carry on such business in said territory, and that this plaintiff-in-error, after acquiring the business and property of the old Waters-Pierce Company, carried on its business in precisely the same territory and in precisely the same way as its predecessors, to whose business and property it had succeeded without extending the same into any other territory, and that the Standard Oil Company continued its business in the same manner and form as it had been doing for many years past, and did not extend its business into the territory in which plaintiff-in-error so carried on business, but confined its business to the same territory in which the same had been carried on prior to the formation of plaintiff-in-error. The above constitutes a brief but correct statement of all the evidence on this point introduced at the trial of this cause as shown by the record, and upon this evidence the court instructed the jury in such manner that the jury found from said evidence that the agreement or understanding originally entered into between the old Waters-Pierce Company and the Standard Oil Company became an agreement or understanding on the part of plaintiff-in-error with the said Standard Oil Company as soon as said plaintiff-in-error had acquired the business and property of the old Waters-Pierce Company, and conducted said business in the same manner and in the same territory as the old Waters-Pierce Company had done (Secs. Vol. II, VIII, IX, instructions, record, pp. 1145ff), and said jury also found under said instructions (Secs. X, XI instructions, Record, p 1147 ff,) and upon the above-mentioned evidence that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had bought about or permitted a combination or union of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company by means of the acts of the Standard Oil Company in acquiring a majority of the shares of the old Waters-Pierce Company long before the passage of the Texas Anti-Trust Acts of 1899 and 1903, and before this plaintiff-in-error as a corporation came into existence and in holding such shares until plaintiff-in-error was incorporated and acquired the property and business of the old Waters-Pierce Company, and then taking a beneficial interest in a corresponding majority of the shares of the newly organized Waters-Pierce Oil Company for its interest in the old Waters-Pierce Company, in which acts of the Standard Oil Company plaintiff-in-error had no part, and which acts were not done in the State of Texas, nor was any evidence adduced to prove the existence of any combination or union as alleged, excepting as above shown, to-wit: the purchase by plaintiff-in-error of the property and business of the old Waters-Pierce Company which alone was a party to such agreement, if such agreement ever was made, and the ownership by the Standard Oil Co. of a majority of the stock of plaintiff-in-error, acquired in the manner and under the conditions hereinbefore pointed out.

We contend that the instructions of the trial court, the verdict of the jury found thereon and judgment entered, together with the ruling of the appellate court upholding the same, can be construed to mean only one thing—that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, plaintiff-in-error herein, when it purchased the property, business and good-will of the old Waters-Pierce Company at the time of its dissolution, obtained not only through that contract of sale the property, tangible and intangible, but also the liabilities of its predecessor, criminal as well as civil. In other words, the old Waters-Pierce Company now being dead, its sins are to be visited upon its successor because of its temerity in purchasing the property of the defunct corporation which can no longer be punished.

Among the many quaint legal rules which obtain in the system of Roman jurisprudence, as expressed in the Code and Digest, none is probably more interesting to the Anglo-American lawyer than the rules of law applicable in Rome to the succession of property of a decedent, and especially that rule of law whereby an heir inherited, not only the assets of his deceased ancestor, but his debts as well (Gaius III, 83; IV, 38); under some circumstances, at one time, a Roman citizen might will away his debts as well as his possessions.

Such a principle or rule may, perhaps, have its advantages, but it will hardly be contended that any such principle has ever found place in our Anglo-American law. Yet it is precisely upon some such principle as this that the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company is charged with and convicted of having entered into a combination with the Standard Oil Company, contrary to the Anti-Trust Laws of Texas.

The right of a new corporation buying the assets of one which it succeeds to hold them free from the obligations of the latter, although not often denied, has been expressly affirmed in a number of cases.

In Austin v. Tecumseh National Bank (49 Neb. 416; 68 N. W. 628; 35 L. R. A. 444), it is specifically held, and the rule applied, that the debts of an established corporation to whose business and property another has succeeded cannot be recovered of its successor unless it affirmatively appears that the transaction by which the successor corporation obtained such property was fraudulent, or that the facts warrant the conclusion that the successor corporation is a mere continuation of its predecessor, or that a special agreement has been entered into by which the successor corporation assumes the debts of its predecessor.

In the Capitol Traction Company v. Offutt (17 App. D. C. 292; 53 L. R. A. 390), a case which we have already discussed in connection with another point in this argument, an action was brought against the Traction Company for an alleged tort committed by its predecessor, the Washington Georgetown Railroad Company, whose property, good-will and business had been purchased by the defendant. The Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, speaking through Morris, J., uses the following language:

> "A contract of purchase and sale between two corporations is no different in law from a similar contract between two individuals except that individuals may contract freely with each other and corporations require legislative authority to enter into such contracts as are involved in the case under consideration. Construction and effect would be the same whether such contracts were made by individuals or by corporations. In neither case would the purchaser become liable either for the torts or contracts of the vendor, and least of all for the torts, unless such liability entered into the transaction and became a part of the consideration for the transfer and then only in the manner and to the extent stipulated. This is so plain a principle of law and justice that it needs only to be stated in order to insure its prompt acceptance. It is very plain, therefore, that something more than the mere purchase of the assets and franchises of one company by another under authority of law given for such sale and purchase is required to effect a consolidation of the two companies or to charge the purchaser company with the liabilities of the vendor."

And applying the above principle to the cause before it, the court held that without express stipulation in the contract of sale or some showing of fraud, the defendant could not be held liable for the contracts or torts of its predecessor whose property it had lawfully acquired.

In Wyman v. Hallowell Bank, (14 Mass., 57; 7 Am. Dec. 194), an action of assumpsit was brought against the defendant Bank upon certain promissory notes or bank bills alleged to have been made by its predecessor whose business and property the defendant had purchased; the Supreme Court of Massachussets, speaking through Parker, Chief Justice, held that even through the successor Bank might have the same stockholders and the same officers as its predecessor yet unless fraud could be shown or some agreement to such effect appeared in the contract of purchase, the defendant could not be held liable for the debts of its predecessor.

In Bellows v. Hallowell and Augusta Bank, (2 Mason, 31; Fed. Cases, 1279), a similar action was brought against the same Bank in the District Court of the United States for the District of Maine. The United States Circuit Court, on appeal, speaking through Mr. Justice Story, in passing upon the same question involved in the preceding case, uses the following language:

"The first ground rests on the suggestion that the old bank and the new bank are the same corporation, the new charter being but a re-incorporation or rather a continuation of the charter of the old bank which would otherwise have expired by its own limitation. If the premises were well founded, the conclusion would certainly follow that the new bank is liable for the debts of the old bank, but we are called upon to admit these premises, not upon the plain and positive enactment of the statute incorporating the new bank, but upon the collateral facts that the names of both corporations are the same, the officers are the same and a majority of the stockholders are the same and that the business of the old bank was for a time done and its debts paid by the new bank. It is certainly true that a corporation may retain its personal identity, although its members are perpetually changing, for it is its artificial character, powers and franchises and not the natural character of its members which constitute that identity and for the same reason corporations may be different, although names, officers and the members of each are the same. An insurance company composed of the same natural persons and officers and with the same name as an existing incorporated bank would still be a different corporation from the bank. The similarity of names of officers or of members or even of objects cannot then per se establish the identity of corporations created at different times by different charters and having a distinct independent being, and one corporation may transact the business and pay the debts of another corporation without thereby merging in the latter its distinct corporate existence. There is, indeed, a repugnancy in the statement of the proposition that two corporations are in point of law the same, for it would at the same time establish that there is but one corporation. To ascertain whether a charter created a new corporation or merely continued the existence of an old one, we must look to its terms and give them a construction consistent with the legislative intent and the intent of the incorporators."

The same rule and principle is applied in the case of Gulf, Colo. & S. F. Railway Company v. Newell, (73 Texas, 334; 50 Am. St. Rep. 788), in Columbus, Sandusky and Hocking R. R. Co. App. (109 Fed. Rep. 177) and Marshall v. W. N. C. R. R. Co. (92 N. C. 322).

From the above authorities it would seem to be clear that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company cannot be held liable as a party to any alleged agreement between its predecessor, the old Waters-Pierce Company and the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, which alleged agreement it is charged is in violation of the Anti-Trust Laws of Texas, solely on account of the fact that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company purchased the old Waters-Pierce Company's business, property and good-will. The mere fact that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, plaintiff-in-error herein, did confine its business to the same territory in which the old Waters-Pierce Company originally operated is not of itself sufficient to connect plaintiff-in-error with any agreement with the Standard Oil Company by reason thereof, even admitting that there was originally such an agreement between the Standard Oil Company and the old Waters-Pierce Company and that said agreement was unlawful. The Standard Oil Trust Agreement above referred to was made some time in January, 1882, and so far as the record appears there is nothing to show that the old Waters-Pierce Company or any of its officers or stockholders except the Standard Oil Company ever became a party to that agreement. Plaintiff-in-error was incorporated in 1900, and we submit that it requires a considerable stretch of imagination to connect the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company with the agreement which was formed some eighteen years before it ever came into existence. It may be permissible in some cases to judge the future by the past but we submit that it is extremely illogical to test the remote past by events transpiring many years afterward; and yet this is the method applied in this case, in that it is claimed circumstances exist to-day from which a violation of the law may be inferred. But the State is not content even with this, but charges and convicts this plaintiff-in-error because on January 1st, 1870, thirty years before plaintiff-in-error was born, certain persons incorporated the Standard Oil Company of Ohio for the purpose, as is alleged, of monopolizing and controlling the business of refining, transporting and selling petroleum and the products thereof throughout the United States, including the State of Texas. (Instructions, Record, p. 1141.) The purpose here charged is based entirely upon conjecture, no evidence being offered to prove the same except that many years afterward said company or its successors did actually come into control of most of the oil business through careful, able and consistent business management and extension of its operations. The scheme and conspiracy which it is charged existed in the formation of the Standard Oil Company of Ohio in 1870, can hardly be held to constitute an infraction of the Anti-Trust Laws of the State of Texas, none of which existed at that time and for the violation of which plaintiff-in-error stands charged and convicted. The Anti-Trust Act of 1899, was not passed until more than twenty-nine years after the formation of the alleged conspiracy and the Anti-Trust Act of 1903 was not passed until more than thirty- three years thereafter. To connect this plaintiff-in-error with an agreement made long before it or even its predecessor came into existence would seem to tax even a fertile imagination. It is only from the operation of the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company many years after the incorporation of its predecessor whose business it purchased, that any design on the part of said company can be shown, to monopolize the business of selling petroleum in the State of Texas; and if one divests himself of the preconceived notion that the Standard Oil Company was formed for the express and sole purpose of obtaining and enjoying a monopoly of the oil trade of the country, in the furtherance of which design and purpose this plaintiff-in-error is directly interested and concerned,—if the record in this case alone is considered—there would be great difficulty, if not utter impossibility, in reaching the conclusion from the facts in this case that there ever existed or now exists any design on the part of the Standard Oil Company or of this plaintiff-in-error to monopolize and control the oil business either in the entire country or in the State of Texas. The State of Texas says in so many words,—the fact that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company actually does operate in practically all of the cities of Texas and has no competitors of any importance is proof conclusive that somewhere and somehow it conceived the scheme and entered into the conspiracy to monopolize the oil trade and for that it must be held guilty for an infraction of the laws. And for this it is penalized in an enormous sum, its permit cancelled and its control and management of its property taken from it. We submit that the errors herein complained of, in their effect upon this plaintiff-in-error, deprive it of its property without due process of law, and in so far are within the prohibition of the XIV Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

V.

ADMITTING THE OWNERSHIP OF A PORTION OF THE STOCK OF THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY BY THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF NEW JERSEY, THIS FACT IS NOT ENOUGH TO ESTABLISH THE EXISTENCE OF A "COMBINATION" BETWEEN THE TWO CORPORATIONS WITHIN THE MEANING OF THAT TERM AS USED IN THE TEXAS ANTI-TRUST ACTS OF 1899 AND 1903, AND TO HOLD THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY GUILTY OF ENTERING INTO A "COMBINATION" WITH THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY AND PUNISHING IT THEREFOR IS TO DEPRIVE THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY OF ITS PROPERTY WITHOUT DUE PROCESS OF LAW, DENY IT THE EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS AND HOLD IT LIABLE UNDER EX POST FACTO AND RETROSPECTIVE LAWS.

The following is a condensed statement of the material facts proved and agreed on at the trial of this cause and the material evidence introduced therein, touching the proposition above set forth:—

ABSTRACT OF EVIDENCE.

The State of Texas introduced in evidence an agreement entered into between its counsel and counsel for plaintiff in error wherein the following facts were admitted: That the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey is a corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey; that since its organization in 1882, it has not conducted any business in the State of Texas, and that it has not applied for or been granted a permit to transact any of its corporate business in the State of Texas; that said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey owned a portion of the stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri in May, 1878, to-wit: 2747 shares out of a total of 4000 shares of said company, and that since about the 24th of September, 1900, said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey has owned 2748 shares of the total of 4000 shares of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company organized under the laws of Missouri, May 29th, 1900; that the said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey owns and has owned practically since the date of their creation a majority of the capital stock of the various corporations below named and doing business as below stated, and that no one of said corporations has at any time since its organization transacted any business in the State of Texas or applied for or obtained a permit to do such business; said corporations and their place of business is as follows:

The Standard Oil Company of Indiana, incorporated under the laws of Indiana, June 11th, 1889, and doing business in Indiana and part of Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Michigan, Kansas, South Dakota and North Dakota.

The Standard Oil Company of New York, organized under the laws of the State of New York, August 10th, 1882, and doing business in New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Vermont and New Hampshire.

The Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, organized under the laws of the State of Kentucky, October 7, 1886, and doing business in Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and part of Louisiana.

The Continental Oil Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Iowa in December, 1884.

The Republic Oil Company, organized under the laws of the State of New York, June 4, 1901.

The State of Texas further introduced in evidence an agreement entered into between its counsel and counsel for plaintiff-in-error whereby the following facts were admitted, namely, that the copies of the agreement, commonly called the Standard Oil Trust agreement, being exhibits A and B, of the petition of the State of Texas (record, page 7 and page 16) were true copies of said agreements; that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, organized under the laws of Missouri in May, 1878, the predecessor of this plaintiff-in-error, did not sign either of said agreements or the supplement thereto; that H. Clay Pierce at that time owned substantially 40 per cent of the stock of the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and that he did not sign either of the aforesaid agreements or deposit any of its stock thereunder; that Horace A. Hutchins and W. P. Thompson at the date of said agreements owned substantially 40 per cent of the stock of the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and that they did sign said agreement and did deposit their stock thereunder; that the Chess-Carley Company at the date of said agreements owned substantially 20 per cent of the stock of the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company and that said Chess-Carley Company did not sign said agreement, but did deposit their shares thereunder; in consequence whereof from the date of the organization of the Standard Oil Trust in accordance with said agreements the trustees of the said Standard Oil Trust owned and held substantially 60 per cent of the capital stock of the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company and continued to hold the same until some time in the year 1892. All reference made to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company hereinbefore is to the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company which was organized in Missouri in May, 1878, and which dissolved in 1900. The State of Texas introduced in evidence a copy of the instrument known as the Standard Oil Trust agreement, the same being exhibits A and B, attached to the State's petition in this suit, the original agreement being dated January 2, 1882, with the supplement thereto under date of January 4, 1882. This agreement was entered into between a large number of individuals, consisting of the three following classes, to-wit: (1) All the stockholders of certain corporations and partnerships and, among others, the Atlantic Refining Company, the Standard Oil Company of Ohio and the Standard Oil Company of Pittsburgh. (2) Certain individuals, among others, John D. Rockefeller, Benjamin Brewster, John D. Archbold, and (3) a portion of the stockholders and members of certain corporations and limited partnerships, among others, the American Lubricating Oil Company, the Consolidated Tank Line Company, Chess-Carley Company and the Waters-Pierce Oil Company; said agreement provided that as soon as practicable corporations should be formed in each of the states of Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey for the purpose of refining and dealing in petroleum and its products, and that all of the properties belonging to the corporations and limited partnerships of the first class above should be transferred to said several companies formed in the above named states, and also the businesses of the persons composing the second class above and the stock owned by the persons in the third class above should be conveyed to the trustees named in the agreement. Said agreement named nine trustees and provided for the election of their successors and to fill vacancies. It was further provided by said agreement that all of the properties and businesses thus amalgamated should be managed and controlled by the trustees in the agreement named and their successors during the lives of the original trustees and the life of the survivor of them and for twenty-one years thereafter; that in lieu of the properties and businesses thus placed in said trust, the various persons putting such property or business therein should receive certificates to be known as the Standard Oil Trust certificates, same to be issued in proportion to the value of the stock, property or business so placed in the trust. Said agreement further provided for the payment of dividends, etc.

The State of Texas further introduced in evidence certified copies of the charters of the following corporations, each of which were shown to have been incorporated for the purpose, among other things, of refining and dealing in petroleum and its products, namely:

The Standard Oil Company of Ohio, incorporated in Ohio, in 1870, by John D. Rockefeller, H. M. Flagler, Samuel Adams, Stephen V. Harkness and William Rockefeller.

The Waters-Pierce Oil Company, incorporated in Missouri in 1878, by W. H. Waters, H. C. Pierce, H. A. Hutchins, Francis B. Carley and W. P. Thompson, having an original capital of $100,000, which by an amendment to the charter June 13, 1882, was increased to $400,000, said increase in the capital stock being owned as follows, to-wit: Chess-Carley Company, $60,000; William H. Waters, $120,000; and the Standard Oil Company, $120,000.

The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, incorporated in New Jersey August 1, 1882, with a total capital stock of 30,000 shares of a par value of $100 each, of which 29,996 shares were owned by the Standard Oil Company, together with different amendments to said charter whereby the capital stock was increased to one hundred and ten million dollars and whereby additional power was given said corporation, among other things, to own shares of stock, bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of other corporations, the list of stockholders at said time consisting, among others, of John D. Rockefeller, John D. Archbold, Henry M. Flagler, H. A. Hutchins, O. H. Payne, Henry H. Rogers, William Rockefeller and W. H. Tilford.

The Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, incorporated under the laws of Kentucky, in February, 1887, the charter naming as first directors, W. H. Tilford, George H. Vilas, Henry H. Rogers, John D. Archbold and W. P. Thompson.

The Standard Oil Company of Pittsburg, incorporated in Pennsylvania, August 20, 1868.

The Standard Oil Company of Indiana, incorporated in Indiana, July 18, 1889, the charter whereof named as first directors George H. Vilas, W. H. Tilford, W. P. Cowan, Frank Q. Barstow and Ambrose McGregor, together with an amendment to said charter under date of March 16, 1892, reciting that the Standard Oil Trust owned 4995 of the shares of the capital stock of said corporation.

The Standard Oil Company of Iowa, incorporated in Iowa, June 10, 1885, by John D. Archbold, W. H. Tilford and S. C. T. Dodd, together with an amendment to said charter dated February 24, 1892, authorizing an increase of capital stock and showing the stockholders at that time to be H. L. Tevis, W. H. Tilford, Henry H. Rogers, John D. Archbold, Benjamin Brewster, H. N. Fl[illegible], O. B. Jennings, William Rockefeller and John D. Rockefeller.

The charter of the Standard Oil Company of New York, incorporated in New York, August, 1882, by William Rockefeller, J. A. Bostwick, Benjamin Brewster, O. B. Jennings and Charles Pratt, with various amendments to said charter, the particulars whereof are not necessary to be herein set forth.

The charter of the Atlantic Refining Company, incorporated in Pennsylvania, April, 1870, with sundry amendments thereto, and showing that W. G. Warden and C. E. Bushnell were officers of said company at sundry times.

The charter of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company (plaintiff-in-error) incorporated in Missouri, May 29, 1900, by H. Clay Pierce, Andrew M. Findlay, J. P. Gruet, Charles N. Adams and John D. Johnson, and showing that the copy of said charter was filed in the office of the Secretary of State of the State of Texas, May 31, 1900.

The permit to do business in the State of Texas issued to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company (plaintiff-in-error) by the Secretary of State of the State of Texas, May 31, 1900.

Said State of Texas further introduced in evidence a certified copy of an affidavit showing the dissolution on May 28, 1900, of the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company, incorporated May 7, 1878, showing that said affidavit of dissolution was duly filed in the office of the Secretary of State of the State of Missouri, May 29, 1900, and in the office of the Secretary of State of the State of Texas, May 31, 1900. Evidence was further introduced to show that a permit to do business in Texas theretofore issued to the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company, incorporated in 1878, was on June 15, 1897, cancelled by the judgment of the District Court of Travis County in a suit by the State of Texas against said company, and the said judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, March 19, 1900.

The State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of Ida M. Butts: That she was the administratrix in the estate of George Rice, who died in 1905; that said George Rice was at the time of his death the owner of certain certificates of the Standard Oil Trust, and that as administratrix she had come into possession of one such certificate; she further testified (over objections of defendant, plaintiff-in-error herein) that after a suit brought by the Attorney General of the State of Ohio in said state to oust the said Standard Oil Company of Ohio from further participation in the Standard Trust Company or to cause it to cease to do business in the State of Ohio if it remained in said Trust, was decided in favor of the State of Ohio, "the Standard Oil Trust pretended to go out of business," and they then increased the capital stock of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and made it to all intents and purposes the same sort and character of organization in effect as had been the Standard Oil Trust—that is, they made it the holding company of all the companies hitherto included in said Standard Oil Trust. The witness further testified (over objections of defendant, plaintiff-in-error) that in 1896, there were twenty companies in the great grand division of the trust, to-wit: The Atlantic Refining Company, Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, the Buckeye Tank Line Company of Ohio, the New York Transit Company of New York, the National Transit Company of Pennsylvania, Solar Refining Company of Ohio, the Northwestern Natural Gas Company of Ohio, the Union Pipe Line Company of New York, the Southern Pipe Line Company of Pennsylvania, the Northern Pipe Line Company of Pennsylvania, the Eureka Pipe Line Company of West Virginia, the Indiana Pipe Line Company of Indiana, the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, the Standard Oil Company of New York, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, the Ohio Oil Company of Ohio, the Forest Oil Company of Pennsylvania, the Southern Pennsylvania Oil Company of Pennsylvania and the Anglo-American Oil Company, Limited.

The witness further testified that fractional certificates of the shares of stock for each of the companies above mentioned were issued to J. L. Kemper, in lieu of certain of the aforesaid Standard Oil certificates held by the said George Rice, copies of which certificates were attached to her said deposition. There was also attached to said deposition as an exhibit, a certificate signed by the trustees of the Standard Oil Trust by W. H. Tilford, attorney in fact, dated November 15, 1899, showing that George Rice was the owner of the equitable title of 1-9725 of the amounts of the corporate stocks held by the trustees of the Standard Oil Trust in each of the corporations whose stocks were held by said Trust on the first day of July, 1892, and which equitable ownership was represented by one share of Standard Oil Trust surrendered for cancellation and directing the officers of the several corporations included in the said Trust as aforesaid to issue certificates for said interest.

State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of R. H. McNall: That H. M. Tilford was in the oil business and connected with the Continental Oil Company, doing business in the western part of the United States with the head office at Denver, and was also connected with the Standard Oil Company of San Francisco and that the Continental Oil Company did business in Colorado, Utah, Montana, New Mexico, Idaho and Arizona, and that the Standard Oil Company of San Francisco did business in Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, and he thought in Arizona.

E. M. Wilhoit testified by deposition for the State as follows: That he was agent at Topeka, Kansas, for something like four years for the Standard Oil Company of (he thought) Kentucky, and stated that this was the same company that did business in Missouri, but he did not state within what years he acted as such agent. He further testified that prior to representing said Standard Oil Company at Topeka, he had been the agent for the Standard Oil Company at Wichita, Kansas, but did not state within and at what time he had acted as such agent. He further testified that the Consolidated Tank Line Company was absorbed by the Standard Oil Company, and that he was employed by said Consolidated Tank Line Company at the time of such absorption. He further stated that the Indian Territory was not in the Territory in which the Standard Oil Company and the Consolidated Tank Line Company did business from and out of Wichita, Kansas, but that he sometimes had taken orders from the Indian Territory and had labeled such goods with Waters-Pierce Oil Company's labels and had charged such goods to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. He further testified that during two different years (without stating what years) he traveled and took orders for the Consolidated Tank Line Company or the Standard Oil Company in the Panhandle of Texas, and was instructed to shade prices liberally to secure orders, as it was in the territory of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and that upon requesting that he be allowed to make such trip for the third season, he was informed that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had "gotten on to them" so that they could make no further shipments into that territory. Said witness further testified that in certain portions of Missouri, the Standard Oil Company did not do business, and the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did do business, and that in other portions of said state the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did business and the Standard Oil Company did not; the Standard Oil Company did business in Kansas, and the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did not; that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did business in the Indian Territory, and the Standard Oil Company did not.

Charles F. Hatfield testified for the State by deposition as follows: That prior to 1889 he had been the private secretary to Col. W. P. Thompson, and fro that year to November, 1904, he had worked in different capacities for the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, that while he was private secretary to Col. Thompson, a dispute arose between the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and the Consolidated Tank Line Company with reference to whose territory a certain county in Missouri was in, and that this matter was finally referred for adjustment to Col. Thompson in New York, and that he made a map showing the dividing lines in Missouri, that a copy of such map was retained in the office of New York, and one sent to each of the aforesaid companies. He further testified that he had been employed at 26 Broadway, New York, while with Col. Thompson, prior to 1889, and that during that time several different companies were represented there by various officials connected with various employes such as the Domestic Trades Committee, Manufacturing Committee, Lubricating Oil Committee, Cooperage Company; that all of said committees reported to the Executive Committee of which, according to general understanding, John D. Rockefeller was Chairman; that Col. Thompson represented the Consolidated Tank Line Company, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and other companies; that H. A. Hutchins represented the Standard Oil Company of Chicago, Cleveland and some others, and that H. M. Tilford largely represented the Western Companies like the Continental and San Francisco interests.

Mr. H. Clay Pierce testified by deposition on behalf of the State of Texas as follows: That he was at the time of testifying, September 10, 1906, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, organized in Missouri in 1900; that during the fall and winter of 1877 and 1878, he organized and incorporated under the laws of Missouri the first Waters-Pierce Oil Company and that it succeeded to the business and property of Waters, Pierce & Co.; that the original capital stock of said Waters-Pierce Oil Company was $100,000, of which Waters, Pierce & Co. subscribed for 40 per cent, Horace A. Hutchins and William P. Thompson 40 per cent and Chess-Carley & Company of Louisville, Kentucky, 20 per cent, and that the first officers of said first Waters-Pierce Oil Company were William H. Waters, Director and President; H. Clay Pierce, Director and Vice-President; Charles M. Adams, Secretary and Treasurer; Horace A. Hutchins, Director; William P. Thompson, Director, and Francis D. Carley, Director. Witness further testified that some time after the organization of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, the stock belonging to Messrs. Hutchins and Thompson and Chess-Carley & Company was transferred to the trustees of the Standard Oil Company, and that the witness (Mr. Pierce) purchased the interests of William H. Waters in the 40 per cent belonging to Waters-Pierce & Company. He further testified that when the license of the first Waters-Pierce Oil Company was revoked by the State of Texas, he (Mr. Pierce) was told by a prominent citizen of the State of Texas that the people of that state would not tolerate the methods of the Standard Oil Company, and that no corporation controlled by the Standard Oil Company would be permitted to do business in Texas; that he explained the situation fully to the Executive Committee of the Standard Oil Company, and they agreed that he should organize a new company, the stock of which should be held by him (Mr. Pierce), and that he should manage and control the company absolutely free from any dictation or direction on the part of said Standard Oil Company.

He further testified that up to the spring of 1904, the Standard Oil Company had made no attempt to interfere in any way with his management and control of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, but that sometime in the spring of 1904, the Standard Oil Company transferred the stock which had stood in his (Mr. Pierce's) name to M. M. Van Buren, and began in other ways to assume control over the affairs and operations of the company; that he protested against this conduct as a violation of their agreement with him and as contrary to the representations he had made to the people of the State of Texas.

Mr. Pierce further testified that in 1878 when he organized the first Waters-Pierce Oil Company, its predecessors, Waters, Pierce & Company and H. C. Pierce & Company, had already an established business in all of the territory in which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company now operates, and that it was agreed between him and the representatives of the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, that being the only Standard Oil Company of which he knew anything at the time, that said first Waters-Pierce Oil Company should confine its operations and transact its business within the territory in which its predecessors, Waters, Pierce & Company and H. C. Pierce & Company, had heretofore transacted their business, and that a map was made showing such territory, including a portion of Illinois, a portion of Missouri, a portion of Louisiana west of the Mississippi River, the State of Arkansas, what is now the Indian Territory and Oklahoma, the State of Texas, and the Republic of Mexico, and that ever since said time the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had confined its operations to building up its trade in that particular territory; that the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company was organized in 1900, and succeeded to the established business of the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and since that time had confined its operations exclusively to building up the business in the territory occupied by its predecessor, the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company.

Mr. Pierce further testified that in the year 1892, the directors of the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company consisted of Messrs. H. Clay Pierce, A. M. Finlay, H. M. Tilford, C. M. Adams, and J. P. Gruet, and that this Board of Directors continued until the dissolution of the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company in 1900; that upon the organization of the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company in 1900, the Board of Directors then elected consisted of the witness, H. Clay Pierce, and A. M. Finlay, C. M. Adams, J. P. Gruet and J. D. Johnson, and that this Board of Directors continued until the year of 1904, when W. F. Taylor took the place of J. D. Johnson and R. P. Tinsley that of J. P. Gruet. The witness further testified that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company purchased almost all of its supplies of the Standard Oil Company, and it depended upon the Standard Oil Company for almost all of its supplies, and that neither the present nor the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company had ever attempted to extend business beyond the territory above named and in which it did business, and that the reason, therefore, was because he (Mr. Pierce) as Manager, did not deem it expedient to do business beyond the territory wherein the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was thoroughly and fully equipped and did not contemplate extending such business for the reason that the original Waters-Pierce Oil Company had agreed that it would confine its operations to the territory in which it and its predecessors had transacted business, and that this agreement was made with Col. O. H. Payne as the representative of the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, and that as a result of this agreement the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had confined its business to certain territory, but that he had not and never had had any means of knowing the reasons for the operations of the Standard Oil Company. He further testified that on the organization of this plaintiff-in-error, May 29, 1900, he subscribed and paid for the entire capital stock, but subsequently at the request of Mr. W. H. or H. M. Tilford, he transferred in blank 2748 shares of this stock, and delivered the certificate to Mr. Garth, the transfer being made pursuant to what his attorney informed him was the agreement at the time of the formation of the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company, but that this stock remained on the books of the company in his (Mr. Pierce's) name until some time in June, 1904, when it was transferred on the books of the company to M. M. Van Buren; that W. H. Tilford and H. M. Tilford were connected with the Standard Oil Company and were members of the Domestic Trades Committee of the Standard Oil Company.

Mr. Pierce further testified that according to his understanding these 2748 shares which he transferred and delivered to Mr. Garth belonged to and were to be transferred to the Standard Oil Company or its representatives, and that any dividends upon said shares which came into his possession were transferred by him to the Seaboard National Bank of New York, as he understood for the Standard Oil Company; that the reason the ownership by the Standard Oil Company of said 2748 shares did not appear upon the books of the company when it was organized—that is, the personal reasons of the witness were that it had been agreed by his attorney and the general counsel of the Standard Oil Company that the stock should stand in his name for the purpose of enabling him (Mr. Pierce) to own, control and operate the said Waters-Pierce Oil Company; that he had the understanding through his attorney that he was to remain the owner of record of said stock, and to control the company and to continue to do so as long as the stock remained in his name. Witness further testified that in 1904 after the Standard Oil Company had caused such 2748 shares to be transferred on the books of the company to M. M. Van Buren, said Standard Oil Company began to assume control over the affairs of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company by ousting directors that had been elected by the witness and substituting those of the Standard Oil Company's own selection, and by sending men to manage the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. Witness further testified that the Standard Oil Company audited the books of the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company whenever it saw fit to do so, and that the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company sent reports of its business to the Standard Oil Company, but the witness did not personally know that the books of the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company (plaintiff-in-error herein) had ever been audited by the Standard Oil Company from the time of the organization of the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company up to 1904. He further testified that after the present company was organized, the reports and communications were sent to R. H. McNall, 26 Broadway, New York, instead of to the various heads of the departments of the Standard Oil Company, as had been the case during the existence of the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company; that Mr. McNall had been clerk in the office of H. M. Tilford, and was selected for this position because of his familiarity with the business and that the purpose was to facilitate business, avoiding the delays of receiving and transmitting orders, and that McNall was to reside in New York, with his office at 26 Broadway, the home of the Standard Oil Company, and through him all communications of the various Standard Oil Company's interests would be transmitted, and that after McNall's appointment to this position, which was styled "commercial agent," he continued to maintain his office in that of Mr. Tilford's. Witness testified that he did not know until he read it in the newspapers that McNall's mail was directed to him at 75 New street, and that he did not know why this was done.

Mr. Pierce further testified with reference to the reports made by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to the Standard Oil Company through Mr. McNall that "the different heads of the different departments of the Standard Oil Company in New Jersey were in the habit of communicating through Mr. McNall their desires and, as the Manager of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, it was my understanding that the heads of departments requested such information as the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, who was a majority stockholder in the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, desired to have and recognizing the right of the largest stockholder in the company to have such information concerning its operation as it desired, I very readily instructed the various heads of the departments of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to send such information as was asked for."

Mr. Pierce further testified that H. M. Tinsley came to St. Louis in April, 1904, to assume charge of the Accounting Department of the Waters-Pierce Company, as successor to Mr. J. P. Gruet and remained until some time in April, May or June, 1905, that Mr. Tinsley did not come to St. Louis to take charge of the business of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, but under the agreement between the witness (Mr. Pierce) and W. H. Tilford, representing the Standard Oil Company, Mr. Tinsley was appointed to succeed Mr. Gruet as the auditor or comptroller of the Company, and to have to do only with the books and accounts of the company, and both agreed that under no circumstances was he to interfere with the management of the company. Witness stated that at this time Mr. Finley was president of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and Mr. Tinsley was given the title of Vice-President to supply the position made vacant by the retirement of Mr. Gruet; that when Mr. Tinsley came to St. Louis he was assigned by Mr. Finley to the position in reference to the books and accounts which had been made vacant by the retirement of Mr. Gruet, and that Tinsley at first made no objection to taking charge of the books, but finally refused to take charge thereof; that Mr. Finley, on account of his health, was compelled to go abroad some time in May or June, 1905, and that immediately upon Mr. Finley's departure Mr. Tinsley assumed charge of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in all its departments; that Mr. Tinsley proceeded at different dates to remove old and important officers and employees of the company and heads of departments and substituted others in their places; that when this information was brought to the knowledge of the witness he protested to the officials of the Standard Oil Company against the unwarranted action of Mr. Tinsley in violating the agreement.

The witness, Mr. H. Clay Pierce, further testified by deposition, the same being offered by defendant below (plaintiff-in-error), as follows: That he (Mr. Pierce) was not and never had been a shareholder in the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, and did not and never had owned any stock in any oil company other than the Waters-Pierce Oil Company; that when the Standard Oil Trust was organized he (Mr. Pierce) was urged to place the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in the Trust, but refused to do so; that when the first Waters-Pierce Oil Company was organized, it was agreed by all parties interested that the witness should control and direct its policy, and that he constantly continued to do so from the date of its organization until February, 1900, when ill health compelled him to retire as President of the company, and he elected his brother-in-law, A. M. Finlay, as his successor. He further testified that when the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company was organized in order that the company should conduct its business in accordance with the laws of every state in which it was operating, he placed the attorney of the company on its executive committee with instructions to examine all reports and transactions to the end that no law should be violated; that after frequent interviews and discussions with reference to the action of the Standard Oil Company in transferring the stock to M. M. Van Buren, the management and control of the company was again committed into the hands of the witness, and that his son, Clay Arthur Pierce, was then the president of the company, and was conducting it as an independent business. Mr. Pierce further testified that the volume of business of the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company was so great that it would have been impossible for it to obtain supplies sufficient to meet its requirements from any other source than the Standard Oil Company, and that he felt sure that at the time of testifying (September, 1906), it could not do so; that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was not interested in any oil wells or oil producing property within the United States. Witness further stated that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had never had any agreement or understanding with the Republic Oil Company, the Standard Oil Company or any other company or person for the purpose of fixing or intending to fix the price at which any of the products of petroleum should be sold on the market.

Mr. Pierce detailed the developments of the oil business by himself and the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, the improvements in the methods of delivery of oil, the substitution of tank stations and direct deliveries to consumers and dealers in tank wagons and in tin cans in place of the old method of shipping in wooden barrels and detailed the consequent saving in the conveyance of oil to the purchasers by said improved system.

In answer to the question as to why the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did not buy oil from independent refineries, the witness answered "as a rule the oils produced by the independent refineries were of inferior quality and were produced in such small quantities by each independent; although the aggregate was considerable, that it would have made it much more expensive for the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to have supplied its trade from a great many sources as against the one."

The State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of Mr. Wade Hampton as follows: That he (Mr. Hampton) was the general auditor of the accounts of different companies, among others, the Standard Oil Company of New York, the Atlantic Refining Company, and the Standard Oil Company of Indiana. Witness testified in some detail as to the auditors in his office being sent by him at different times to audit books of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. In view of the admission by defendant below (plaintiff-in-error herein) of the fact that auditors of the Standard Oil Company did audit the books of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company from time to time, it is not deemed necessary to give more of the details of the testimony of this witness. The evidence showed that these auditors were paid by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company for the time employed in making such audits. As to this, the witness, H. C. Pierce, in his testimony testified that the payment of these auditors by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was without his knowledge and certainly would have been stopped by him if he had known it.

The State further introduced in evidence certain letters written by Mr. Wade Hampton of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company dated respectively February 8, 1901, February 8, 1902, November 12, 1902, November 24, 1902, and November 10, 1903, and advising with reference to auditors going to audit the books of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and asking that such auditors be placed on the pay-roll of said company during the time so employed, and stating the salaries to be paid them; the first of such letters—the one dated February 8, 1901—stated that "for reasons which you undoubtedly will appreciate, it is best that Mr. Conrey (auditor) be considered an employee of your company during his examination." The state further introduced a letter from the said Hampton to H. C. Pierce, President of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, dated July 7, 1899, relating to the auditing of the books of the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company. These letters appear in the record page 533.

The State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of Maywood Maxon as follows: That he had been engaged in the oil business most of his life, and had worked for different companies, that he knew Alexander McDonnell, who was President of the Consolidated Tank Line Company and afterwards President of the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, that the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky had an office at 26 Broadway, New York, and that he (the witness) was Manager at one time for the Iowa Tank Line Company at Davenport, Iowa, that said company sold Standard Oil Company's oils except turpentine, that the Iowa Tank Line Company made reports to H. R. Payne, Secretary, 26 Broadway of the movement of Union Tank Line cars, that the Iowa Tank Line Company did business in the City of Trenton, Mo., and that the Consolidated Tank Line Company was not allowed to sell at Trenton, that the Consolidated Tank Line Company absorbed the Iowa Tank Line Company about 1885, that the Consolidated Tank Line Company went into the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, and that he was its manager until December 31, 1902, that as manager he was not allowed to sell oils in the territory of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in Illinois, that the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky had a storage and shipping depot in East St. Louis, under his jurisdiction, but that all orders or inquiries from such territory were referred to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company.

G. J. Steigerwald testified by deposition for the State of Texas as follows: That he was in the oil business with the Fred G. Clark Company; that his first connection with the oil business was as clerk for Schofield, Schurmer & Teagle of Cleveland, Ohio, from March 4, 1891, to January, 1901; that he was next secretary and treasurer of the Scio Refining Company with which company he remained until June 1st, 1901; that he was afterwards with the Republic Oil Company; that the said Republic Oil Company acquired the refinery of the Scio Oil Company; that the Republic Oil Company was located at Cleveland, Ohio, with distributing branches throughout the middle west and lake states and that he continued with the Republic Oil Company until April 15, 1904; that while the Scio Refining Company and Scofield, Schurmer & Teagle were in business they sold in practically each of the United States and that Scofield, Schurmer & Teagle were not large dealers in the State of Texas, but that in the States of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Nebraska and some adjacent territory they were the largest and most aggressive competitors of the Standard Oil Company and of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in the territory allotted to them; and that they competed in the distribution of oil by establishing branch houses and shipping therefrom in barrels and distributing by tank wagons. The witness further testified as to reports made by the Republic Oil Company to 26 Broadway, New York, and that the business of the Republic Oil Company was that in the territory in which it operated, as above stated, it was to secure and supply the trade of those who were dissatisfied with or prejudiced against the Standard Oil Company or its subsidiary companies and that it did not enter into active competition with the Standard Oil Company; and that a station of the Republic Oil Company formerly maintained by Scofield, Schurmer & Teagle at Springfield, Missouri, in the territory of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was closed by instructions of the President of the Republic Oil Company and the equipment removed from Springfield to Kansas City, Missouri.

The State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of A. H. Gardner, who testified as follows: That he was in the oil business in Kansas City, Missouri, and had lived there for fourteen years prior to which time he had lived at Denver, Colorado; while at Denver, he had been in the employ of the Continental Oil Company which sold oil in various northwestern states but did not enter into competition with or sell oil in any territory in which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company sold oil; that the Continental Oil Company made reports to H. M. Tilford, 26 Broadway, New York; that after going to Kansas City he entered the employ of the National Oil Company which said company was not in any way connected with the Standard Oil Company's interest; that Scofield, Schurmer & Teagle were in business in Kansas City and continued there until about five years before; that he had not in the conduct of his business in Missouri met the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and the Standard Oil Company as competitors in the same place.

The State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of Edward P. Pratt as follows: That he lived at Kansas City, Missouri, and had lived there since 1892, and that from 1882 to 1892 he lived at Des Moines, Iowa; that while living in Des Moines he was an officer of the Des Moines Oil & Tank Line Company and that this Company was sold to the Consolidated Tank Line Company; that he was manager of the Consolidated Tank Line Company at Des Moines until March, 1892; that there was in Missouri a dividing line between the territory in which the Consolidated Tank Line Company did business and the territory in which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did business; that the Consolidated Tank Line Company was succeeded by the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky in 1896 and afterwards by the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, and that he was respectively manager for each of these companies in Kansas City and that there was no change in the territory in which they did business from that in which the Consolidated Tank Line Company had done business; that while he was manager at Kansas City of the Consolidated Tank Line Company and the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky and Indiana, if an order was received from a dealer in the Waters-Pierce Oil Company's territory, such order was either sent to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company at St. Louis or the shipment was made by the Consolidated Tank Line Company which reported the sale to the head office of said company at Cincinnati; while he was manager at Kansas City he did no business in Texas, because it was not in his territory.

The State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of A. V. Jockel as follows: That he was employed by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey from June, 1904, until December, 1904, in the capacity of bookkeeper; that he worked for the Waters-Pierce Oil Company at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma Territory, from December, 1904, to February, 1905; that in November, 1904, he was informed by the manager of the Newark branch of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey that his transfer had been requested to some western agency and that Mr. King desired his presence at 26 Broadway, New York, the following day; that he was given a letter of introduction to Mr. King which he presented and Mr. King introduced him in turn to Mr. R. H. McNall with whom he made all arrangements regarding his transfer to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company; that about a week later he left New York for St. Louis and saw Mr. Tinsley whom Mr. McNall had directed him to see before going to Oklahoma City; that he made his final arrangements with Mr. Tinsley and then left for Oklahoma City; that the duties of Mr. King were merely the auditing of the monthly reports of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company sent to the St. Louis office; that before going with the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, Mr. Young, the manager of the Standard Oil Company at Newark, New Jersey, instructed him not to mention the fact that he had been with the Standard Oil Company; that the oils sold by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company at Oklahoma City were obtained from the Standard Oil Company of Indiana and from the Galena Oil Company.

The State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of Harry Egbert Platt as follows: That he resided in New York, and was clerk in the office of W. H. & H. M. Tilford for about two years, beginning in February either in the year 1902, or 1903, that while there he knew Mr. R. H. McNall, who had a desk in H. M. Tilford's room, and that while there he saw reports from the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to R. H. McNall; that Mr. McNall was commercial agent for the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and that letters addressed to him were addressed to 75 New Street, New York, which was the rear entrance to the building at 26 Broadway, that various reports received by Mr. McNall were sent to Silas H. Payne and W. E. Bemis, Mr. Bedford and others, all having offices at 26 Broadway, and that it was the custom for letters written at various departments at 26 Broadway to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to be sent to Mr. McNall to be signed by him.

The State further offered in evidence the deposition of Albert A. Smith, as follows: That he resided in Brooklyn, was employed in the office of Messrs. Burt & Goodeno, at 26 Broadway, New York, in May, 1903, in the department known as the Shipping Department, and that in May of the following year, he was transferred to the office of W. E. Bemis where he remained about a year and one-half. Mr. Bemis was a member of the committee known as the Domestic Trades Committee, and was in charge of the department known as the Statistical Department, that reports came to Mr. Bemis from all over the world, and that witness had seen the reports from the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, that these reports were reports of monthly deliveries of oil and different products connected with the business as well as reports of competitive shipments, that letters were dictated to him at Mr. Bemis's office and sent to McNall to be signed, that the letters he wrote were sent in to Mr. McNall to be signed and copied in his book and returned to be mailed.

The State further offered in evidence the deposition of Francis D. Carley as follows: That he resided in White Plains, New York, and had been engaged in the oil business from 1865 to 1884, first, with the firm of Chess-Carley & Company, afterwards with the corporation Chess-Carley Company, and afterwards for a few years with the Water-Pierce Oil Company, that the corporation of Chess-Carley Company was engaged in selling oil in Texas. Witness testified that he sold his interests in the Chess-Carley Company to the M. K. & T. Tank Line for stock in the Waters-Pierce Oil Company.

State further introduced in evidence the deposition of W. N. Davis as follows: That he resided in Kansas City, and was engaged in effecting sales of lubricating oils and other products of petroleum; that he was the manager in Kansas City, and had been with the Keystone Oil Company of Kansas City and the Inter-Ocean Oil Company of Chicago for about nine years; that prior to that time he was connected with the Interstate Oil Company which did business all over the world; that he met the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, the Standard Oil Company, in competition in Missouri, but had never met both companies in the same place; that he had worked for the Consolidated Tank Line Company, and that there was a line in Missouri, between the territory of the Consolidated Tank Line Company and the territory of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and that they did not compete; that while connected with the Consolidated Oil Company, there was some controversy over a station at Joplin, Missouri, which he had established, which was afterwards turned over to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company.

State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of William A. Morgan as follows: That he resided in Sedalia, Missouri, and had been engaged as traveling salesman for the Standard Oil Company of Missouri from December 1, 1898, until October, 1900; that the Standard Oil Company transacted business in certain parts of the State of Missouri, and the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did no business in such parts; that the Standard Oil Company did no business in those parts of the state in which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did business.

State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of H. R. Knowlenberg as follows: That he resided in St. Louis, and had been a traveling salesman for the Waters-Pierce Oil Company from about 1893 to about 1898 or 1899, and worked in Illinois and Missouri; that prior to that time he had worked for the Vacuum Oil Company of Rochester, as traveling salesman in the same territory; that the Standard Oil Company purchased the business of the Vacuum Oil Company, whereupon he went to work for the Waters-Pierce Oil Company; that when he made trips in Illinois soliciting business, his reports were sent to the Standard Oil Company at East St. Louis, Illinois, and when he solicited business in Missouri, his reports were sent to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company.

State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of T. R. Hopkins as follows: That he lived in Lawrence County, Missouri, and had been connected with the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in the capacity of agent at Seneca, Joplin, Webb City and Pierce City, all in Missouri, from 1887 to 1893, and that the Standard Oil Company and the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did not compete with each other in the State of Missouri.

State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of Mr. R. H. McNall as follows: That he resided in Greenwich, Connecticut, and had an office at 26 Broadway, New York, where he had been for about twenty years, that he had worked for the Pratt Manufacturing Company for about ten years, and afterwards for the Standard Oil Pratt Works, and then with Mr. Tilford as an assistant, and had remained with him for about five years until some time in the year 1900, when he was employed by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to look after such business as they might give him in New York City, being given a little later the title of Commercial Agent, and at this time he occupied a desk in the office of H. M. Tilford; that his mail was addressed to 75 New Street, the rear entrance of 26 Broadway; that he attended to making purchases for the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, received reports and wrote letters to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company; that some of the reports received by him were submitted to and examined by different persons at 26 Broadway, and that he signed and mailed the Waters-Pierce Oil Company various letters written in other departments at 26 Broadway, and that such letters were marked with the initial of the person writing the same, namely, "S. H. P.," representing Silas H. Payne; "T. H. W.," T. H. Wheeler; "W E. B.," W. E. Bemis;" "H. M. T.," H. M. Tilford. "C. E. B.," C. E. Bedford; "W. H. T.," W. H. Tilford.

Witness further identified various letters from him to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to the different officers thereof, which said letters are attached to his deposition, and copies are found on page 605 ff. of the record herein. These are letters relating to requests for notices of dividends as declared by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, changes of salaries in Mexico, advances in salary, suggestions as to bookkeeping, requests for monthly reports and various other matters of information with reference to the conduct of the business, and letters acknowledging receipts of information, receipts of letters, reports from the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and one letter from the witness, R. H. McNall, to S. Johnson, St. Louis, dated March 24, 1904, suggesting that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company's minimum selling price on crude scale wax should be certain prices, stated in the letter, F. O. B. cars Cleveland, Ohio, Whiting, Indiana or New York, stating that while the price named was suggested as a minimum price, he did not want to try to get anything above these prices if by so doing any business might be jeopardized and further stating that on all orders received after that date the billing price of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company would be one-half cent below the price suggested. None of said letters, however, contained any suggestion as to the price at which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company should sell any article dealt in by it except this one letter making the suggestion with respect to the selling price of crude scale wax.

Witness testified that he was in the employ of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company from the spring or summer of 1900, until the spring of 1906, during all of which time his office was at 26 Broadway, New York, and that among other things he conducted correspondence passing between the Standard Oil Company and the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and for the Standard Oil Company in regard to the business of the former such as reports of sale, dividends and general information with reference to the conduct and result of the business of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and that during this time he wrote letters to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company at the dictation of the various heads of the departments of the Standard Oil Company.

The State of Texas further introduced in evidence other letters written by the witness, R. H. McNall, to different officers of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, which letters related to prices of the Standard Oil Company of oil and other products at their different refineries, requests for information as to the business of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and that of competitors and suggestions as to systems of bookkeeping and requests for reports, etc. None of these letters contained any suggestion as to the price at which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company should sell its products or any of its commodities in which it dealt; one of these letters was admitted in evidence dated January 30, 1908, relating to the bill of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company against the Standard Oil Company, Marine Department, calling attention to the fact that the price of one of the articles was not given in the bill, returning the bill and asking that the price of the article be furnished. From the letter it appeared that this was for goods delivered by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to some ship.

The State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of S. K. Wheeler, who testified that he was Assistant General Manager of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and was General Representative of the company from November, 1903 to 1905, that the prices at which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company sold its products and commodities in which it dealt were fixed by the General Manager in consultation with other officers of the company, and that he as Assistant General Manager, had at times participated in said consultation in the absence of the General Manager himself; that the factors entering into the fixing of prices were the cost of the article, competition at the point of selling and the judgment of the officers as to the price the article should bring in case there was no competition, and that prices were often raised or lowered unaffected by competition.

Clay Arthur Pierce testified for the State by deposition as follows: That he was thirty-three years old, and was President of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company; having been such since June, 1905, and that he had actively discharged the duties as President of the Company and managed and controlled its affairs as far as a President could do so; that his duties had been that of executive head of the company, managing its business affairs and all details connected therewith, and to take final executive action on all business of any nature pertaining to the company; that he had succeeded A. M. Finlay as President of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company; that he was first employed by the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company in the spring of 1898 as Assistant Treasurer, and was re-employed as such by the new company when it organized in 1900, and that he continued in that position until June, 1905, at which time he was elected President; that two months previous to that time he had been made Acting President and occupied the position as such; that his duties as Assistant Treasurer were such as naturally fall to that position, and in addition he sat in the Executive Committee of the company as the Secretary of that committee, and was a member of that committee from the time of its formation until the same was disbanded; that as he remembered the Executive Committee was organized in 1900, and existed from that time until the fall of 1904; that since the organization of the Executive Committee he had usually been one of three who had determined and fixed the selling price at which the company sold its commodities in Texas; that when requisitions for supplies for the Waters-Pierce Oil Company were ordered sent from the refinery of the Standard Oil Company at Whiteing, Indiana, such requisitions were sent direct to Whiteing, Indiana, and the same was true with reference to requisitions on the Atlantic Refining Company, Sugar Creek Refining Company and all the other refineries; that when requisitions for supplies were made on the Security Oil Company, at Beaumont, they were sent direct to that company at Beaumont; that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company received a small amount of gasoline from Whiteing, Indiana, or Sugar Creek, or Neodesha, for its business in Texas, but that the bulk of the supplies of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in Texas were received from the Corsicana Refinery and the Security Oil Company at Beaumont; that for Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Indian Territory and the Southern part of Arkansas, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company purchased what it could from the Gulf Refinery and the Texas Refinery; that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did business in the southern half of the State of Missouri, in a portion of the State of Illinois, immediately east of the Mississippi River, and all of Arkansas, all of Texas and all of Oklahoma and Indian Territory, a portion of Louisiana west of the Mississippi River, and in all the Republic of Mexico; that the Standard Oil Company had certain contracts with steamship lines entering Texas ports to supply the same with oil, and that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company furnished such ships with supplies whenever requested on account of the Standard Oil Company, and charged the same to the Standard Oil Company, and that the prices for such sales were made by the lubricating department of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and these prices were fixed by the head of the lubricating department of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, the Executive Committee and the Advisory Board not doing so. The witness further testified that R. P. Tinsley was elected Vice-President of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company April 28, 1904, and that he resigned June 22, 1905; that Mr. A. M. Finlay was elected President February 18, 1904, and served until June 22, 1905; that Mr. Tinsley came to the home office of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and assumed the duties of Vice-President some time in April, 1904, and left about the end of April, 1905, nearly two months before he actually tendered his resignation. Witness further testified that from the time of his connection with the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, his father, H. Clay Pierce, had been Chairman of the Board of Directors, and that such matters as witness had found it advisable to refer to him for final decision were decided by him and thereafter handled entirely in accordance with his ideas, and that so far as he could recall the same procedure was followed by A. M. Finlay when he was President; that at the time Mr. Tinsley was in St. Louis, the witness had nothing to do with the fixing of prices, and does not know how such prices were fixed; that from the time of organization of the company down to the time Mr. Tinsley came to St. Louis, in 1904, H. Clay Pierce directed the general business of the company and carried it out through the other officers of the company, and that he continued to do so after Mr. Tinsley left. Witness further testified that without actually knowing he had understood that the Standard Oil Company owned about two-thirds of the stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and that as such owner the said Standard Oil Company had the right to ask for such information as a two-thirds stockholder or a majority stockholder would be entitled to, and for that reason statements with respect to the company's business were sent to the Standard Oil Company at their request. Witness further testified that the lubricating department of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, from time to time, received requisitions from the Standard Oil Company's marine department to deliver marine oils to certain vessels at Galveston, Texas; that they would state definitely when the vessel would be in port and the amount of oil she would need; that these were vessels with which the Standard Oil Company had contracts for the sale and delivery of marine oils; that upon such requisitions, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company made deliveries through its lubricating department, and bill these oils to the Standard Oil Company at prices which it had named in the letter to the head of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company's lubricating department; that the witness had adjusted these prices from time to time, the Standard paying in accordance therewith; that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had nothing to do with the prices charged by the Standard Oil Company to vessels so furnished with oil, and that witness knew nothing about the terms of the contract between the Standard Oil Company and such vessels.

The defendant (plaintiff-in-error herein) introduced a portion of this same witness's deposition not offered by the State of Texas, as follows: That from the organization of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, up to the time that R. P. Tinsley disbanded the Executive Committee, the prices at which oils were sold were fixed by that Committee. Witness was unable to state how they were fixed during the time Mr. Tinsley was Vice-President; that since the latter's resignation, which was accepted some time during June, 1905, the prices were adjusted by A. M. Finlay, Vice-President; C. P. Ackert, General Manager, and the witness as President of the Company, final adjustment being at all times in the hands of the witness as such President; that since the formation of the Advisory Committee, which was formed some time in the fall of 1906, the prices had been considered by the Advisory Committee, voted upon by them, but always referred to the witness as President for final adjustment; that this Advisory Committee was composed of the witness, Chairman of the Board; A. M. Finlay, Vice-President; C. P. Ackert, General Manager; C. M. Adams, Secretary and Treasurer; Mr. Harris, Manager of the lubricating department, and Mr. Stanley, Comptroller of the company; that the method above set forth was absolutely the only means by which prices were finally fixed during the time he had anything to do with the fixing of prices, and that to his certain knowledge the prices of the company, and at which its goods had been sold, had never been fixed other than as herein stated and that during all the time he had been an officer of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company (plaintiff-in-error herein), it had to his knowledge been managed entirely and absolutely as an independent concern by its own officers; that during his connection with the company, the Standard Oil Company, as a large stockholder in the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, had received from time to time, reports to which a heavy stockholder was entitled. The Standard Oil Company, from time to time, offered suggestions in line with their own ideas as to the way the Waters-Pierce Oil Company should be managed or the way in which prices should be adjusted, and that these were merely incidental suggestions received from time to time; that where these suggestions met with the views of the management of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, they were approved and adopted, but in the majority of cases, they were not followed at all. Witness further testified that the Standard Oil Company had nothing to do directly with the fixing of prices or control of business of plaintiff-in-error in any manner, shape or form; that during May, June and July, 1904, after Mr. Tinsley's coming to St. Louis, the Eexecutive Committee continued in existence, and during that time the prices were fixed by the Executive Committee, but that from the dissolution of the Executive Committee, down to the time Mr. Tinsley left St. Louis, witness did not know how prices were fixed. The letter referred to by the witness written by him to the Comptroller of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company with reference to the marine oil prices read as follows: "Dead Sir:—Effective December 1, 1905. You will please charge the Standard Oil Company, marine oil department, prices as follows for all our deliveries to their companies. (Giving prices). The above, you understand, supersedes the former Vice-President, R. P. Tinsley's instruction to you of May 5th, last."

The State of Texas further introduced in evidence the deposition of Andrew M. Finlay. Mr. Finlay testified that he was president of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, plaintiff-in-error herein, up to June, 1905, that is, from February, 1904, until June, 1905; that Mr. Tinsley came into the company some time in April, 1904, and left the last of May or the first of June, following. The witness testified that when a division manager wanted a supply of oil for any part of Texas he would make a requisition upon the general manager at St. Louis and if it was approved it would go to Mr. Adams' department and that Mr. Adams would make out an order on the regular order form and if the order was to be shipped from St. Louis, it would be sent to the company's works in St. Louis; if the order was to go from the Corsicana Refinery Company or the refinery at Whiteing, Indiana, it would be sent to Mr. Bogardus, the representative of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, at Chicago. Witness stated that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company determined the points from which its shipments should be made; that after the organization of the Security Company at Beaumont, Texas, orders for oil purchased of the Security Company were sent by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company direct to its agent at Beaumont or Sawyer, Texas, and this agent would place the order with the Security Company or the Gulf Company or the Texas Company. Witness stated that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company purchased the bulk of its supplies for Texas and elsewhere from the Standard Oil Company or its interests; that during the time of the existence of the Executive Committee of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, he (Mr. Finlay) was a member of said committee and that the prices at which the company sold oil or other commodities in Texas were passed upon first by the general manager of the company or himself and recommendations were then made to the executive committee; when approved by the committee, the prices were promulgated by the general manager. Witness stated that the prime factors in fixing prices were the cost of goods, including freight, marketing and competition; that the prices of oils in the lubricating department were fixed during that time in that department and that it was not true that the Standard Oil Company fixed the prices of oils in the lubricating department of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company; witness stated that when Mr. Pierce employed Mr. McNall he instructed the witness to give Mr. McNall any information or reports that he might ask for and to address him as commercial agent. Witness stated that orders sent to Mr. McNall were not placed by him, but by Mr. Adams; that when McNall was first employed by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company he had his office at 26 Broadway, New York, and communications were addressed to him at that number; that he did not remember when the change of address to 75 New Street was made; that Mr. McNall requested that his mail be sent to the latter address and that he (the witness) referred this to the general counsel for the company who advised against the change, but Mr. McNall insisted upon it.

Witness further testified—this portion of his deposition being offered in evidence by plaintiff-in-error—as follows: That he was the brother-in-law of H. Clay Pierce and was connected with the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company from the time of its organization to its dissolution and had been with the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company since it was organized; that he had been Vice-President in the present company from the time of its organization until 1904 when he was made president and that ever since the organization of this company he had had the active direction and supervising control of the marketing department; that the prices at which the company sold its oil to the trade had been fixed by Mr. Ackert, Mr. C. A. Pierce, Mr. H. C. Pierce and the witness, and that during the time that Mr. Tinsley was in St. Louis, prices were fixed by Mr. Ackert, Mr. Tinsley and the witness. Witness further testified that during the time Mr. Tinsley was in St. Louis he attempted to interfere a good deal with the management of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, but that he (the witness) as president of the company at the time endeavored to and did run the company as an independent concern; that the manner in which Mr. Tinsley attempted to interfere in the management of the company was by insisting on things being done which were not approved of by the witness, as, for example, in discharging old and tried employees and putting in new men, and Mr. Tinsley made himself so generally disagreeable that his continual nagging broke down the health of the witness, so that in March, 1905, he was compelled by direction of his physician to go abroad and was away until June 1st of that year; that during the time he was abroad Mr. Tinsley was Vice-President and Mr. C. P. Ackert, a cousin of Mr. H. C. Pierce, was general manager of the company, and Mr. Steven Johnson, a brother-in-law of Mr. H. C. Pierce, was manager of the lubricating department. Witness further stated that while he was President of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company the books were audited from time to time by auditors sent there by Mr. Wade Hampton of New York; that these audits occurred at intervals of a year or perhaps a year and a half and were allowed for information of the majority stockholders in New York; that such audits had no relation to the management or control of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company but were employed simply to show that the books and accounts were in proper condition and correct.

The State of Texas further introduced in evidence the deposition of Mr. Steven Johnson, who testified that he had been the manager of the lubricating department of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company for a number of years prior to October, 1906; that he generally fixed the selling prices of lubricating oil sold by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. He stated that the lubricating department of the Standard Oil Company sometimes made suggestions as to selling prices and that if these suggestions met with the approval of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, they were adopted, otherwise, they were not. Witness further testified that in fixing the prices of lubricating oils he took into consideration the cost of the oil including freight and the profits that were warranted in order to maintain competition with other dealers; that there never was any understanding between him or his associates in the lubricating department of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and the Standard Oil Company in regard to the prices at which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was to sell lubricating oils; that such suggestions as were made by the Standard Oil Company as to prices were adopted if conditions justified; otherwise they were not and that the prices were determined by other conditions, namely, by competition and the prices at which competitors were selling the same kind of oil.

Royer Campbell testified for the State of Texas mainly with reference to a contract between him and the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company and with reference to services rendered by him to the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company, charged in petition of plaintiff to have been illegal. This testimony was withdrawn by the court from the jury and none of the testimony of this witness is considered material to the question here involved.

The State of Texas offered in evidence the deposition of H. J. Cohn, who testified that he had worked for the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in St. Louis from April, 1900, until September, 1902; that he was familiar at that time with the territory in which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did business in Missouri, and that the Standard Oil Company did not do business in the territory in Missouri in which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did business, nor did the Waters-Pierce Oil Company do business in Missouri in the territory in which the Standard Oil Company did business. Witness stated that he knew in a business way of the firm of Scofield, Schurmer & Teagle and that they were absorbed by the Republic Oil Company. He stated that prior to going to St. Louis he lived at Marshall, Texas, where he was employed by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company for about eight years in different positions from office boy to salesmen and division auditor, and that during that time the Waters-Pierce Oil Company received the greater part of its supplies from the Standard Oil Company's refinery at Whiteing, Indiana, and the refinery at Corsicana, Texas; that it received its railroad oils from the Galena Signal Oil Company at Franklin, Pennsylvania.

The State of Texas further offered the testimony of the witness A. W. Clem, much of which related to the contract alleged in the petition of the State between the witness, the Eagle Refining Company and the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company, to services rendered by witness to the latter company and to the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company. This testimony was withdrawn from the jury by the charge of the court. Witness further testified that he lived in Dallas, Texas; had been engaged in the oil business in that city since about the year 1890; that he had first been in business for himself under the name of the Eagle Refining Company up to 1894, when he sold his business to the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company for whom he worked until its dissolution and that he was in the employment of the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company at Dallas doing business under the name of the Eagle Refining Company up to about December 31, 1903; and that he continued in the employ of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company for about two months after that date, after which time he again went into the oil business for himself and at the time of his testimony was so engaged in the oil business at Dallas, Texas. Over the objections of defendant below, plaintiff-in-error herein, the witness testified to numerous instances of the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company cutting prices for the purpose of destroying competition; that at the time of the trial of this suit below there were in competition with the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company in the sale of oil at Dallas, Texas, and adjacent territory, the Richardson-Gay Oil Company, the Ira O. Wise Oil Company and the Gulf Refining Company. The witness further testified, over objections of defendant below, that in 1894, after going into the oil business at Dallas, he wrote to the Security Oil Company to quote him prices on oil and that his first letters were not answered; that in 1906 he wrote them for prices on naphtha and that they quoted him about what the market was selling for in Dallas and about two cents above the price he was paying for this product to the Gulf Refinery from whom he had been obtaining it. He further stated that he knew nothing about the extent of the output in Texas of the different refineries.

C. W. Cahoon was further sworn as a witness on behalf of plaintiff below, State of Texas, and testified as follows: That he had worked for the old Waters-Pierce Oil Company in various capacities from about 1888 up to the dissolution of that company and that he had been in the employ of the present company since its organization in the position of manager of the Central Texas Division with his headquarters at Dallas. Witness stated that the principal source of oil supply used by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in Texas in his division was Corsicana at the time of the trial below, but that up to two months before this time, Neodesha, Kansas, had been the principal source of supply; that he did not know what company or concern owned the refinery at Neodesha; that all his requisitions for oil for use in his division were placed with the Waters-Pierce Oil Company at its St. Louis office; that prior to two months before the trial below the Security Oil Company's refinery at Chaison, Tex., had been a source of supply to his division as well as the refinery at Neodesha, and that at that time his division had received about as much of its supplies from the Gulf Refining Oil Company as from the Security Oil Company. Witness further testified that he had occasion to inform himself as to the probable output of Eupion oil by the Corsicana Refinery and that it was probably one thousand to fifteen hundred barrels per week; that "P. W." oil meant prime white and was a low grade oil and that "S. W." oil meant standard white and was a still lower grade than prime white, but that he could give no estimate of the production by the Corsicana Refinery of "P. W." and "S. W." oils; that at the time of testifying his division took from eight hundred to one thousand barrels per week of "W. W." or Eupion oil from the Corsicana refinery; that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in its Texas business handled a very large percentage of the output of the Corsicana refinery and that it had endeavored to take the entire output of that refinery so far as high grade oil was concerned; that in his judgment the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had done approximately eighty per cent of the business done in Texas since its organization in 1900. Over the objections of defendant below, plaintiff-in-error herein, witness further testified that for a period of about sixty days in 1906 the Waters-Pierce Oil Company marketed some "P. W." and "S. W." oil produced at Corsicana under the name of Eupion and that this was done on account of a shortage in the supply of the better oil.

On cross-examination, witness testified as to the method employed by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in doing business in Texas. He stated that it had a large number of tank stations in that state; that oils were shipped to the various stations in bulk in tank cars and that a large percentage of the deliveries were made by the company in tank wagons and in some of the territory practically all deliveries were made by tank wagons; that the company not only delivered in that way to the local trade but in most places delivered to every little town within a radius of fifteen and sometimes twenty miles from the central station; and that the deliveries were made by delivering direct from the wagon to the tank of the purchaser without any waste or trouble to the purchaser. Witness further stated that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did not at all times meet reductions in the prices of its competitors though it sometimes did so; but that the company depended largely upon its superior grades of oil and its superior facilities for handling the oils in barrels; that the advantage to a merchant in buying oil from a tank wagon was that he could get oil in such quantities as he required from five gallons up and have it placed in his tank direct by the company, whereas if the oil was permitted to stand in the house in barrels there was considerable loss and if transferred to a tank there was considerable time and labor involved and that a large majority of the retail merchants at this time insisted on having their oil delivered from tank wagons. Witness further stated that as a rule the Waters-Pierce Oil Company charged no more for oil delivered from tank wagons than if delivered in iron or wooden barrels. Witness further stated that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had in his territory about eighty-five wagons, tank wagons and can wagons for delivery, and was increasing its equipment in this respect; that it had not been the policy of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company since its organization to cut prices on oil below those quoted by its competitors, but when prices were so cut by competitors, the company cut its own prices whenever it became a question of either meeting the competitor's price or permanently losing the trade, and that the service furnished by the company in its business was such that it could maintain a slightly higher price than its competitors. Witness stated that sometimes discounts were given to jobbers that might make the prices of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company sometimes lower than those of its competitors.

On re-direct-examination by the State, witness testified with reference to discounts given by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to various customers, the different prices at which oils were sold at different places and concerning details of the different business in Texas, the particulars of which do not affect the question here raised and are not necessary to be set forth.

The State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of E. S. Horn, who testified as hereinbefore shown that he had been an assistant of Mr. Johnson, in the Lubricating Oil Department of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, that in said department was handled all sorts and kinds of greases, lubricating oils, wax and things of like character, and that the company had a manufacturing establishment in St. Louis, wherein it compounded cylinder oils and greases, and that it purchased approximately 50 per cent of its lubricating oils from the Standard Oil Company; that it was not a fact that the Standard Oil Company fixed the prices at which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company sold the above named products, purchased by it from the Standard Oil Company, and that the latter company had nothing to do with the fixing of such prices; that if they made any suggestions, they would not carry them out. Witness further testified (this portion of his deposition being introduced by defendant below, plaintiff-in-error) that with reference to deliveries of lubricating oils to the plant of the Central Coal & Coke Company (Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company) that the Standard Oil Company of Kansas City were negotiating with the purchasing agent of the Central Coal & Coke Company for prices of oil delivered at Kennard, Tex., and that the manager of the Standard Oil Company asked the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to quote them prices for delivery of oil to the Central Coal & Coke Co. at Kennard, Texas, naming the grades of oil wanted, and that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did quote prices as above to the Standard Oil Company, and that the prices so quoted were accepted, and the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was asked to honor the requisition of the Central Coal & Coke Company and rendered invoices to the Standard Oil Company which paid for the oils delivered in that way.

The State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of C. M. Adams, who testified as follows: That he was a director of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company; that at the last election of the Board of Directors of the company, he received the proxy of Mr. M. M. Van Buren, with instructions to vote the stock standing in the latter's name, and which further stated that he (Mr. Van Buren) would be pleased to see the whole board re-elected; that the board was composed of Messrs. H. Clay Pierce, Clay Arthur Pierce, M. M. Van Buren, W. F. Taylor, and the witness, C. M. Adams. Witness stated that W. F. Taylor was an attorney belonging to the firm of Carter, Ledyard, Taylor & Company, of New York, and owned one share of stock in the Waters-Pierce Oil Company; that since the organization of the latter company up to some time in June, 1905, with the exception of a period in which Mr. J. D. Johnson had been a member of the Board of Directors, the witness thought it was true that there had always been three members of the Board of Directors, who were supposed to represent the Standard Oil Company.

The following portion of the deposition of Mr. Adams was offered by defendant below (plaintiff-in-error herein). Witness testified that when the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company was incorporated he subscribed for one share of stock, became a director and was made Treasurer of the company, and was a member of the Executive Committee, during its existence; that the price at which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company sold oils and other products was determined by the officers of the Waters-Pierce Company in charge of the marketing department, and that there had been no limitation in any manner as to the amount and quantity of products sold by the company; that it sold all it could, the amount being determined by the demand.

Witness further stated that there had been no agreement or understanding, so far as he knew, between the Waters-Pierce Oil Company or any of its officers, with any Standard Oil Company, or any Standard Oil interests, regarding the prices at which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was to sell or had sold its oils, or other products, or regarding the quantity of such oils, or other products sold by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and he stated that he thought he was in a position to know if there had been any such understanding or agreement; that nearly all of the refined oils and gasolines sold by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company were ordered through his office. Witness further testified with reference to the reports of the business done by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, made to the Standard Oil Company through Mr. McNall, that they had no relation to the management of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company's business, but were given simply as a matter of information; that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company's method of procuring supplies of refined oils and gasolines was that the managers would make requisitions for such supplies to the office in St. Louis, these would go to the general manager's office, then to Mr. Finlay, the Vice-President, and from him to the witness, and that the witness thereupon ordered the goods from where they were to be shipped from. Mr. Adams stated that the Chicago office governs the refining at Whiteing, Ind.; Sugar Creek, Mo., and Neodesha, Kansas, and he thought the refinery at Corsicana, Texas; that whenever shipments were to be from the Corsicana refinery, the orders were either sent direct to the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, at Chicago, or to Edward Bogardus, their representative; that neither Mr. Taylor nor Mr. Van Buren, while members of the Board of Directors of the oil company had ever attended a meeting of the Board, and that while Mr. Tinsley was in St. Louis, there was no change in the manner of fixing the prices at which the company sold its products, so far as the witness knew. Mr. Adams further testified (this portion of his deposition being offered by the State of Texas), that before Mr. Tinsley came into the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, there was an Executive Company which had general control of the business of the company and which fixed the prices at which oils should be sold; that after Mr. Tinsley came, that committee was abolished, and that during the time Mr. Tinsley was with the company, the prices were fixed by the Executive officers of the company.

The State of Texas further offered in evidence the deposition of Mr. Charles S. Keith, who testified as follows: That he was the Vice-President and General Manager of the Central Coal & Coke Company, and also General Manager of the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company; that the Central Coal & Coke Company had an office in Kansas City; that the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company had a sawmill at Kennard or Ratcliff, Texas, which had been in operation since about 1901 or 1902, and that the supplies for the mill were purchased from his office in Kansas City; that the Central Coal & Coke Company also owned and operated mills at Neame and at Carson, Louisiana.

Witness stated that in years 1903 or 1904, the Central Coal & Coke Company had a contract with the Waters-Pierce Oil Company for supplying it with lubricating cylinder oils, greases, etc., for these mills; that in 1905, it had a contract with the Bonner Oil Company; in 1906, with the Standard Oil Company and in 1907 that the contract was divided between the Standard Oil Company and the Bonner Oil Company, the former supplying the oils to the Texas plants and the latter to the Louisiana plants; that during no year did the Central Coal & Coke Company, and the Louisiana & Texas Lumber Company have a contract for the supplies of oil with two oil companies except during the year 1907. Witness stated that he did not know whether or not, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company furnished the supplies contracted to be furnished by the Standard Oil Company, but that their remittances for the oils contracted to be furnished by the Standard Oil Company were made direct to the latter company. Witness stated that the contracts for oils for the concerns represented by witness were always let in competition, and to the lowest bidder.

Copies of the various contracts referred to by witness are attached to his deposition (Record pages 852-870).

Mr. C. P. Ackert introduced as a witness for the State of Texas testified under cross-examination by defendant below as follows: That he was an Assistant General Manager of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company from the time of its organization until he became General Manager; that as General Manager he was in charge of the marketing of oils; that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had about 450 stations in Texas, one or more stations in every county in the state, and about 250 tank stations—that is, stations where tanks were erected for distribution for the trade—and that the company had about 450 employees in Texas, and that 60 or 65 per cent of the total sales of refined oils made by the company in Texas were made by delivery from tank wagons or can wagons. Witness further testified that the first Executive Committee of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was organized in June or July, 1900, and that he was a member of that Committee; that the first organization of the Committee was informal; that the organization was subsequently formally effected by resolution of the Board of Directors some time in the year 1902; that that Committee was composed of Messrs. A. M. Finlay, C. A. Pierce, C. M. Adams, J. P. Gruet, H. C. Pierce, Stephen Johnson, J. D. Johnson, and the witness, C. P. Ackert; that it was made up of the heads of the various departments, and was presided over by the President of the company; that the Committee continued in operation until 1904; that all matters of a general character were referred to and considered by that Committee; that in October or November, 1906, an Advisory Committee was organized, composed of Messrs. C. A. Pierce, A. M. Finlay, Edward Stanley, C. L. Harris and the witness, C. P. Ackert, respectively heads of departments of the company; that during the existence of the Executive Committee above mentioned, the selling price of the products dealt in by the company were fixed by this committee, and that neither the Standard Oil Company, nor anyone else had anything to do with the fixing of such prices, during that time; that after the dissolution of the Executive Committee, and until the Advisory Committee was created, prices were fixed by the officers of the company, and that during this period neither the Standard Oil Company nor any one else besides the officers of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company had anything to do with the fixing of prices; that Mr. Tinsley first went to St. Louis about March, 1904, and that Mr. Finlay performed the duties of President from Feburary, 1904, until he left, and during his absence from about the middle of February, 1905, until June 15th, 1905, Mr. R. P. Tinsley acted as President of the company; that Mr. Tinsley left St. Louis about June 1st, 1905, and was succeeded by Mr. C. A. Pierce as President. A. M. Finley became Vice-President and these two positions have been occupied thus ever since. Witness further stated that while the Standard Oil Company fixed the prices at which it sold its products to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, as well as to other persons, that it had no relation to the prices at which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company sold to its trade in Texas or elsewhere, but that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company fixed its own prices. Witness further testified that the Standard Oil Company, since May, 1906, had been competing with the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in portions of Illinois and of Louisiana, in which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company did business, and that the latter company had been aggressively "going after" such business.

The State of Texas introduced in evidence certain letters written by R. H. McNall to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and its various officers, relating to the quotation of prices charged by the Standard Oil Company for goods purchased from it by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, requests for information, reports of business done by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, suggestions as to methods of bookkeeping and reports, etc., etc. No letter was introduced from Mr. McNall or anyone else, containing any suggestions whatsoever as to prices at which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company should sell any article in which it dealt except the one single letter of Mr. McNall's to Mr. Stephen Johnson, hereinbefore referred to, in which a price was suggested for the sale of scale wax.

The State of Texas also introduced in evidence various letters from the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, written from Chicago by Mr. Edward Bogardus and Mr. W. P. Cowan, to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and its officers relating to the prices at which the Standard Oil Company would sell oils, gasoline and naphtha from its refineries at Neodesha, Sugar Creek and Corsicana. Not one of any of these letters contained even a suggestion as to prices that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company should sell any of its products.

The State of Texas further introduced in evidence copies of certain letters written by Mr. C. W. Cahoon, Manager of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, from its Dallas office, to Mr. C. P. Ackert, General Manager of the Company, at St. Louis, said letters referring to various matters of detail of business, prices, discounts, rebates, etc., none of which it is believed to have any bearing on the question here under consideration.

The evidence showed that when the Waters-Pierce Oil Company wanted oil shipped from the Corsicana refinery, it was ordered through the Chicago office of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, and that as to oil bought by the company from the Security Oil Company, at Beaumont, it dealt directly with the latter company. The record is wholly silent as to any evidence whatsoever, showing or tending to show any connection between the Security Oil Company at Beaumont, and any Standard Oil Company.

In the 11th paragraph of the court's charge (Record, p. 1148) it is practically asserted that in the light of the above evidence the fact that the Standard Oil Company owned a majority of the stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was enough to establish the existence of a "combination" within the meaning of the Texas Anti-Trust Acts and the jury so found by their verdict rendered in the cause. The only facts upon which it could be contended that the jury deduced their finding that there was an agreement or understanding between the Standard Oil Company and plaintiff in error between the dates named in said charge to fix or regulate the price of oil in Texas are the fact of the ownership by the Standard Oil Company of a majority of the stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and the fact that the books of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company were audited by the Standard Oil Company, and the fact that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company made reports of its business to the Standard Oil Company. We admit that these are facts which it would be proper for a jury to consider in determining whether or not there was such understanding or agreement, if there were any conflict in the evidence as to that point, but we submit that the fact of such stock ownership, such auditing and such reports are not in and of themselves enough to prove such understanding or agreement and that there is no evidence in the record tending to show any such understanding or agreement and that no such understanding or agreement existed is shown by every witness examined by the State of Texas upon this point.

It should be borne in mind that the testimony as to this issue involved only the time from June 1st, 1900, to March 31, 1903. H. C. Pierce, who was tendered as a witness for the State of Texas, testified that upon the organization of plaintiff-in-error, it was agreed between him and the officers of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey that he should control and manage the Waters-Pierce Oil Company as an independent company (Record, p. 442) and that up to the spring of 1904 the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey made no attempt to interfere in any way with his management and control (Record, p. 442), and that there had never been any understanding or agreement between the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey or any one else and the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to fix or regulate the price of oil in Texas. (Record, pp. 500 and 507.) During the time here under consideration, the absolutely uncontradicted evidence shows that the management of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was wholly and entirely under the control of its officers, composed in the main of H. C. Pierce, his brother-in-law, A. M. Finlay, his cousin, C. P. Ackert, his brother-in-law, Steven Johnson and his son, C. A. Pierce, (Record, pp. 497 ff, and p. 927), and each of these witnesses was tendered as a witness for the State of Texas and testified to the same facts, and that the price at which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company sold oil in Texas during the time here under consideration was determined entirely by the managing officers of said company, that is, by the persons above named and that there was no agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company or anyone else with reference to the matter of fixing such prices. (Record, p. 673, 691, 935, 957.)

The case of the Commonwealth ex rel. v. Ponxsutawney

Waterworks Co. (197 Pen. St. 569; 47 Atl. 843), raised a question, practically identical with the proposition here involved. In that case, the attorney-general brought quo warranto against the Water Company and sought to forfeit its charter, alleging that it had lost its existence, having conveyed its properties and franchises to the Lindsey Water Company, and because it had conveyed to and vested in the latter the control, management and supervision of its franchises, business and property. The proof to sustain this charge consisted in the fact that a majority of the stock of the defendant water company had been sold to the Lindsey Water Company, and from this it was sought to be deduced that such acts were the acts of the defendant company and the misconduct alleged, for which the defendant company should be punished. The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, speaking through Brown J., says in answer to this proposition:

> "What a majority of the stockholders did was to sell their stock, as was their right, and through the purchaser it passed into the control of the Lindsey Water Company. But the individual stockholders, as clearly appears from the testimony, sold to an individual who purchased and paid for it with individual money and though such sales may give to the Lindsey Water Company, subsequently acquiring the stock, a controlling interest in the Ponxutawney Water Company, the latter could not have prevented the sales and, not having been a party to them, is not accountable for them or for their effect. The Lindsey Water Company by acquiring a majority of the capital stock of the Ponxsutawney Water Company did not acquire the property and franchises of the latter; the transfer of the majority of the stock was not a transfer of the property of the company; the transfer was of the rights of the stockholders, and the existence of the corporation was in no manner affected by it. It is being continued subject to the supervision of the Commonwealth with the right to go on in the exercise of its privileges and the performance of its duties until by some act of its own, either of omission or commission, the penalty will be forfeiture. No misconduct of the Lindsey Water Company and nothing that one or more of the majority of the stockholders of the defendant water company may have done in disposing of their stock can be charged to it. If it is to be punished, it must be for its own sins and not for those of another. We have no concern on this appeal with what the Lindsey Water Company is alleged to have done. Certainly nothing has been disclosed showing that the property of the appellee has passed to it. If it has undertaken to exercise control over the same and to mortgage what it does not own, the appellee is not affected. All the rights of the latter as they came from the Commonwealth are still secure and will be protected from invasion."

In Gates v. Hooper (90 Texas, 563; 39 S. W. 1079), the Supreme Court of Texas laid down a definition for the term "combination" as used in the Anti-Trust Acts which has ever since been recognized in that State as authoritative and correct. In that case Mr. Justice Demman says:

"In order to constitute a trust within the meaning of the statute there must be a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more. 'Combination,' as here used, means 'union or association.' If there be no 'union or association' by two or more of their 'capital, skill or acts,' there can be no 'combination' and hence no 'trust.' When we consider the purposes for which the 'combination' must be formed, to come within the statute, the essential meaning of the word 'combination' and the fact that a punishment is prescribed for each day that the trust continues in existence, we are led to the conclusion that the union or association of 'capital, skill or acts' denounced is whether the parties in the particular case designed the united co-operation of such agencies which might have been otherwise independent and competing for the accomplishment of one or more such purposes."

In the State v. Continental Tobacco Company (177 Mo., 1; 75 S. W. 737), an information was filed by the attorney-general against the defendant company under the Anti-Combination Statute of Missouri, which prohibited any corporation, partnership or individual from creating or entering into any pool, trust, agreement, combination, etc., to regulate or fix the price of any article of manufacture or to maintain such price, etc. It was sought to punish the defendant, a foreign corporation, authorized to do business in Missouri, by revocation of its permit, etc., because it had purchased the business and property of a number of other corporations, some of them situated in the State of Missouri, and it was charged specifically that, by reason of this fact the defendant corporation was guilty under the above Anti-Combination Statute. The Supreme Court of Missouri, speaking through Judge Fox, held that the purchase by one corporation of the plants, business, and good will of another, if done in good faith, in the extension, conduct and management of its business, was the legitimate exercise of a right. In discussing the term "combination" the court refers directly to the above cited case of Gates v. Hooper with approval, and practically declares that something more is necessary to prove the existence of a combination within the meaning of the statute than the mere fact that one corporation has acquired some part of the property or even all of the property of another corporation.

In this connection it must be remembered that so far as the record goes to show, the evidence is uncontradicted that the Standard Oil Company was not engaged in the business of merchandising oil in Texas, but that so far as any connection which it had with the Waters-Pierce Oil Company is concerned, it was merely and solely a refiner and producer of oil, supplying the latter company with the product which it distributed to its customers. The Standard Oil Company was essentially a manufacturer. The Waters-Pierce Oil Company was as essentially merely a dealer.

We submit that the manufacturer, wholesale dealer and retail dealer occupy the positions of three distinct classes of dealers in the commercial world and that it is a fixed and universal custom for each to confine himself to his own particular line of business and not to encroach upon the province of the other. The fact is almost universally recognized that, commercially speaking at least, it is an unpardonable offense for the manufacturer to infringe upon the business of the wholesale dealer or retail dealer or for the wholesaler to sell at retail. We submit that it cannot be made a violation of law for the manufacturer to agree not to compete with the jobber who wholesales his products or for the wholesaler to agree not to encroach upon the territory of the retailer or compete with him, especially when he is dependent upon the wholesaler for his supplies. This custom is so generally recognized in the business world that it is looked upon as one of the very means by which monopoly in trade is prevented and by which the people are assured of the intelligent activity and experience of the retail merchant as well as of the wholesale merchant whose business makes it necessary that they keep in touch with all the markets and bring to their customers the most desiriable and cheapest goods that can be obtained. This is the very principle upon which the Anti-Trust laws are founded and if the right to contract between the manufacturer and wholesaler and the wholesaler and retailer, each mutually agreeing not to infringe upon the other's line of business is denied, the very principle of the Anti-Trust Statutes is defeated, for this would be one of the most effective methods of stifling competition.

The principle contended for here stands even upon a firmer foundation than that of mere commercial custom. It is a principle expressly recognized in the legislative enactments of the State of Texas. Subdivision 14, of Article 642, of the R. S. of Texas, declares that corporations may be organized for the transaction of any manufacturing or mining business and the purchase and sale of such goods, wares and merchandise used for such business.

Subdivision 24 of the act governs corporations engaging in the retail business; that the same may be formed for the purchase and sale of such goods, wares and merchandise and agricultural farm products.

Subdivision 25, provides for the organization of the wholesaler as a corporation; that such companies may be formed for the purpose of buying and selling goods, wares and merchandise of any description by wholesale or wholesale and retail "provided that no corporation created under this subdivision shall be chartered with a capital stock of less than $20,000.00; and provided further that such wholesale and retail business shall not be conducted apart or in separate establishments."

It is apparent from these laws that the State of Texas has fully recognized the principle above submitted, in that it has provided that no wholesaler shall surreptitiously engage in the retail business, but that if he does so engage public notice shall be given to the whole world by compelling him to maintain his retail business in the same establishment as his wholesale business. This is the only kind of corporation, for whose creation articles 642 and 643 provide, in which such limitation and restriction can be found.

Continuing the idea advanced in the above cited quotation from Gates v. Hooper and in the light of the proposition we have just advanced, we submit that there can be no combination in violation of the Anti-Trust Acts of the State of Texas, where competition is either impossible, (as was held in the case of State v. Compress Co., 95 Texas, 603), or improbable, as must be the logical result from the statutes above noted. We contend that in applying the Anti-Trust laws of the State of Texas to any given state of facts the state must first allege and prove that the status of the parties to the alleged combination was such that they were free agents in the pursuit of their respective businesses and that they were natural competitors.

In the case of Ft. W. & D. C. Ry. Co. v. State (87 S. W. Rep., 236), the Supreme Court of Texas went even further and declared that in order to sustain a case under the Anti-Trust Laws of the state, it was not alone necessary to show the probability of competition but also to show the right of competition.

In this connection also, we cannot avoid raising this question: If the State of Texas, seeks to predicate the charge of combination upon the fact that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company purchased all or the bulk of its supplies from the Standard Oil Company, was it not first of all necessary that the state should allege and prove that it would have been practical and possible for the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to have procured its supplies from some other source than the Standard Oil Company? No presumption in this connection can be indulged in to assist this radical defect and error. This is a penal case and everything that is necessary to support the conviction must be distinctly alleged and proved. No allegation of this kind appears in the petition and there was not only no proof tending to show that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company could have obtained its supplies from other sources, but on the contrary, the evidence of the witnesses offered by the state clearly shows that because of the extensive business in which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was engaged it was practically impossible to procure oil in sufficient quantity and quality from any other source than the Standard Oil Company.

(a.) NOR DOES THE FACT OF SUCH OWNERSHIP OF A PORTION OF THE STOCK OF THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY BY THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF NEW JERSEY WARRANT THE CONCLUSION THAT THE WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY HAD BROUGHT ITS MANAGEMENT AND CONTROL UNDER THE MANAGEMENT AND CONTROL OF THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY.

At the trial of this cause, plaintiff-in-error offered an instruction to the court directly covering the above proposition, which instruction was refused. On the contrary the court charged the jury (paragraph 10 of the court's charge, Record, p. 1147), that if they found that the direction of the affairs of plaintiff-in-error and the affairs of the said Standard Oil Company, were under the same management and control on March 31, 1903, or any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907, and that they were placed under such management or control by their respectively authorized officers under such circumstances that such common management or control caused or tended to create or carry out any restriction in the sales in Texas of such oil as is referred to in said paragraph of the charge or to fix, maintain or increase the price in Texas of such oil or to prevent or lessen in Texas the competition in the sale of such oil, the jury should return a verdict for the state. The above charge was given in face of the fact that there was absolutely no evidence that the direction of the affairs of plaintiff-in-error and said Standard Oil Company was, after the passage of the statute of 1903, brought under the same management or control or was under the same management or control on the 31st of March, 1903, when that statute was passed or on any subsequent day thereafter. Nor was there any evidence that the Standard Oil Company had any power to bring the direction of the affairs of the two corporations under the same control or management until the majority of the shares of plaintiff-in-error were transferred on the books thereof in the name of M. M. Van Beuren some time in the year 1904. Nor was there any evidence that the Standard Oil Company ever exercised any such power either before or after said stock was so transferred. By reason of said charge, the jury found this plaintiff-in-error guilty of the offense of bringing the direction of its affairs under the same management and control as those of the Standard Oil Company, although no evidence was adduced to show that plaintiff-in-error had any part whatsoever therein and although what was done, namely the transfer of the stock as aforesaid, was not done in Texas but wholly outside of the jurisdiction thereof and without in anywise being subject to the control of this plaintiff-in-error. Much of the argument and most of the authorities cited in support of the proposition immediately preceding are equally applicable here, and it does not seem necessary to repeat them or to multiply authorities. It is certainly a new departure in jurisprudence when a court will be permitted to indulge in a presumption on a criminal trial or at least in a cause penal in its nature without any evidence to support that presumption— a presumption which in its every essential is bound to be inimical and prejudicial to the defendant in the cause. If, as a result of such wholly erroneous charge the jury finds a verdict upon which a judgment in the way of a fine is entered, it can hardly be contended that this is not a deprivation of property without due process of law,—a violation of that "law of the land," which inherently guarantees to every person the right to a fair and impartial hearing upon the merits and according to the rules of jurisprudence, established and recognized as a fundamental in our system of law, not the least of which rules is this, that courts must confine their instructions to juries to the record and not indulge in presumptions without evidence to sustain the same.

There can be no question but that it is the right of a party to be protected against a law which violates a constitutional right, whenever by its terms or the manner of its enforcement it is manifest that a decision which denies such protection gives effect to the law, and that such a decision is reviewable in this court. (W. &. W. R. Co. v. Alsbrook, 146 U. S. 279.)

VI.

IN THE ADMISSION OF INCOMPETENT, FRIVOLOUS AND IRRELEVANT EVIDENCE, WHOLLY FOREIGN TO ANY ISSUES IN THE CAUSE, ARBITRARILY ADMITTED AND WITHOUT REGARD FOR RULES OF LAW AND THE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT OF PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR TO A FAIR AND IMPARTIAL TRIAL OF THE ISSUES RAISED, SAID EVIDENCE BEING CALCULATED TO EXCITE, INFLAME AND PREJUDICE THE MINDS OF THE JURY AGAINST PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR, THE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT OF PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR TO A FAIR AND IMPARTIAL TRIAL IS DENIED, AND BY THE JUDGMENT UPON THE VERDICT IN SAID CAUSE PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR IS DEPRIVED OF ITS PROPERTY WITHOUT DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

Against the objection of plaintiff-in-error, the court admitted evidence of the Standard Oil Trust agreement of 1882, in the petition of the State of Texas set forth, which said agreement was made many years before the incorporation of plaintiff-in-error and to which it was admitted plaintiff-in-error never became a party. (Record, p. 398 and 7 ff.) Over objection the court further admitted in evidence the 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th paragraphs of the agreement of counsel called Stipulation No. 1 (Record, pages, 424, 425, 426), setting out that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey owned a majority of the shares of the companies therein mentioned, to-wit: the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, Standard Oil Company of New York, Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, and Continental Oil Company and the Republic Oil Company, although each and every one of such companies therein mentioned did not transact any business in the State of Texas and were in no wise competitors with this plaintiff-in-error, and said evidence was in no way connected with or had any relation to any of the questions involved in the cause. The court also, over objection of plaintiff-in-error, admitted in evidence that plaintiff-in-error had given rebates and discounts to certain dealers (Record, p. 719), and had sold oils at different prices in different localities in Texas, all of which evidence was wholly irrelevant to any issues in the cause and could have no other effect than to inflame and prejudice the minds of the jury against this plaintiff-in-error. The court, also over objection, admitted in evidence the testimony of the witness, C. W. Cahoon, (Record, p. 781) to the effect that at certain points in Texas where there was competition, the defendant sometimes sold oils at less than at points where there was no competition, which said testimony was wholly immaterial to anything at issue in said cause, had no tendency whatever in showing any violation of any of the laws of Texas and could have no other effect than to prejudice the jury. The court, further, and in like manner over objection, admitted in evidence the testimony of said Cahoon to the effect that for about sixty days in the year, 1906, certain brands of oil of grades inferior to that known as "Eupion Oil" had been sold by plaintiff-in-error as "Eupion Oil," (Record, pp. 799, 800) which said evidence was wholly frivolous as well as irrelevant and calculated to excite, inflame and prejudice the minds of the jury against plaintiff-in-error. The court in like manner, over objection, further admitted in evidence the testimony of witness A. W. Clem (Record, p. 740) to the effect that the old Waters-Pierce Company in 1891, (nine years before this plaintiff-in-error was organized and incorporated) cut the prices of oil at Seymour and other places in Texas, and also that the old Waters-Pierce Company in 1894, (six years prior to the organization of this plaintiff-in-error) after it bought out the business of the same witness, advanced the selling price of oil from 9½ cents to 22 cents per gallon (Record, p. 744), all of which testimony did not relate in any way to this plaintiff-in-error or its doings, and was wholly irrelevant and immaterial to any issue involved in the cause, and the effect whereof was clearly to inflame and prejudice the minds of the jury against said plaintiff-in-error.

The court, in like manner, over objection, admitted in evidence the testimony of the witness Royer Campbell (Record, p. 694) to the effect that in 1894, (six years prior to the incorporation of this plaintiff-in-error) when he quit buying from the old Waters-Pierce Company and bought from other persons in San Antonio, the old Waters-Pierce Company immediately cut the price of oil from 16 cents or 17 cents to 8 cents and 10 cents per gallon (Record, p. 697), and also his testimony as to the character and nature of the warfare and competition which the old Waters-Pierce Company carried on with him in 1894, (Record, p. 697, 698) all of which evidence did not relate in any way to this defendant, or to any of its acts and was wholly irrelevant and immaterial to any question in issue and solely calculated to prejudice and inflame the minds of the jury against said plaintiff-in-error.

Over objection, said court also admitted evidence of the incorporation of the Standard Oil Company of Ohio (Record, p. 396), and of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey (Record, p. 1011), and of the incorporation of the old Waters-Pierce Company (Record, p. 1004), which said corporation was dissolved and went out of existence in 1900, as evidenced by the certificate of the Secretary of the State of Missouri, in the record shown (Record, p. 439), all of which evidence was wholly immaterial to any question at issue, and could have no effect but to divert the minds of the jury from the issues involved and to prejudice them against plaintiff-in-error.

We can conceive of no theory of this cause which would justify the admission in evidence of the testimony above mentioned, the highly prejudicial character and tendency of which is plainly apparent. It would seem to be fully as competent to show that a man on trial for murder had been guilty of other distinct offenses, such as swindling, robbery and rape, as to show on the trial of this cause wherein plaintiff-in-error was charged with being a party to agreements and understandings in violation of the Anti-Trust Laws of the State of Texas, that it had deceived and misled its customers and imposed on them by selling them an inferior grade of oil under the name of a superior grade. Knowing full well how extremely unpopular the Standard Oil Company or any corporation of that name was in the State of Texas, it was not only highly improper but it was absolutely prejudicial to the constitutional rights of plaintiff-in-error, to permit any testimony to be given concerning said Standard Oil Company and its acts, with nothing to show that plaintiff-in-error was in any wise connected therewith.

It will doubtless be argued that on a question of the admission or rejection of evidence the trial court and the appellate courts of the state must be deemed to be final judges, and we admit that within certain limitations this is true. But we contend that there are certain fundamental principles and rules governing the admission of evidence, especially in criminal causes or in causes of a penal nature, which are so firmly embedded in our jurisprudence, which are so plainly necessary for the protection of life, liberty and property,which have grown up in response to inherent feelings of right and justice, that they have become as much a part of the "law of the land" as that rule which says that no man shall be condemned without first being heard in his own defense. Of what good is the right of defense in a court of justice as against charges presented, if the trial of the cause is to be made a travesty by submitting to the jury evidence of everything under the sun excepting that which is material to the issue? Surely, it will not be urged that this is that "due process of law" which safeguards the person, which safeguards the citizen, be he person or be it a corporation, from unjust and arbitrary judicial proceedings. It cannot be contended that the limitations of the Federal Constitution in this respect upon the power of the states apply solely to acts of the legislature. It has been held time and again in both the Federal and State courts that the protection extended by the Fourteenth Amendment against the arbitrary exercise of power by the states includes not only legislative acts but those of the executive and judicial departments as well. And it is upon this that we insist that a constitutional right has been violated. We contend not merely that error has been committed, by the admission of immaterial, prejudicial evidence, but that, in such admission the due process of law guaranteed to this plaintiff-in-error and to every citizen of the Republic has been arbitrarily and capriciously denied.

Says Prof. Robinson, in his work on American Jurisprudence, page 238, in speaking of the history of American constitutions:

> "Thus our constitutions, however recent their appearance as written laws, are not the figments of a day, the venturesome experiment of political empiricism, but the natural, inevitable outgrowth of ancient and well comprehended principles, whose truth has been tried and tested by ages of practical experience and demonstrated by the freedom, enlightenment and happiness of the people among whom they have prevailed."

And in discussing the limitations upon the legislative power of the states, he uses the following language, page 257:

> "But in a state whose written constitution is a limitation of pre-existing powers under which all unasserted governmental powers retain their former comprehensiveness and vigor, the acts of legislative bodies may be invalid, although they are not mentioned or referred to in the constitution. Prior to the adoption of the written constitution, the legislative power was not without its limits, established by the nature of the state and those fundamental principles of the social compact which underlie all governmental action, irrespective of constitutional provisions. These unwritten and irremovable limitations are not destroyed, though many of them may be expressed therein and legislative enactments which exceed them are no less invalid than if they violated the words as well as the spirit of the constitution. The constitutions of our individual states being such limitations of pre-existing powers, therefore, do not present the sole test of the invalidity of statutes promulgated by their several legislatures, but, in addition to their written constitutions, there is still in force the unwritten higher law to whose necessary and unchanging principles the enactment of the legislative body must also conform."

And on page 259, he says:

"A legislature cannot enact a law which palpably infringes any of these rights to assert and defend which the state has been established. The sovereignty of the state-although unlimited in measure or degree, exists only for specific purposes which together constitute the welfare and advancement of the people of the state, and any action of its governmental agency which is subversive of these purposes is necessarily beyond their powers. What the state itself could not do without a violation of its highest obligations to its citizens, no institution of the state can lawfully perform. Whenever, therefore, a statute enacted by the legislature is so absurd, unjust or impracticable as to defeat the objects for which the government was organized, the statute is invalid."

This phrase, "due process of law," was carefully discussed under circumstances not essentially different from this cause in the well-considered case, in re Ziebold (23 Fed. Rep., 791). In that cause a writ of habeas corpus was asked of the United States Circuit Court upon the grounds that petitioner was unlawfully deprived of his liberty under an act of the State of Kansas giving power to the county attorney to summons persons and compel them to testify before him in proceedings under the law of Kansas prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor. The question was squarely presented whether a person imprisoned for refusing to appear or testify in proceedings of such character was restrained of his liberty without due process of law within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States. Says the Circuit Court of the United States, speaking through Foster, J.:

"The first matter of inquiry is the meaning of the term due process of law.' If it has no broader meaning than the purposes prescribed by act of the legislature, it is the end of the cause. But such a construction would render the constitutional guarantee mere nonsense; it would then mean, no state shall deprive a person of life, liberty or property unless the state shall choose to do so. It has repeatedly and uniformly been adjudicated that the terms 'due process of law' and 'law of the land' have a broad and comprehensive meaning, and originated in that very bill of right, Magna Charta, and operate as restriction upon each branch of government." (Citing Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land Co., 18 Howard, 272; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 107; ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 346.) * * * * * * * * * * * * The words 'due process of law' must be directed at something deeper than mere forms and rules by which courts administer law; they were evidently intended to guarantee and protect some real and substantial right to life, liberty and property as the ultimate result and probably to prohibit any arbitrary and oppressive proceedings by which the individual is deprived of either."

And in discharging the prisoner, the court concludes by saying:

> "I believe no precedent can be found for the application and use of judicial power in the manner and for the purpose contemplated by this act, and that it is a dangerous innovation on the fixed maxims and rules in the administration of justice, established for the protection of private rights."

In ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 346), the Supreme Court of the United States, in discussing the meaning of the term, "due process of law," says:

> "They have reference to the actions of a political body denominated a state by whatever instruments or in whatever modes that action may be taken. A state acts by its legislative, its executive or its judicial authorities. It can act in no other way. The constitutional provisions therefore must mean that no agency of a state or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are executed shall deny to any person within the jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws; whoever by virtue of a public position under a state government deprives another of property, life or liberty without due process of law, violates * * * * * * * the constitutional inhibition, and as he acts in the name of and for the state and is clothed with the state's power, his act is that of the state. This must be so or the constitutional provision has no meaning."

Mr. Justice Johnson, speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States, in Bank of Columbia v. Okley, (4 Wheaton, 235), says:

"As to the words from Magna Charta, incorporated in the constitution of Maryland, after volumes spoken and written with a view to their exposition, the good sense of mankind has at last settled down to this: that they were intended to secure the individual from the arbitrary exercise of the power of government, unrestrained by the established principles of private rights and distributive justice."

In U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 554, and in Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 527, the foregoing language is expressly approved.

Judge Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations (7th ed., p. 506) says:

"Due process of law in each particular case means such an exertion of the powers of government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs."

In Utah v. Bates (14 Utah, 293; 47 Pac. 78; 43 L. R. A. 33), the question was presented to the Supreme Court of Utah whether a trial for felony by eight jurors did not violate "due process of law" guaranteed by the state constitution or the same guarantee as included in the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. Zane, Chief Justice, in holding the statute which provided for a trial by eight jurors constitutional, and not within the prohibition of the Federal Constitution, says:

" 'Due process of law' is a general expression and is equivalent to 'law of the land.' It permits the deprivation of life, liberty or property according to law, not otherwise. Is shields such rights from arbitrary power. 'Due process of law' in a case like this requires a law describing the offense. The offense must be described in an accusation; the accused must be given his day in court; his trial must proceed according to an established procedure consisting of rules of pleading and practice. The admission of evidence for and against him must be according to established rules and he must be convicted by the judgment of a competent court and the punishment authorized by law. The definition of the offense and the authority for every step in the trial must be found in the law of the land. Nothing essential can emanate from arbitrary power. The rights of the defendant and the duty of the court are equally under the finger of the law."

If the law laid down by the learned court, above quoted, is correct; if the definition and interpretation of due process of law as therein given meets the approval of this court, and is—as we believe it is—correctly expressive of every security of right and justice guaranteed by the Federal Constitution, an examination of the record in this cause and especially of the evidence admitted herein upon which plaintiff-in-error was convicted, cannot fail to convince this court that in the trial of this cause plaintiff-in-error was not given the protection of the law of the land, as designed by the Federal Constitution.

In San Jose Ranch Company v. San Jose Land and Water Company, (126 Calif. 322; 58 Pac. 824), the question was squarely presented to the Supreme Court of California whether it was violation of "due process of law" to deprive defendant of rights under well known principles of pleading and practice, and especially with respect to the admission and rejection of evidence. In that case the discussion narrowed itself down to the meaning of a section of the Code of Civil Procedure of California which provided that no judgment, decision or decree of a lower court shall be reversed because of error, ruling, instruction or defect unless it appear from the record that the same were prejudicial to defendant or plaintiff below, and that a different result would probably have been reached if such error, ruling, instruction or defect had not occurred or existed.

The Court, speaking through Temple, J., says:

"Ordinarily we cannot ascertain or determine from the record whether the appellant has suffered substantial injury or whether a different penal result would have been reached had not some particular error been committed. If the court should erroneously refuse to receive any evidence for a party and should arbitrarily determine all issues against him, this court could not determine from the record whether he would have fared better if the evidence had been admitted. So, if in an ordinary action of law a court were to erroneously deny a jury trial, the record could not disclose that a different result would have been probable if the error had not been committed, although it would plainly enough show that a party had been denied a trial according to the law of the land. A person against whom such a ruling has been made and who has lost his case has been deprived of life, liberty or property, without 'due process of law.' And this amendment, if valid, would prevent a reversal of the cause upon that ground. That it might result in preventing the appellate courts from enforcing the fundamental right to a jury trial is not really of greater moment, perhaps not so much, as the fact that it may prevent this court from enforcing uniformity in the administration of the law. Under this rule any and all trial courts may refuse to be governed by the law of procedure and evidence solemnly enacted by the legislature; and unless we can determine from the record both that the party complaining has suffered substantial injury and that a different result would have been probable if the law of procedure had been followed there could be no reversal. It is the right of every person, before he can be deprived of his property, to have a trial according to law—to have the same character of trial, governed by the same established rules of evidence and procedure as are applied in other cases under similar conditions. 'Due process of law' is law in its regular administration through courts of justice. (Citing 2 Kent Com. 10.)"

In Pennoyer v. Neff (95 U. S. 714; 24 L. ed. 565), Mr. Justice Field says of the words "due process of law" when applied to judicial proceedings:

"They then mean a course of legal proceeding according to those rules and principles which have been established in our system of jurisprudence for the protection and enforcement of private rights."

It can hardly be denied in the face of these authorities that uniformity in the administration of justice is a fundamental right, and every litigant may demand that his case shall be tried so far as practicable by the same fundamental and established rules of procedure and evidence as well as upon the same principles which are applied in other like controversies. This is due process of law—the law of the land. And the conclusion is inevitable that a denial of this right, either through legislative, executive or judicial authorities of a state, is a denial of a fundamental and inherent right, guaranteed to the citizen by the Federal Constitution. Surely, if that right so guaranteed is denied by the court of a state to which the litigant naturally looks for an assertion of that right, nothing else is left to him than to appeal to the Federal Courts for the protection which the Federal Constitution guarantees to him.

VII.

THE FINE IMPOSED IS SO GROSSLY EXCESSIVE AS TO DEPRIVE PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR OF ITS PROPERTY WITHOUT DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

In this cause the verdict of the jury assessed penalties under the Act of 1899, against plaintiff-in-error in the sum of $1,549,500.00 for alleged violations of law for each of the days between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, a total of 1033 days, and at the rate of $1,500.00 per day; and under the Act of 1903, in the sum of $74,400, for alleged violations of said law for each of the days between April, 1903, and April 29, 1907, a total of 1,488 days, and at the rate of $50 per day; making a total of penalties assessed for said alleged violations of law, of $1,623,900, taking into no consideration the Sundays within said periods and other days in which plaintiff-in-error did not or could not have operated its business within the State of Texas.

We do not contend that this excessive fine is within the prohibition of the Federal Constitution against levying excessive fines, but we do contend that whenever a fine is so grossly excessive as to be wholly out of proportion to the offense committed, to be essentially destructive of the property of defendant, it is in violation of such well known and fundamental principles of law as to constitute a violation of the law of the land and deprive defendant of its property without due process of law.

If punishment is inflicted for the purpose of suppressing crime and reforming the offender, we submit that the amount of the penalty in this cause is so large as to destroy plaintiff-in-error in the State of Texas, thus violating the declared purpose of all criminal law, of affording the offender an opportunity to reform and correct its conduct or methods of business. In short, the punishment as imposed, while answering the first definition of the object of all punishment, namely, to suppress crime, instead of carrying out the second equally fundamental purpose, namely, that of reforming the offender, has instead, the effect of destroying the offender. The 20th Paragraph of Magna Charta clearly indicates the purpose of punishment and the extent to which fines may be imposed, and it will not be contended that the principle therein enunciated has ceased to exist in our American law. Under that principle, it was the established policy of the English law not to impose a fine upon an offender to the extent of depriving him of all his goods, but to leave to him the opportunity to reform and to evade his destruction. As bearing upon the question under discussion, we quote the following extract from Cooley on Const. Limitations (7th ed., 471.)

> "It is also a constitutional requirement that excessive bail shall not be required nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted."
> "Within such bounds as may be prescribed by law the question what fine shall be imposed is one addressed to the discretion of the court. But it is a discretion to be judicially exercised and there may be cases in which a punishment, though not beyond any limit fixed by statute is nevertheless so clearly excessive as to be erroneous in law. A fine should have some reference to the party's ability to pay it. By Magna Charta, a freeman > was not to be amerced for a small fault, but according to the degree of the fault; and for a great crime in proportion to the heinousness of it, saving to him his contentment; and after the same manner a merchant, saving to him his merchandise. And a villein was to be amerced after the same manner, saving to him his wainage. The merciful spirit of these provisions addresses itself to the criminal courts of the American States through the provisions of their constitutions."

Now while it may be answered that a foreign corporation which violates the law of the state and thereby forfeits its right to do further business in the state does not technically fall within the rule here announced, we submit that since corporations, foreign as well as domestic, are guaranteed the equal protection of the law, we must look behind the technicality of the creation of the corporation as such to the rights of the individuals who, in final analysis, are the real owners of its property.

In this case we have plaintiff-in-error as the first defendant convicted of a violation of a new and untried law, (the Act of 1903 and, so far as pecuniary penalties are concerned, of the Act of 1899, also). Since it was shown that there were other concerns in the State of Texas competing with plaintiff-in-error as a dealer in oils, if the methods of doing business and the prices charged by plaintiff-in-error for its products were oppressive upon the people of Texas, certainly we should expect to find abundant evidence in the record of its culpable wrong doings. And in such case, we should expect that complaints would have been made and prosecutions instituted long before the institution of this suit.

The history of the past few years is replete with discussions in newspapers, magazines and otherwise, of combines, trusts, pools and monopolies, words which have too often been distorted from their real and true meanings, and have become almost synonymous with all that is evil. While it may be true that there is no such thing as a "good trust," it is certainly not in accord with the spirit of a great, free and enlightened government to sanction the confiscation of private property through the accumulation of penalties against a defendant whose only sin arises from the fact that another corporation held a majority of its stock and furnished it with its manufactured product; and this in view of the further fact that, while this other corporation did so hold a majority of the stock of plaintiff-in-error, it permitted a minority stockholder to keep his own relatives and friends as managing officers and from among them to constitute a majority of its board of directors and at the same time furnished its oil to plaintiff-in-error at a price at which it could and did compete on equal terms with other persons engaged in the same line of business.

There is nothing in the record to show any material, substantial or culpable wrong-doing toward the people of the State of Texas on the part of plaintiff-in-error; nothing to show any "heinousness of the offense" and it is nothing short of confiscation for the State of Texas at this late day to enforce the Anti-Trust Act of 1899 against a foreign corporation except to the extent of forfeiting its permit to do business in the State—to wait seven years and until long after the Act had been repealed and the amount of the penalty for such offenses actually and greatly reduced and then to insist upon a verdict against this plaintiff-in-error for $1,500.00 per day for 1,033 days.

We contend that the action of the court, as one of the departments of the State government, in sanctioning the act of the prosecuting officers of the State of Texas in delaying this prosecution against plaintiff-in-error for nearly seven years and permitting the State to enforce penalties for each day's violation of the laws, including days in which plaintiff-in-error admittedly was and could not have been doing business, is a denial to this plaintiff-in error of the protection guaranteed it under the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Without wishing to be tedious, we nevertheless feel in duty bound to discuss fully the contention here advanced, a contention which at first glance may seem novel, if not, indeed, without merit.

Further on in this argument we shall discuss fully the proposition that the several Anti-Trust Acts of the State of Texas are so vague, indefinite and ambiguous as to fail to define any offense with such certainty as to inform the public in advance of the constituents of the offense. Without wishing to anticipate the argument on that point, we desire to emphasize the proposition that these Anti-Trust Statutes of the State of Texas have never been the subject of judicial consideration upon the point here directly involved—whether a foreign corporation can be subject to penalties because of the holding of its stock by any person or corporation engaged even in a similar line of business, when it is not distinctly and conclusively shown that such holding of stock was in violation of the law of the State where the corporation was created. In this connection it should not be forgotten that the State of Texas has never heretofore attempted to subject a foreign corporation to penalties for violating its Anti-Trust Laws, but has in each and every case confined its efforts to the cancellation of the permit of such corporation, following it usually by an injunction preventing such corporation from further doing business in the State.

If the law under which plaintiff-in-error is being prosecuted had been the subject of judicial construction and interpretation, and its meaning clearly declared, or if the law itself clearly and with certainty defined the acts which constitute an offense a different question would be presented.

It cannot be contended that the Act of 1899 is a statute which clearly defines an offense, and that its meaning is clear of all doubt and that it clearly and unquestionably embraces the particular transactions through and by means of which plaintiff-in-error was organized as a corporation under the laws of the State of Missouri, or its subsequent transactions and relations with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. The fact that this statute did not clearly and satisfactorily express the legislative will is best shown by its repeal by the Act of March 31, 1903, and it is a fair contention that the legislature, it it did not doubt the constitutionality of the Act of 1899 because it was so indefinitely framed and of such doubtful construction that it did not sufficiently and clearly define an offense, did believe that the enormous fines and penalties which could be inflicted under its provisions would bring it in conflict with the constitution of the State; otherwise there is no explanation why the penalties were reduced from a maximum of $5,000.00 per day to a fixed fine of $50.00 per day, for the same offense under both statutes.

In addition to the authorities cited in support of the proposition next immediately following, we make special reference to the reasoning of Mr. Justice Brewer in discussing the right to enforce an uncertain law in the case of Cutting v. Goddard, (183 U. S. loc. cit. 101). After stating a number of supposable cases, the learned Justice says:

> "It may be said that these illustrations are not pertinent because they are of civil actions, whereas this statute makes certain conduct by the stock yards company a criminal offense and simply imposes punishment for such offense; that it is within the competency of the legislature to prescribe the penalties for all offenses, either those existing at common law or those created by statute; and, further, that although the penalties herein imposed may be large, yet obedience to a statute like this can only be secured by large penalties; for otherwise the company, being wealthy and powerful, might defiantly disregard its mandates, trusting to the manifold chances of litigation to prevent any serious loss from disobedience. A penalty of a dollar on a large corporation whose assets amount to millions would not be very deterrent from disobedience. It is doubtless true that the State may impose penalties such as will tend to compel obedience to its mandates by all individuals or corporations; and if extreme and cumulative penalties are imposed only after there has been a final determination of the validity of a statute, the question would be very different from that here presented. But when the legislature in an effort to prevent any inquiry of the validity of a particular statute so burdens any challenge thereof in the courts that the party affected is necessarily constrained to submit rather than take the chances of the penalty imposed then it becomes a serious question whether the party is not deprived of the equal protection of the law."

It is true that in this case the final decision was not made to depend upon the proposition, broadly announced, that a criminal statute of doubtful meaning cannot be enforced at all until after the court shall have construed it and declared its meaning. But the application of the principle in this case clearly presents the question whether the State can delay acting for a long period of time, bring suits against other corporations and expressly therein avoid setting up any claim to recover penalties, and then finally select a particular corporation to inflict upon it cumulative penalties for seven years in the first and only case in which the full meaning of the statute is attempted to be declared and enforced.

As we have already pointed out, the record wholly fails to disclose any evidence that in the formation of the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company there was any understanding or agreement as to the fixing of prices in the sale of oil in Texas, but on the contrary, the uncontradicted evidence upon this point showed that it was understood between Mr. H. C. Pierce and the representatives of the Standard Oil Company that Mr. Pierce, even though the minority stockholder, should be permitted to manage and control the new company without dictation or interference on the part of the Standard Oil Company and that under this agreement Mr. Pierce was actually permitted and did in fact name the board of directors, and at all times had on said board a majority (usually his own relatives) more directly friendly to his interests than to the interests of the Standard Oil Company, and that this same policy was maintained in the selection of managers of the different departments of the business and in the appointment of the company's agents. These facts stand uncontradicted and undisputed.

The facts disclosed by the record show that when the old Waters-Pierce Company was excluded from the State of Texas because of the misconduct of a few of its local agents, the stockholders of said company were confronted with the question as to what was to be done with the valuable property, and especially the valuable business which had been created in the State of Texas by many years of careful management and the investment of large capital. But one course was open in order to conserve this property and maintain its value—to organize a new corporation under practically the same management as that which had made the old company so valuable to its stockholders. The record shows that the Standard Oil Company was chiefly engaged in the business of refining oils, was essentially a manufacturing corporation, and also held the stock of different companies through which its business as a manufacturer was conducted, and also held some stock in certain marketing companies.

It is admitted that the Standard Oil Company under its organization and charter could not have obtained a permit to do business in the State of Texas for more than one purpose. Let us suppose that this company had applied for a permit to transact business in Texas and had only the single purpose of engaging in business as a merchant or dealer in oils in the State. Had it done so, the question would present itself: Would not its own charter have conclusively shown that it could not lawfully do business in the State of Texas and would not this fact have justified, if it did not actually require the Secretary of State to refuse the permit? Had it organized another company and excluded Mr. Pierce, would not this have been attempting to do indirectly what it could not do directly?

Instead of pursuing either of these courses, the Standard Oil Company was contented to let Mr. Pierce organize a new company, to take over the property and business of the former company with the distinct understanding that he should be permitted to dictate its policy and control its business, just as he had managed the property and business of the old company, and while the evidence shows that for a short time there was a disposition on the part of the Standard Oil Company to violate this agreement, it also shows that such effort was soon abandoned.

There is absolutely nothing in the record to show that there was ever any agreement between Mr. Pierce and the Standard Oil Company that the new company should buy all of its supplies from the Standard Oil Company, and at this point, we desire to call special attention again to the fact that the evidence does not show that it would have been possible for Mr. Pierce and those under him, as managers of plaintiff-in-error, to have secured their supplies from any other source than that from which they did actually procure them, namely, from the Standard Oil Company. The Waters-Pierce Oil Company made its wholesale purchases of oil for use in its business from the Standard Oil Company, not because of any agreement or understanding with that company, but because it was good business policy, and nothing more. We, therefore, have a state of facts in which there was no agreement and no understanding to regulate or to fix the price of oils in Texas or to maintain the price when so regulated or fixed, and no agreement to fix or limit the amount or quantity of such oils sold and, therefore, nothing to which Section 1 of the Anti-Trust Law of 1899 could apply.

Does Section 2 of the Act of 1899 apply to the facts as presented in this cause? We here must confess our inability fully to understand just what is meant and intended to be included within Section 2 of the Anti-Trust Act of 1899. If we exclude all unnecessary words, the section referred to may be conveniently divided into four subdivisions and rewritten to read as follows:

"1. A monopoly is any union, combination, consolidadation or affiliation of capital, assets, property, etc., between persons, firms or corporations to regulate, fix or maintain the price of any article of merchandise, etc., or by which it is sought to promote, accomplish, execute or carry out the fixing, regulating or maintaining of prices or whereby such result is reasonably calculated to be produced.

2. A monopoly further includes the aggregation, amalgamation, affiliation, consolidation or incorporation of the capital, assets, property, etc., of one or more firms or corporations.

3. A monopoly may further be created by the purchase, acquisition or control of shares or certificates of stocks or bonds or other corporate property or franchises whether this results from a union or combination between two or more persons, firms or corporations or by the act of a single individual.

4. All corporations or partnerships that have heretofore been or may hereafter be created by the consolidation or amalgamation of the separate capital, assets, properties, etc. of two or more firms or corporations are hereby declared to be a monopoly."

From the first subdivision which we have made of this section of the act it will be seen that its terms are in every way sufficient to denounce even the ordinary partnership, to prohibit the formation of new partnerships and to require the dissolution of all existing partnerships, for, certainly, two individuals who combine their capital and form an ordinary partnership thereby actually exclude themselves from competition with each other and to the extent of their ability, by combining in this manner, do an act that is reasonably calculated to affect, fix, regulate or maintain prices.

The regulation or fixing of prices is reasonably calculated to be effected under the second subdivision as above rewritten by the creation of any ordinary corporation in any line of business whatsoever, and certainly in such business where the incorporators might otherwise become competitors or where an existing co-partnership is incorporated.

By the third subdivision, the control of two or more corporations by a single individual is prohibited, and, if the reading we here give is correct, we must confess ourselves at a loss to understand what this provision means. It will be seen that this follows the attempt to define a monopoly as the result of the combination between two or more persons or corporations. As an amalgamation or consolidation of the affairs of any two or more corporations may be brought under a single management by a single individual, it would seem that this law intends to prohibit the individual from acquiring a sufficient amount of shares of stock, bonds or other corporate property in order to give him control—in other words, the individual is hereby prohibited from buying as much as his money or credit will enable him to buy.

As to just what is meant by acquiring the "bonds" of a corporation in order to give the purchaser a control of it, and as to how the corporation may be controlled by acquiring its property or franchises, we also confess ourselves unable to comprehend. If the property of a corporation is sold the corporation thereby loses its dominion over it, and certainly it will not be contended that the ordinary trading corporation has any franchise at all except the primary franchise to exist. And this primary franchise cannot properly be subject to sale.

By the fourth subdivision, it would seem clear that if two or more firms or corporations had heretofore been consolidated into a single firm or corporation, and that even by authority of law existing at the time of such consolidation, this existing status, originally proper and lawful, is under the terms of the Act declared a monopoly, and its creation an offense against the Act. A better example of an ex post facto law could hardly be found, if our interpretation of this section is correct.

In attempting to analyze Section 2 of the Anti-Trust Act of 1899, we have endeavored fairly to re-state it in comprehensible terms, so far as we are able to understand its provisions; if our analysis is correct, it seems clear that this section embraces practically every act by which any two persons unite their capital, skill or acts in a common enterprise; that the Act denounces the incorporation of an existing firm, a right clearly recognized in law, and forbids a single individual to acquire the stock or property of any competing corporation, no matter what his purpose may be in so purchasing such stock or property.

It may be said that the Legislature did not intend to denounce ordinary business relations arising between men, and that only acts injurious to the public are included in the terms of this section. If such be the contention, we answer that these things are so intermingled with the other provisions in the Act that it is impossible to separate the good from the evil, and that Section 2, when considered together, fails to define any offense with such sufficient certainty that it can be enforced as a penal statute. Certainly the situation which is presented by the record in this case falls more clearly without the express terms of this section than does the act of forming or continuing a partnership when the members might otherwise be competitors with each other. For, as the record shows, we have here the Standard Oil Company, a producing corporation, a foreign corporation admittedly without any legal right to do business in the State of Texas, holding stock in the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, a mere distributing corporation not engaged in the same line of business in Texas, and lawfully admitted under a valid permit.

In this connection, we desire to call particular attention to the case of Gates v. Hooper, (90 Texas, 563; 39 S. W. 1079), in which the Supreme Court of Texas distinctly recognizes the feature of the good will of a business as being the proper subject of contract, and upheld the right of a purchaser of the good-will to exclude the seller under the terms of the contract from entering into competition with him.

There is a strong and striking analogy between that case and the facts which are presented in this, in that the good-will which was an incident to the established business of the old Waters-Pierce Company in Texas was its most valuable asset. That good-will was an indivisible thing, and as the old company was required to give up its business in the state, under the above decision there can be no doubt that it could have sold this good-will and excluded itself under the contract from any future competition with the purchaser thereof. If the company had then been dissolved—as it was—this good-will as an asset of the business, after the claims of creditors had been satisfied, remained as the property of the stockholders, to-wit: of Mr. Pierce and the Standard Oil Company, as tenants in common of a property to which that good-will was an incident. And under the authority of Gates v. Hooper, we submit this proposition: Could not these individual owners of the assets of the defunct Waters-Pierce Company have sold the business in Texas with the good-will attaching thereto, and under a valid contract excluded themselves from entering into any future competition with the purchaser? Since the good-will was an indivisible asset, the conclusion would seem necessarily to follow that the owners thereof had a right to make a similar agreement with respect to the new company, and for the additional reason that one of these owners, strictly speaking, had not the right to enter the State of Texas as a competitor, unless it can be held that it is competent for a state to make it an offense because a foreign corporation will not so adjust its affairs as to qualify it for admission and, after doing this, apply for a permit to do business in the State. It would seem wholly unnecessary to state the proposition that every foreign corporation has a constitutional right to remain out of the State of Texas.

In support of our contention that, in this final analysis, the stockholders of the old Waters-Pierce Company were the owners of its property and had the right to take all necessary steps to maintain and secure its full value to them, we must conclude that the law would be the same with respect to this corporation as it would be of a corporation whose stock was held entirely by separate individuals. This suggestion does not require that we shall claim for the Standard Oil Company, as a foreign corporation, the same right as an individual stockholder—that is, to become the purchaser of the property and continue the business in the State of Texas—but we do contend that the Standard Oil Company had every right of an individual stockholder except one—this right of purchase and continuation of the business of the old Waters-Pierce Company in the state. This, therefore, included the right to join in the dissolution of the old company for the purpose of protecting its property in the State of Texas and the consequent right to make agreements and contracts with respect to the sale of that property, the same as any other stockholder, in order to realize the most therefrom or best preserve its value.

It certainly cannot be contended that the judgment of ouster entered against the old Waters-Pierce Company is to be construed as one of outlawry against the individual stockholders of that company, and a destruction, if not confiscation, of their property.

This claim will not stand analysis upon any other principle than that it is competent for a state to outlaw the stockholders of a corporation, and confiscate their property when it has been found that the corporation has misused its franchise or violated the law of the state. We find nothing in the laws of the State of Texas to sanction such a principle. And we submit that the judgment of ouster entered against the old Waters-Pierce Company in 1900, could have no greater effect than to cancel the permit of that corporation and enjoin it from further doing business in the State of Texas. The individual rights of the stockholders in the concern were not before the court. And since there was nothing in the law which denied to these stockholders their full and complete rights of ownership, which included the right to dissolve the old Waters-Pierce Company as an existing corporation under the laws of the State of Missouri under which it had been originally incorporated, and thereafter to deal with the property as could any other owner or owners of similar property, we must limit the judgment to this, its proper legal effect. That we are not mistaken in our construction of the rights of stockholders of a dissolved corporation might be shown by a multitude of authorities. We content ourselves with reference to only a few, and these in the State of Texas.

In Olsen v. Homestead Land Co. (87 Texas, 371), the Court says:

> "The right which a shareholder in a corporation has by reason of the ownership of shares is a right to participate according to the amount of his stock in the surplus of the profits of the corporation on a division, and, ultimately on its dissolution, in the assets remaining after the payment of its debts."

In Arkansas Harbor Company v. Manning (94 Texas, 563), the court says:

> "A stockholder merely as such has no direct agency in the control of the business of a corporation. He has no direct interest in the property; his right to such property is collateral. But in its last analysis, the stockholders are the beneficial owners of the assets of the corporation."

And in Baldwin v. Johnson (95 Tex., 85), the court says:

> "The pleading and evidence show that the John Henry Shoe Company had been dissolved under the laws of the State in which it was created, and being so dissolved in that State, it was defunct as to every other State; for the State which gave it life had the power to prescribe the manner and means of its dissolution. No debts existed against the corporation and the commissioners appointed > under the laws of Louisiana were merely for the purpose of collecting the assets and distributing them among the stockholders, but the property itself upon the dissolution of the corporation became the property of the stockholders, each one of whom owned an undivided interest in it in the proportion that his stock bore to the whole capital stock."

From the foregoing it will be seen that the courts of the State of Texas clearly recognize the principles for which we contend, and, assuming the right of dissolution, which is shown by the record to have been exercised, we are again confronted with the proposition: Was the action of the stockholders of the old Waters-Pierce Company in forming the new company, the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company, under the circumstances, a violation of the Texas laws? The fact must not be lost sight of that we have here an ownership by tenants-in-common of an existing property in which by far the larger element in the value thereof consisted of the good will incident to a long established and enormous business. We need not argue this element of value in view of the rule now firmly recognized and established that a few horses, wagons, and tanks, distributed over a large territory cannot be taken as the standard by which to determine the value of the entire property. And confronted with this situation, we submit that these stockholders had the right to dispose of their property as they saw fit, to organize a new company and have the property transferred to it just as they would have had the right, had there been two natural persons owning the stock, to have taken over the property themselves and to have continued the business of the old company or to have transferred the property to a corporation with which they had absolutely no connection, and then to have made an agreement with such company not to compete with it, as was held in Gates v. Hooper.

Unless it is held that by Section 2 of the Act of 1899, the Legislature of Texas intended to make it an offense for joint owners, whether as tenants-in-common or partners, to incorporate and transfer their common property to a corporation, or unless it be held that all existing partnerships and corporations were thereby declared illegal, the conclusion must follow that what was done in the formation of the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company, this plaintiff-in-error, was as clearly within the terms of this statute as would be the formation of a new partnership or the continued holding by tenants-in-common of property which had devolved upon them by the death of a natural person or the dissolution of a corporation.

Referring again to the case of Gates v. Hooper, which was the last pronouncement of the Supreme Court of the State of Texas on the subject of trusts and combinations immediately prior to the formation of the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company, we find in that opinion the following discussion of what is meant by the term "combination" as used in the Anti-Trust Acts of that State:

> "In order to constitute a trust within the meaning of the statute, there must be a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more. Combination, as here used, means union or association. If there be no union or association by two or more of their capital, skill or acts, there can be no combination; and hence, no trust. When we consider the purposes for which the combination must be formed, to come within the statute, the essential meaning of the word "combination" and the fact that a punishment is prescribed for each day that the trust continues in existence, we are lead to the conclusion that the union or association of capital, skill or acts denounced is where the parties in the particular case designed the united cooperation of such agencies which might have been otherwise independent and competing for the accomplishment of one or more of such purposes."

Conceding, that notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Pierce and the Standard Oil Company did no new or independent act by which their separate capital was brought together in a common enterprise, but as a matter of fact, were merely tenants-in-common of property cast upon them by the dissolution of the old company, and that, being in effect the inheritors of an existing status, even this did not of itself relieve them from the operation of this statute—conceding all this—are we not justified in insisting that before it can be claimed that there was any combination in violation of the laws of Texas it must must be found that both Mr. Pierce and the Standard Oil Company had the legal right to enter the State of Texas as competitors in a common business? In answer to this, the opinion in Gates v. Hooper (supra) would seem to be conclusive, viz: That before there can be a combination it must be shown that "the parties in the particular case must have designed the united co-operation of such agencies which might have been otherwise independent and competing."

The conclusion from this would seem to be irresistible that in order to hold that the formation of the present Waters-Pierce Oil Company was illegal we must give the laws of the State of Texas an extra-territorial effect and say that they can operate upon a contract made by or with a foreign corporation, which foreign corporation has not the legal right to enter the State and bring its entire business here; and this, too, in view of the settled law that if that foreign corporation should come here, the State has the right to change its laws and exclude it without regard to the question whether the act upon which the exclusion is predicated conforms to the Constitution of the United States or not. Can it be contended that a State may thus penalize a foreign corporation for not coming within its bounds to transact business, when it may exclude it at will, or penalize another person for making a contract with it outside of the State?

The case of the State of Texas v. The Compress Company (95 Texas 603; 69 S. W. 58), will be found in accord with the case of Gates v. Hooper, above referred to, both holding that a combination in violation of law cannot exist where competition is utterly impossible or improbable. And in Ft. W. & D. C. Ry. Co. v. State (87 S. W. 336 Texas), the rule is laid down that there can be no combination in violation of law where one of the parties to the alleged combination has not the legal right to do the alleged forbidden act without the consent of the other.

From these cases we deduce the proposition that in applying the Anti-Trust Laws of the State of Texas to any given state of facts, we must first of all inquire and determine the status of the parties to the alleged combination and must find that they were free agents and natural competitors in some particular line of business in the State of Texas.

In the Compress case, above referred to, the Supreme Court of Texas, held that because competition between compresses was improbable, if not impossible, the law was not violated. In the Railway case, above referred to, the alleged violation of the law consisted of an exclusive contract between the Railway Company and a Sleeping Car Company, and the court held that because sleeping car companies had no legal right to operate their cars on the tracks of railway companies, there could be no combination between them.

We need not undertake to apply these cases to the facts as shown in this record, further than to say that the Supreme Court of Texas holds in each of them that in order to establish a case within the Anti-Trust Laws of the State, it is necessary to show both the right of competition and the probability of competition. Under the record herein, we find the Standard Oil Company has admittedly no right to enter the State of Texas, and we contend further that it is most improbable that the Standard Oil Company would enter the State of Texas even if permitted to do so since under the law it would have no right to remain in the State for any definite period whatsoever.

The case of Ft. W. & D. C. Ry. Co. v. State, above cited, presents another question bearing upon the discussion here involved, namely: Was it not incumbent upon the State of Texas in this case specifically to allege and prove that it would have been practicable and, in a business sense, possible for plaintiff-in-error to have secured its supplies of oil from some other source than the Standard Oil Company? It will be observed that in this case the Supreme Court of Texas waives this question as not being necessary to the decision, but if it must appear that competition is not only possible but probable, in order to sustain the charge of illegality where there is a direct combination, it would seem necessarily to follow that before plaintiff-in-error can be convicted of buying its supplies of oils from the Standard Oil Company it must clearly appear that it could have obtained those supplies from some other source without injury to its business as the same had been uniformly conducted.

It is unnecessary to cite authorities in support of the proposition that nothing is ever presumed in favor of a judgment inflicting penalties, but that all necessary facts to support the conviction must be specifically alleged and proved. No allegation of the character above pointed out is contained in the petition of the State and there is not one item of proof in the record tending even remotely to show that plaintiff-in-error could have obtained its supplies from any other source, and in this connection it must also be remembered that the record wholly fails to show any proof of any agreement between plaintiff-in-error and the Standard Oil Company upon this subject. To sum up, then, we submit that no case could be presented in which the law was more uncertain in its terms or of more doubtful application to a particular state of facts than is presented by the record in this case. And when we take into consideration the further fact that after seven years delay in the institution of this prosecution, and then a denial to this plaintiff-in-error of every protection of the statutes of limitation, which are held to bar every other offense in the State of Texas except that of murder, the conclusion cannot be escaped that plaintiff-in-error has clearly been denied the equal protection of the laws and that the excessive fine imposed against it under the verdict, in the face of all these facts, results clearly in depriving it of its property without due process of law, in violation of its rights under the Federal Constitution.

(a.) IN INCLUDING PENALTIES FOR SUNDAYS IN THE ABSENCE OF PROOF SHOWING THE DOING OF BUSINESS ON SUCH DAYS, PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR IS DENIED DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

As further bearing upon this question of excessive fine and the denial of due process of law to this plaintiff-in-error by reason thereof, we desire to call the attention of the court to the fact that under the instruction of the trial court the jury found against plaintiff-in-error on each of the issues submitted for each of the days between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, being 1033 days, and for each of the days between April 1, 1903, and April 29, 1907, being 1488 days. Since this plaintiff-in-error was convicted of conducting its business as a merchant or dealer in oils, upon the charge that each day upon which it conducted its business constituted a separate offense, and there being no evidence that it conducted its business or made any sales on Sundays or holidays, the court should have so instructed the jury, that they must exclude the same from their computation, and whereas by said verdict it clearly appears that the same were included in their computation, this defendant contends that its property is taken from it without due process of law.

If the Sundays alone are deducted from the 1033 days for which plaintiff-in-error was convicted of violating the Anti-Trust Act of 1899, this would make a difference of 147 days, amounting to a difference in the verdict of the jury of $220,500.-00, and if Sundays only are deducted from the 1488 days for which plaintiff-in-error was convicted of violating the Anti-Trust Act of 1903, it amounts to a difference of 213 days, making a difference of $10,650.00 In other words, if the jury had excluded Sundays only from its computation, the total verdict as assessed against plaintiff-in-error would have been less by $231,150. Argument to sustain this proposition would seem unnecessary, for in the absence of any proof showing that plaintiff-in-error actually did do business on Sundays and in view of the fact that Sunday is dies non in law it seems uncontrovertible that these days ought to have been excluded in computing any penalty to be assessed. The presumption that plaintiff-in-error did not do business on Sundays would seem to be conclusive in the absence of proof to the contrary. Supposing it had been shown that plaintiff-in-error stopped business altogether for a period of one month at a time and of two months at another time and otherwise conducted its business in an irregular way, transacting business part of the time and doing absolutely none at other times, it certainly would not be contended that a verdict against the defendant for the full number of days between May 31, 1900, and April 29, 1907, would have been justified or authorized. In further support of the contention that it must be presumed that plaintiff-in-error did not do business on Sundays, in the absence of proof, we submit the further fact that under the law of Texas it is unlawful to transact business on Sunday and certainly it cannot be presumed that plaintiff-in-error violated the law in order that the verdict of the jury may be sustained upon such presumption.

VIII.

THE TEXAS ANTI-TRUST ACTS OF 1899 AND 1903, ARE SO VAGUE, INDEFINITE, AMBIGUOUS AND UNCERTAIN IN TERMS AS TO FAIL TO DESIGNATE ANY OFFENSE WITH SUCH CERTAINTY AS TO INFORM THE PUBLIC IN ADVANCE OF THE CONSTITUENTS OF THE OFFENSE SOUGHT TO BE DEFINED AND PUNISHED, AND THE PUNISHMENT OF THIS PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR UNDER SAID STATUTES DEPRIVES IT OF ITS PROPERTY WITHOUT DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

Referring first to the Anti-Trust Act of May 25, 1899, it will be seen that the purported definition of a monopoly as contained in the second section of the act has reference to "any union, combination, etc., of capital, etc. between persons, firms, corporations, etc., whereby any one of the purposes or objects mentioned in the act is accomplished or sought to be accomplished or whereby any one or more of said purposes are promoted or attempted to be executed or carried out or whereby the several results described in the act are reasonably calculated to be produced." Section 6 of the same act prescribes that "if two or more persons or corporations who are engaged in buying or selling any article of commerce, manufacture, etc., shall enter into any pool, trust, agreement, etc., to control or limit the trade in any such article or thing they shall be guilty of a conspiracty to defraud."

We contend that section 2 of the Act of 1899 above referred to is not a sufficient definition of an offense either under the general rules as laid down by sections 3, 6 and 9 of the Penal Code of the State of Texas or under the general rules of law applicable to the definition of any and every penal offense as the same is described and forbidden by statute. We refer particularly to that portion of the section which prohibits as a monopoly any union, combination, etc., of capital, etc., between persons, corporations, etc., "whereby the several results described herein are reasonably calculated to be produced."

One of the things prohibited by the first section of the Act is any trust, agreement, etc., to regulate or fix the price of any article of manufacture, etc. It may be conceded that that portion of Section 1, sufficiently defines an offense against the laws but we do not concede that the language "Whereby the several results described herein are reasonably calculated to be produced" refers with certainty to a trust or agreement to regulate or fix the price of any article. The generality of the language is rendered still more obscure when we look to the preceding clause of the sentence in which is found "Whereby any one of the purposes or objects mentioned in this act is accomplished or sought to be accomplished" or "whereby any one or more of said purposes are promoted or attempted to be executed or carried out." In view of these clauses which seem to cover the entire field so far as any combination having for its purpose or object the regulating or fixing of prices is concerned, it is impossible to determine what is meant by the clause, "Whereby the several results described herein are reasonably calculated to be produced."

In the 8th paragraph of the court's charge to the jury, one of the issues submitted was whether there had existed within the period mentioned in the petition a combination or union between plaintiff-in-error and the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, "whereby the price in Texas of such oil will be reasonably calculated to be fixed or regulated." We submit that this construction of the language of the statute is not justifiable. Let it be granted, however, that the expression "Whereby the several results described herein are reasonably calculated to be produced" embraces all means by which the price of an article is reasonably calculated to be regulated or fixed, we are even then not rid of the serious difficulty as to the meaning of the words, "are reasonably calculated to be produced." We must remember that we are dealing here with a penal law and with the definition which it purports to give to an offense, and that under the provisions of the Penal Code of Texas and under the provisions of generally well known and uniformly recognized principles of law, a law which does not designate an offense with such certainty as to apprise the public of what are crimes under the law so that people may avoid the unwitting commission of offenses is inoperative.

This same objection may be made to the law when it is sought to apply the language, "Whereby the several results described herein are reasonably calculated to be produced" to section 6 of the Act of 1899, which forbids any two or more persons engaged in buying or selling any article of commerce to enter any pool or trust to control or limit the trade in any such article or thing. The trial court, however, in paragraph 2 of its charge (Record, p. 1142), informed the jury that any union or combination of its capital, property, etc., by a corporation, with the capital, property, etc., of any other person whereby the trade in any article of manufacture or merchandise in Texas would be reasonably calculated to be controlled or limited was forbidden by the Anti-Trust Act of May, 25, 1899. We submit that unless people can know in advance what is meant by this language it cannot be treated as creating or defining a crime.

Section 6 of the Act of 1899, under consideration, declares it to be a conspiracy to defraud if two or more persons or corporations who are engaged in buying or selling any article of commerce, etc., enter into any pool, trust or agreement, etc.

to control or limit the "trade" in any such article or thing. In order that people may understand what this means, they must of necessity first know what the word "trade" signifies. In the case of Queen Insurancne Co. v. State, (86 Texas, 250; 24 S. W., 397), it was said that the word "trade" is employed in three different senses: first, in that of the business of buying and selling; second, in that of an occupation generally; and third, in that of a mechanical employment, in contra-distinction to agriculture and the liberal arts. Applying this language of the highest court in Texas, we are of necessity left wholly in the dark as to which one of these three meanings of the word "trade" was intended by the said Act. If the word "trade" was intended to signify the business of buying and selling, what then is meant by "controlling" and "limiting" such trade? If we understand the word "control" as equivalent to "monopolize" —and it is only by conjecture that this signification can be attached to it—what meaning shall we then attach to the word "limit?" Each of these words must be supposed to have a meaning of its own. If, then, "control" is synonymous with "monopolize," the word "limit" must mean something else, and what else? Does it relate to the territory within which the trade is conducted? Or does it relate to the amount or quantity of the trade that shall be carried on? This obscurity, we contend, is sufficient to condemn the expression "limit the trade" as being wholly lacking in that precision and certainty necessary in the definition of offenses punishable under penal statutes.

In the case of Augustine v. State, (52 S. W. 77), the question was presented whether a statute making murder, by "mob violence," an offense, sufficiently defines such offense within the rule prescribed by the Texas Penal Code as to the certainty requisite and necessary in stating the elements of a crime. The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals in an elaborate opinion held that the statute did not sufficiently define an offense within the provisions of the Penal Code. These provisions directly laid down in the law of Texas are no more than the concrete and local expression of general rules and principles of law uniformly recognized and approved as a part of the law generally obtaining throughout these United States. They may well be considered as much a part of the "law of the land" as that which prohibits a conviction without trial.

In the case of Queen Insurance Company v. State, (86 Texas, 250), the Supreme Court of Texas, in construing the words, "restriction in trade," contained in the Anti-Trust Act of 1889, strongly intimated, if it did not indeed hold, that these words were insufficient to designate any offense with that certainty necessary to make it punishable.

We repeat that it is a general and uniformly recognized principle of criminal law of this country that, unless the law upon the subject of crime designates the offense with such certainty as to inform the public in advance of that which constitutes the offense, the law is inoperative and void, and any person who is deprived of life, liberty or property under and by virtue of such Act may well complain that his rights under the XIV Amendment to the Federal Constitution are being violated.

The recent case of the M. K. T. Ry. Co. v. State, (100 S. W. 766, Texas), is a direct and valuable authority upon this proposition. In that case, the R. R. Company was prosecuted by an action, civil in form, for violating an act passed in 1905, requiring railroad companies to erect water closets at all stations and imposing a penalty of $100.00 for each week that any railroad company should fail to comply with the statute. The question was fairly presented to the Supreme Court of Texas whether, within the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution that no state shall deprive any person of property without due process of law, the statute in question not having fixed any time with which such water closets should be erected, was a valid penal law. The court held that the statute was not valid and in the course of its opinion said:

> "It is a well established principle of statutory construction that penal statutes must be strictly construed in determining the liability of the person upon whom the penalty is imposed and that the more severe the penalty and the more disastrous the consequence to the person subjected to the provisions of the statute the more rigid will be the construction of its provisions in favor of such persons and against the enforcement of such law (citing Sutherland's Statutory Construction, 322, and Potter's Dwarris, 244). A penal statute such as now before us, must be couched in such explicit terms that the party upon whom it is to operate may with reasonable certainty ascertain what the statute requires to be done and when it must be done; otherwise there would be no opportunity for a person charged with the duty to protect himself by performance of it according to law. (Citing Sutherland's Statutory Construction, 324, Potter's Dwarris, 246-251; Tozier v. U. S. 52 Fed. Rep., 917.) In the case last cited, Judge Brewer said: 'But in order to constitute a crime, the act must be one which the party is able to know in advance whether it is criminal or not. The criminality of an act cannot depend upon whether the jury may think it reasonable or unreasonable.' Looking at this statute in the light of the above rule of construction, we find that it denounces against the railroad company a penalty of $100.00 a week for each county through which it operates its passenger trains and in which it maintains passenger stations for a failure to perform any one of several things which is enjoined upon it by the terms of the Act. The court judicially knows (which is a matter of common knowledge) that the railroad of plaintiff-in-error extends through a large number of counties in which are many stations. The statute provides that the penalties shall be inflicted for each week that the railroad shall fail or refuse or neglect to perform the duty therein prescribed in each county and at each station, and the question arises: When shall the railroad company be liable for the first weeks' penalties? Does the week begin to run from the first day when the law took effect? And if so, how can the railroad company protect itself? Since it would be required within the one week's time, according to that construction, to place in all the counties through which it runs, and at every depot in each county a closet or closets with all the equipments therein prescribed? That this would be practically impossible is evident, and such a requirement would be so oppressive and arbitrary that by no authority could it be held to be "due process of law." If it did not run from the first day upon which the statute took effect, what time did the railroad have in which to comply with the statute before the penalties would be inflicted upon it? There is not a sentence in the law from which the railroad companies of the state could determine the time allowed for the completion of the work required except under the construction that all must have been completed within one week from July 14, 1905; surely such a law if enforced would take from the railroad company its property in the penalties exacted by the statute without due process of law, in violation of the principles of right."

In the case of Tozier v. U. S., (52 Fed. Rep., 917), cited in the above case by the Supreme Court of Texas, the defendant was indicted for having given an undue and unreasonable preference and advantage to one shipper over another in violation of section 2 of the Interstate Commerce Act. The question was presented to the court whether the prohibition against the giving of undue and unreasonable preference and advantage in rates is such a characterization of the element of a crime as to justify the prosecution and conviction of a person charged with violating the law. The Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Brewer, decided that the language was not sufficiently definite to designate the offense, and in reaching this conclusion he said:

"But in order to constitute a crime, the act must be one which the party is able to know in advance whether it is criminal or not. Criminality of an act cannot depend upon whether a jury may think it reasonable or unreasonable. There must be definiteness and certainty."

While the Supreme Court of Texas in the M. K. & T. case predicates its decision upon the proposition that unless a penal law defines a crime with definiteness and certainty it violates the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, yet in the Tozier case, Mr. Justice Brewer goes even further and distinctly recognizes and applies the rule as one of general application in criminal jurisprudence, irrespective of the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment. It is of course immaterial whether the necessity that a definite and certain statement of the constituents of an offense arises from a general principle of criminal law or from the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment, since in either case the rule embodying, as it does, a recognized legal principle as applicable, is binding upon all the courts of the land.

In the case of the L. & N. Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth (Kentucky), (35 S. W. 129), the Railway Company was indicted for violating a statute of Kentucky prohibiting extortion in rates upon the part of railroad companies. The defendant was convicted in the trial court and the case taken on appeal to the Supreme Court of Kentucky, which reversed the judgment below in an elaborate and learned opinion, in the course of which it uses the following language:

> "That this statute leaves uncertain what shall be deemed a 'just and reasonable rate of toll or compensation' cannot be denied; and that different juries might reach different conclusions on the same testimony as to whether or not an offense has been committed must also be conceded. The criminality of the carrier's act, therefore, depends upon the jury's view of the reasonableness of the rate charged. And this latter depends upon many uncertain and complicated elements. That the corporation has fixed a rate which it considers will bring it only a fair return for its investments does not alter the nature of the act. Under this statute it is still a crime, though it cannot be known to be such until after an investigation by a jury, and then only in that particular case, as another jury may take a different view and holding the rate reasonable find the same act not to constitute an offense. There is no standard whatever fixed by the statute or attempted to be fixed by which the carrier may regulate its conduct. And it seems clear to us to be utterly repugnant to our system of laws to punish a person for an act, the criminality of which depends, not on any standard erected by the law, which may be known in advance, but on one erected by a jury; and especially so as that standard must be as variable and uncertain as the view of different juries may suggest, and as to which nothing can be known until after the commission of the crime."

In another portion of the same opinion the Court says:

> "When we look to the other side of the question, we find the contention of the state supported by neither reason nor authority. No case can be found, we believe, where such indefinite legislation has been up-held by any court when a crime is sought to be imputed to the accused.'

The above authority would seem to show conclusively that in the opinion of the Supreme Court of Kentucky definiteness and certainty in the definition of an offense is necessary under the general principles of criminal law. The court, however, went further and held that an attempted definition of an offense, the same not possessing the requisite definiteness and certainty, is distinctly violative of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. This is clearly shown by the following language of the court:

> "If the infliction of penalities prescribed by this statute would not be the taking of property without due process of law, and in violation of both state and federal constitutions, we are not able to comprehend the force of our organic law."

The court quoted the same portion of the opinion of Judge Brewer in the Tozier case that was quoted by the Supreme Court of Texas, in the M. K. & T. case, and also refers to the provisions of the law of the Chinese Penal Code, referred to by Judge Brewer in the Tozier case, which reads as follows:

> "Whoever is guilty of improper conduct and of such as is contrary to the spirit of the laws, though not a breach of any specific part of it, shall be punished at least forty blows, and when the impropriety is of a serious nature with eighty blows."

The above was quoted by Judge Brewer to illustrate the proposition that there is very little difference between the Chinese law and a law which would make it an offense to charge more than a reasonable rate. The illustration is not without force in its application to the case at bar.

If we apply the legal principle, which was recognized and applied in the cases above cited, to the language, "whereby the several results described herein are reasonably calculated to be produced," and also the language, "to limit the trade in any such article or thing," it is apparent that the words convey no definite meaning, and that of necessity it must be left to the jury to affix a meaning to them. As is clearly pointed out by the Supreme Court of Kentucky, different juries might then reach different conclusions upon precisely the same testimony, as to whether an offense had been committed or not within the meaning of such language, and the results must be as variable and uncertain as the views of different juries might suggest.

In this connection the following language used in the opinion in the case of the Queen Insurance Company v. State, above cited, is peculiarly apposite:

> "There is a maxim, that ignorance of the law excuses no one, which is not true as applied to every case. For a man is not guilty of theft who honestly takes property under an honest claim of right, though he may be mistaken as to the law. But it is true in the sense that no one can allege his ignorance of the law, which makes a certain act penal in justification of his commission of that act. If he be held bound to know the law, he should have the means of knowing it, and hence he should not be punished for the infringement of a statute unless it designates, with a fair degree of clearness and precision, the act or omission which is forbidden by it. The offense need not be defined in the logical or legal sense of that word, for general terms may be used which in themselves require to be defined. But the terms employed should be sufficiently definite in their meaning as plainly to designate the very act which is sought to be made punishable by law."

In discussing this same point, Mr. Hughes, in his recent scholarly work on Criminal Law, Sec. 2429, says:

> "The legal maxim 'ignorantia legis neminem excusat' in its application to the law of crimes is subject, as it is sometimes in respect to civil rights, to certain important exceptions. Where the act done is malum in se, or where the law is well settled and plain, the maxim, ignorance of the law excuses no one, in its rigor will be applied, but where the law is not settled, but is obscure, and where the guilty intention being a necessary constituent of the offense is dependent upon the knowledge of the law, this rule, if enforced, would be misapplied."

In Cutter v. State (36 N. J. Law, 125), defendant, a Justice of the Peace, was indicted for extortion in taking fees to which he was not entitled. The defense set up was uncertainty in the language of the statute, and that the defendant had taken the monies innocently and under the belief that he had a right to take them. The court uses the exact language above quoted from Hughes on Criminal Law, and adds:

> "To give the maxim any force in such instances would be to turn it aside from its rational and original purpose, and to convert it into an instrument of injustice."

The same construction is recognized and applied in Rex v. Hall, 3 Car. P. 409 (Eng.), and in State v. Brown, 38 Kan. 390; 16 Pac. 259.

Turning now to the Act of 1903, we contend that the same obscurity is presented here as in the Act of 1899. In the first subdivision of Section 1 of the Anti-Trust Act of March 31, 1903, a trust is declared to result from the combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons "which create, or may tend to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of a business authorized or permitted by the laws of this state (Texas)." This section is the basis of the 9th paragraph of the trial court's charge to the jury (Record, P. 1146), wherein the issue was submitted whether the defendant (plaintiff-in-error) had entered into a combination of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey for the purpose of creating in Texas, or which tended to create in Texas or carry out in Texas, restrictions in the free pursuit in that state of the business of selling oil refined from petroleum.

If we grant for the purpose of argument that the term "restriction in the free pursuit of a business" is sufficiently definite to constitute an offense—which, however, we expressly do not concede—the difficulty remains of attaching any definite meaning to the expression "tending to create restrictions in the free pursuit of a business." The obscurity in the above language is the same as that which we have heretofore discussed in the language of the second section of the Act of 1899, "whereby the several results described herein are reasonably calculated to be produced." Even if it were possible to form an adequate conception of a restriction in the pursuit of a lawful business, it is not possible to do so in respect to what may "tend" to accomplish that result. The only limitation upon "tendencies" is the fertility of the human mind in tracing the association or connection of events. An astute metaphysician, a profound logician, a skilled scientific thinker, all these may well perceive a tendency, which persons of ordinary mental capacity, minds not trained to such a high degree of scientific accuracy in perception and reasoning, would certainly not be so keen to discover, or probably never discover. What shall be the test or criterion by which to determine whether or when one thing "tends" to produce another? We submit that it is hard to imagine a case in which indefiniteness could be more indefinite, uncertainty more uncertain.

We desire further, to call the attention of the court to the fact that, while the trial court failed entirely to make any concrete application of that portion of Section 1 of the Act of 1903, which purports to define a trust as "a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons to create, or which may tend to create, or carry out restrictions in trade," yet it included such purported definition in that portion of its charge in the second paragraph (Record, p. 1143), wherein the court sought to inform the jury what things constitute a trust under the Anti-Trust Act of 1903. Consequently, if the jury considered at all—and we must assume that it did—the abstract definition given by the court of a trust under the Anti-Trust Act of 1903, we must conclude that the jury attached enough importance to the charge given by the court upon the subject, to attempt to apply the same to the facts presented in evidence. This same expression "restriction in trade," was the very expression so emphatically condemned by the Supreme Court of Texas in the case of the Queen Insurance Company v. State, supra, as being wholly insufficient to designate an offense. If, then, the term "restriction in trade," possesses no definite meaning, how much more uncertain, ambiguous and indefinite must be the statement "which may tend to create restrictions in trade."

Section 2 of the Anti-Trust Act of 1903 defines a monopoly as a combination or consolidation of two or more corporations affected by the direction of the affairs of such two or more corporations being in any manner brought under the same management or control for the purpose of producing, or where such common management or control tends to create a trust, as defined in the first section of the Act. In the tenth paragraph of the trial court's charge to the jury (Record, p. 1147), it submitted as an issue the bringing of the affairs of plaintiff-in-error and the affairs of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey under the same management or control under such circumstances that such management or control created or tended to create or carry out restrictions in the sale in Texas of oil, in contravention of the above prohibition.

The argument above submitted, as to the uncertainty and indefiniteness of the words "which tends to create a restriction in trade," applies with equal force to this section, we deem it unnecessary to repeat it. This indefiniteness and uncertainty which we contend characterizes both the Acts of 1899 and 1903, for the alleged violation of which this plaintiff-in-error stands convicted, are of importance enough to demand further discussion than we have hitherto indulged in, even at the risk of becoming tedious.

If the designation "whereby the several results described herein are reasonably calculated to be produced," as the same is used in the Act of 1899, should be applied to offenses generally, its inadequacy as a definition would be recognized at a glance. For example, if after defining the elements of murder, the statute should further conclude by denouncing as an offense anything "whereby murder is reasonably calculated to be produced," there would be no hesitation in pronouncing the so-called definition utterly insufficient to describe a crime. Let it be supposed that such a statute should provide that anything reasonably calculated to produce the crime of murder should constitute an offense. What information would be furnished to the public in respect to what was intended to be forbidden? Would the purchase, loading or carrying of a revolver be reasonably calculated to produce the crime of murder? Would the conversation between two men in which they agreed that a certain individual was such a bad citizen that his assassination would be justifiable be reasonably calculated to produce the crime of murder? Would the use of denunciatory and defamatory language which, if it reached the ears of its object, would doubtless so incense him as to provoke his resentment be reasonably calculated to produce the crime of murder? Would the bearing of personal malice toward an individual be reasonably calculated to produce the crime of murder? If these or any of these things should be deemed reasonably calculated to produce crime, what assurance have we that different men would agree in the conclusion as to the probable result? We might certainly expect as many different verdicts as there would be different juries in respect to these or any of these questions. If it should be left to the discretion of a jury to determine that a person whose words, acts or purposes brought him within any of these hypotheses, according to which conceivably a jury may consider him guilty of that which was reasonably calculated to produce murder, what safety would there be for any man in society? His life or his liberty would ever depend upon what some particular jury might think as constituting a violation of the law, and, in advance of a verdict in his particular case, he would have no means of determining whether what he had regarded as harmless would be considered by the jury as criminal. Surely, in a civilized country whose proudest boast is that it is governed by law and not by men, no person should be condemned as a criminal upon such uncertainties as these.

Let us finally apply the idea we are seeking to emphasize to a supposed case having a direct relation to the statute under consideration. Suppose that two merchants, residing in a town not reached by any railroad, should agree that they were to oppose a proposition for a railroad company to construct its line into and through the town in consideration of the donation of a certain amount of right-of-way and depot grounds in the town, and a certain amount of money. These merchants might honestly think that the building of a railroad through their town would cut off a certain amount of trade by inducing the building of other towns in the vicinity, and, upon this idea alone, base their opposition. Would the combination of their acts in opposition to the building of this railroad line be reasonably calculated to limit the trade in the goods sold by them in their community—would it tend to produce a restriction in trade? A jury might well think that such was the object and such was the effect of the combination, and yet, every intelligent man would stand appalled at the proposition that these merchants had violated any law. If it is to be left to a jury to say what is reasonably calculated to produce a certain result, what remedy will a person, deemed by such a jury to be guilty, have after conviction? The very fact that the matter was in the discretion of the jury would necessarily deprive a convicted person of any redress in an appellate tribunal under a system of jurisprudence under which the findings of juries upon a question of fact are conclusive.

From the foregoing, we contend that a distinct federal question is here involved, namely whether the definitions in the Texas Anti-Trust Acts of 1899 and 1903, for the alleged violation of which this plaintiff-in-error stands convicted, are sufficiently certain to afford that due process of law guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

It does not seem necessary to encumber this argument with any further citation of authorities on what is "due process of law," but it seems advisable to point out at least a few authorities which deal with this point, and which have more or less direct reference to the peculiar question here involved.

In the C. B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Chicago (166 U. S. 226), this court, in discussing the term "due process of law," uses the following language:

> "But a State may not by any of its agencies disregard the prohibitions of the Fourteenth Amendment; its judicial authorities may keep within the letter of the statute prescribing forms of procedure in the courts and give the parties interested the fullest opportunity to be heard, and yet it may be that its final action would be inconsistent with the amendment. In determining what is "due process of law' regard must be had as to substance and not to form."

Inasmuch as the restraint of the Fourteenth Amendment applies as well to the legislative as to the judicial and the executive departments of the government, it is unnecessary either to cite authorities or argue to establish the proposition that everything that may pass under the form of legislative enactment is not always "due process." If it were, then, the restriction placed upon the legislative department is meaningless and valueless. In the Dartmouth College case (4 Wheaton, 518), Mr. Webster gave the following definition of "due process of law," which has often since been quoted with approval:

> "By the 'law of the land' is most clearly intended the general law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry and renders judgment only after trial. The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property and immunities under the protection of the general rules which govern society. Everything which may pass under the form of an enactment is not 'law of the land' "

In Hagar v. Reclamation District (111 U. S. 701), this court observed:

> "It is sufficient to observe here that by 'due process of law' is meant one which, following the forms of law, is appropriate to the case and just to the parties affected. It must be pursued in the ordinary mode prescribed by the law, it must be adapted to the end to be attained; and wherever it is necessary for the protection of the parties it must give them an opportunity to be heard respecting the justice of the judgment sought. The clause in question means, therefore, that there can be no proceeding against life, liberty or property which may result in the deprivation of either without the observance of those general rules established in our system of jurisprudence for the security of private rights."

In the State v. Loomis (115 Mo. 307), the Supreme Court of Missouri declared the constitutional declaration: "That no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without 'due process of law.'" was designed to protect and preserve the existing rights of the citizen against arbitrary legislation as well as against arbitrary executive and judicial acts.

In the case of People v. Gillson, (109 New York, 389), the court speaking through Judge Peckham, now a member of this Court, said, in passing upon the question of "due process of law,"

> "The legislature cannot without reason and arbitrarily infringe upon the liberty or the property rights of any person within the protection of the constitution of this state. And although every legislature may determine what is proper exercise of its police power, its decision is subject to the scrutiny of the courts."

From these decisions, which might be greatly multiplied, it seems manifest that the Fourteenth Amendment, in providing that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law, was not only designed to prevent the state from depriving any person of a trial in some regular form of judicial proceeding, but was also intended to prevent the states from enacting arbitrary, capricious and uncertain laws which would necessarily have the effect of depriving persons of their life, liberty or property. It is true that, under all the authorities, it is necessary that the law shall proceed upon inquiry, shall give the accused the right to be heard in his own defense and shall condemn only after hearing. More than once it has been decided that a personal judgment cannot be rendered without personal service. But of what avail would notice or hearing or trial be, if that of which notice is given has no meaning or, what is equivalent to the same thing, is so uncertain and indefinite that its meaning cannot be ascertained? In the M. K. & T. Ry. Co. case, (100 S. W. 766, Texas), and in the L. & N. Ry. Co. case, (35 S. W. 129, Kentucky), it is expressly decided that a penal statute, to use the language of Judge Brown in the former case:

> "Must be couched in such explicit terms that the parties upon whom it is to operate may with reasonable certainty ascertain what the statute requires to be done and when it must be done, otherwise there would be no opportunity for a person charged with the duty to protect himself by the performance of that according to law."

In each of these cases the statute was condemned as unconstitutional and void, by reason of its conflict with the "due process of law" clause in the Fourteenth Amendment in that it failed to define the thing forbidden with such certainty and definiteness as to inform persons in advance of the constituents of the offenses attempted to be defined. We submit that under all the authorities the above statutes fall within this forbidden class and that thereby this plaintiff-in-error, against whom an enormous fine has been assessed by reason of an alleged violation of these acts, is deprived of its property without "due process of law," contrary to the XIV Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

IX.

THE DENIAL OF ANY PERIOD OF LIMITATION IN BAR OF A SUIT AGAINST PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR TO RECOVER FINES OR PENALTIES OR FORFEIT ITS PERMIT TO DO BUSINESS, IS A DENIAL OF THE EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS AND DEPRIVES PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR OF ITS PROPERTY WITHOUT DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

From the time our forefathers declared in the Declaration of Independence that all men are created equal, if there has been any one principle that has been more sacred to the American citizen than any other, it has been that the laws of the country shall operate with equality and uniformity upon all persons subject thereto and that the laws shall be administered with such fairness and impartiality that all litigants shall be treated alike by the courts. This fundamental principle was expressly embodied in our constitutional law when the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted, but even before that time its recognition had been universal, so much so, in fact, that it had not even been deemed necessary to make express provision for its preservation in the Federal Constitution as originally written.

In answer to the suit of the State of Texas herein, plaintiff-in-error specially pleaded the statute of limitations as found in Article 219, of the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure, and Articles 3354 and 3358 of the Revised Civil Statutes of Texas, being all the statutes of that State in anywise bearing upon the facts presented by the petition of the State. The exceptions of this plaintiff-in-error to the petition of the State of Texas, objecting that the cause of action of the State, if it had any, was barred either under one or all of these statutes, were respectively overruled, thereby denying this plaintiff-in-error the equal protection of the laws, contrary to the provisions of the federal constitution and denying it the "Due Process of Law" guaranteed by the same constitution.

(a.) BAR OF STATUTE OF LIMITATION UNDER ARTICLE 219, TEXAS CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE.

It will be remembered that plaintiff's original petition herein was not filed until the 22nd day of September, 1906, and on the face of plaintiff's pleadings, plaintiff's cause of action, if any it ever had, as to the fines and penalties sought to be recovered, accrued more than two years before the filing of the suit. For this reason it was objected that plaintiff's cause of action, if any it had, was barred by the statute of limitation of two years as prescribed in Article 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of the State of Texas.

In the argument under Section a of Paragraph 2 herein, in support of the proposition that the ex post facto effect of a law cannot be evaded by giving it a civil form, we have already quite fully discussed the proposition that the respective Anti-Trust Acts of 1899 and 1903, for the violation of which this plaintiff-in-error stands convicted, must be treated as penal laws, notwithstanding the civil form of the action by which the State of Texas has sought to enforce the same and punish the violation thereof. In this connection we beg to refer the court to the argument and authorities above cited.

If we are correct in the position that the state's cause of action is criminal in its nature, it logically follows that the limitation applicable is that prescribed by Article 219, of the Code of Criminal Procedure of Texas, which is as follows:

> "For all misdemeanors an indictment or information may be presented within two years from the commission of the offense and not afterward."

Our conclusion here must be correct, unless it be that the offense with which plaintiff-in-error is charged is not a misdemeanor or because the prosecution is not by indictment or information.

It is true that neither of the Anti-Trust Acts above mentioned characterizes the violations thereof as misdemeanors, but since each statute denounces such violations as an offense and prescribes penalties for the wrong done to the public, such offense, under the Texas Penal Code (Article 55) must either be a felony or misdemeanor, a classification well recognized in our general criminal jurisprudence. The article referred to, prescribes that every offense which is punishable by death or by imprisonment in the penitentiary, either absolutely or as an alternative, is a felony, and every other offense is a misdemeanor.

If it be contended that in order to constitute an offense or misdemeanor, it is necessary that it shall be so denominated, we submit that, in view of the express provisions of the Penal Code declaring what offenses constitute felonies and what offenses constitute misdemeanors, it is superfluous in any case to state expressly whether the offense is one or the other. The penalty prescribed must, of necessity, give it the character of one or the other; furthermore, an examination of the Penal Code of the State of Texas, as well as that of other states in the Union, will show that a large majority of offenses therein described are not characterized expressly either as felonies or misdemeanors, but their character is left to be determined entirely by some such statute as the above one quoted from the Texas Penal Code, describing what penalty attaching to an offense shall constitute it a felony and declaring that all others shall be misdemeanors. Occasionally a forbidden thing is called a felony and occasionally a forbidden thing is called a misdemeanor. But in the great majority of instances the elements of the offense are given and the penalties prescribed, without stating what it is, without stating whether it be a felony or misdemeanor. It seems incontrovertible that, whereas the punishment under the Anti-Trust Acts of 1899 and 1903, (certainly in so far as they are possible of application to this plaintiff-in-error under the latter act) consist of pecuniary fines, the offenses therein described of necessity fall within the class of misdemeanors.

If it be objected that Article 219, of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not applicable because the prosecution in this case was neither commenced by indictment or information, we answer that, while technically neither an indictment nor information was presented against this plaintiff-in-error, yet, the proceedings instituted by the Attorney-General of the State of Texas, and the county attorney of Travis County in the District Court of said County against this plaintiff-in-error, constituted an information within the strict legal meaning of that word.

In the case of Klepper v. State, (4 Texas, 242), it was contended that in view of the provisions of the constitution then in force that no person should be holden to answer for any criminal charge but on indictment or information, a prosecution commenced by complaint, sworn before a Justice of the Peace, was unconstitutional and void. The Supreme Court of Texas, disposed of the contention in this language:

> "The word information implies no particular form. It requires nothing more than that the accused shall be informed thereunder of the nature of the offense with which he is charged and put on trial. And this requisition is fully answered by the warrant on which he is brought before the Justice for trial."

This statement of the law is in harmony with the general rule well-recognized, a careful statement of which is found in Cyc. Vol. 22, p. 186:

> "An information is a written accusation of crime preferred by the District Attorney, or other public prosecuting officer without the intervention of a grand jury."

It is pertinent to observe here that unless the word "information" is given the broad signification for which we contend, a prosecution commenced at the present time by a complaint before a Justice of the Peace and by the issuance of a warrant by him, would never be barred by the statute of limitation; and certainly it will not be contended that offenses cognizable before a Justice of the Peace are not subject to limitation, yet the only statute under which such limitation could be asserted in such cases is the one upon which we here rely, namely, Article 219, of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

We wholly fail to appreciate the idea that there is an insurmountable and impenetrable barrier between the Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure and the provisions of the Revised Civil Statutes, whatever may be their nature, so that in no case can the provisions of the criminal law be looked to and applied in actions which are civil in form. We apprehend that our system of jurisprudence is a unit and not a series of isolated things, and that the provisions of the Civil Statutes may be invoked in prosecutions criminal in form and that the provisions of the Penal Code and Code of Criminal Procedure may be invoked in actions civil in form, whenever the nature of the cause of action is criminal. If the provisions of the civil statutes cannot be looked to at all in criminal prosecutions, then there is no way by which a jury may be obtained in criminal cases, since the only provisions covering the selection of juries are to be found in the Civil Statutes. So, again, we find as a general law obtaining in practically every state of the Union that when a defendant in a criminal cause seeks to obtain the testimony of a witness by taking his deposition, he does so by virtue of the Civil Statute prescribing the form and means for taking such deposition.

The contention herein is supported by decisions in the State of Texas, and it would seem unnecessary to go beyond these for authorities.

In the case of Stucksbury v. Swan, (85 Texas, 563), the Supreme Court resorted both to the Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure to determine the law with reference to the propriety of the Court in a civil case charging upon presumptions and the burden of proof.

In the case of the Queen Insurance Company v. State, (86 Texas, 250; 24 S. W. 397), a suit more closely applicable to the facts herein, a civil action was brought against a number of insurance companies to enjoin them from carrying out an agreement with respect to agents' commissions and for the forfeiture of the several defendants' permits to do business in Texas. The gravamen of the complaint of the State in that case was that the alleged agreement among the insurance companies was in violation of the Anti-Trust Act of 1889, which was then in existence. The Supreme Court, however, held that the words, "restrictions in trade," used in the Anti-Trust Act of 1889, did not sufficiently define an offense against the laws, and in determining that question the court quoted and discussed articles 3, 6 and 9 of the general provisions of the Penal Code, together with the decisions of the Court of Criminal Appeals construing those provisions. From this, we have no hesitation in suggesting that if the provisions of the Penal Code are applicable to the Anti-Trust Act of 1889, they are equally applicable to the Anti-Trust Act of 1899.

We have already referred in argument, under a foregoing section, to the recent case of the M. K. & T. Ry. Company v. the State, (100 S. W. Rep., 766), wherein the Supreme Court of Texas had occasion to pass upon an Act of the 29th Legislature of Texas, requiring railroad companies under penalties to provide and keep separate water-closets at each passenger station on their lines of railway. In the course of that decision, the court repeatedly spoke of the statute as a penal statute, and in referring to the necessity of a penal statute defining the forbidden thing with reasonable certainty, the court referred with approbation to the language of Judge Brewer in a Federal Court case, in which he declared that in order to constitute a crime, the act must be one which the party could be able to know in advance whether it was criminal or not. The suit in the M. K. & T. Ry. Co. case was civil in form, for the recovery of penalties against the railroad company, yet the Supreme Court of Texas clearly recognized that the thing charged was a crime, and invoked a well recognized rule of criminal law in deciding the case.

The case of the Commonwealth v. The Equitable Life Assurance Co., (38 S. W. 491), bears closely upon the question under discussion. In that case a suit, civil in form, was instituted by the State of Kentucky against the Insurance Company to recover a fine from the defendant for the violation of the provisions of the Kentucky Statute forbidding rebates of premiums, payable on policies issued by the defendant. After holding that a demurrer filed by the defendant to plaintiff's petition must be sustained, the Supreme Court observed:

> "The only question presented by the demurrer aforesaid is whether said action at the date of its institution was barred by the statute of limitations in such cases made and provided. It is contended by appellant's counsel that the limitations provided by section 2515 of the Kentucky Statutes, which is fixed at five years, applies to actions brought under section 656 of the Kentucky Statutes and in support of his contention he makes a very ingenious argument. On the other hand, it is contended by appellee that the limitation upon actions under this section is fixed by the provisions of section 1138, and expires in one year from the date of their violation. In our opinion, these sections of the Kentucky Statutes are intended to relate to two entirely different causes of actions and are in no sense repugnant to each other, although they both apply to actions to recover penalties. Section 2515, is found in Chapter 80, a chapter devoted entirely to fixing limitations upon all causes of civil actions, while section 1138 is found in chapter 36, which is entirely devoted to the subject of crimes and their punishment. This is certainly a penal action brought to recover a penalty for the violation of a penal statute, which is imposed as a punishment for a public offense; and, in our opinion, the limitation upon the same is one year from the date when said cause of action accrued. Section 2515 was intended to apply to civil actions where damages in the nature of a penalty are annexed. The distinction between these two sections was pointed out by this court in the case of Brown v. Commonwealth, 91 Ky. 480; the judgment of the lower court is affirmed."

It is true, as shown by the case of Boyd v. Randolph, (16 S. W. 133), referred to by the Court, that under the head of "Crimes and Punishments," in the statutes of Kentucky, it is provided that "prosecution for the recovery of a penalty for the violation of any statute or penal law and any action or procedure at the instance of any person to recover any such penalty shall be commenced within one year." This statute evidently applies both to prosecutions by the state to recover penalties for the violation of the penal statutes and also qui tam actions brought by informers, and it is to the latter cause of actions that the latter portion of the provision relating to an action or procedure refers. Since the action in the Equitable Life Assurance Company was not qui tam, but was brought directly by the state, for its sole benefit, it is evident that the court in that cause applied the provisions contained in the criminal statutes for the bringing of prosecutions within one year, to an action civil in form to recover penalties in favor of the state for the violation of a public statute. If we do not misconstrue this case, it is an authority directly upon the point herein presented to the court.

We cannot help observing that if the object of a suit is to recover penalties for a public wrong, to sanction the proposition that the rules of the civil statutes are to apply whenever the action is civil in form, but that the rules of the criminal statutes are alone to apply whenever the action is criminal in form, even though the object in each case is one and the same, and each is designed to punish a violation of the law, is as clear a case as can be conceived, in which the substance is sacrificed to the form. We cannot believe that our courts will countenance any such distinction, when the result would be to produce the most serious inequalities in the administration of justice by virtue of, not what an accused person has done, but by virtue of the method in proceeding against him. We cannot concede that this is that "due process of law" which is guaranteed by the Federal Constitution.

It is true that the Court of Civil Appeals of Texas, in the case of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company v. State, (44 S. W. 936), refused to recognize the rule that in a prosecution in a civil suit to recover penalties for violating the Anti-Trust Laws of 1899, the guilt of the defendant should be established beyond a reasonable doubt. An examination of that case and the facts before the court will show that all that was said by the court on that point must be regarded as dicta since it clearly appears from the decision that that particular question was not properly raised. We wish to state further that it is very probable that the attention of the court was not called to the point that the suit, through civil in form, was based upon a cause of action criminal in its nature. This would seem to be indicated by the following language used by the court in its opinion in the case:

> "This is a civil controversy and, as has been previously said by this court in an opinion in which a number of cases were cited, in no controversy of a civil nature would it be proper for the courts of this state to give such a charge."

The authority referred to by the court was the case of Pace v. The Land and Mortgage Co., (43 S. W. 36), in which the question decided was whether in a case in which it is sought to prove by parol evidence mutual mistake or fraud in a written contract for the purpose of having such written contract changed, the law required proof of that fact to be made beyond a reasonable doubt. It is very probable that in repudiating the doctrine of reasonable doubt as applied to the case before the court, the court had in mind the law, which is so well stated by Judge Sanborn, in the case of U. S. v. Shapleigh, (54 Fed. Rep., 134), as follows:

> "It is now settled by the great current of the authorities in this country that where a criminal act is alleged in a civil suit—in a suit that is civil not in form merely, but in its nature and purpose—proof of the criminal act beyond a reasonable doubt is not required to warrant a verdict or decision in favor of the party who makes the allegation."

The force of the Pace case, above referred to, is further weakened by the fact that Chief Justice Fisher, who wrote the opinion in that case, expressed in a separate opinion in the case of the State v. Waters-Pierce Oil Company, supra, serious doubt as to whether the latter case was a criminal case, in view of the overwhelming weight of authority to the effect that it was. The court of Civil Appeals of Texas, in the Waters-Pierce Oil Company suit, above referred to, further held that a suit, civil in form, brought by the state to recover penalties for violations of the Anti-Trust Act of 1899, was not a criminal case within the meaning of Section 26, Article 5, of the Constitution of Texas, providing that the state shall have no right of appeal in criminal cases. The decision of the Court of Civil Appeals was based upon its construction of Section 8 of Article 5, of the constitution of Texas, defining the jurisdiction of the District Court. We do not question that the court reached the correct conclusion in that case when it held that a suit to recover penalties is not a criminal case within the meaning of the section of the constitution defining the jurisdiction of district courts. There were, probably, however, some expressions in the opinion of the court which were not at all necessary to the proper disposition of the case. The court held that the overwhelming weight of authority seemed to support the proposition that the term term, "criminal case," when other language is not used indicating a restricted meaning, includes every proceeding on behalf of the state for the enforcement of a penalty prescribed for the violation of a statute. The court, however felt constrained, on account of the apparent meaning of the words, "criminal cases," used in defining the jurisdiction of district courts, to hold that the suit to recover penalties for the violation of the statute is not a "criminal case," as that term is used in the constitution of Texas, defining the jurisdiction of the courts. The real question before the court was what is meant by the term, "criminal case" in the constitution, in respect to the question of jurisdiction. The court had in mind that the provisions of the constitution, which were considered in that case, had relation only to the matter of jurisdiction, viewed with respect to the form of proceeding; for the constitution, employing the term, "criminal cases," evidently has reference to the form in which said proceedings are instituted.

Without stopping to draw nice distinctions or split hairs between causes of action of a civil and those of a criminal nature, the design of the Court of Appeals was to make it clear that the district court should have jurisdiction in all criminal cases of the grade of felony prosecuted by indictment and in all suits, civil in form, brought on behalf of the state to recover penalties for forfeitures and escheats. We must proceed upon the assumption that the makers of the constitution were familiar with the universal rule of law that a suit by the state to recover penalties for the violation of a statute is founded upon a cause of action, criminal in its character. If there had been occasion for them to express themselves on the subject, they would have so declared; but for the purposes of their work—for the purpose of defining and limiting the jurisdiction of the courts of the state— there was no occasion for them to make any declaration upon the subject.

It seems apparent that the words, "criminal case," as employed in the Texas Constitution, and as used by the court in the Waters-Pierce Oil Company case, have a somewhat more restricted meaning than is attached to them in most of the cases of actions for the recovery of penalties; as already pointed out, this limited meaning was affixed solely with reference to the question of jurisdiction of inferior courts. It may be that, as a general proposition, the term, "criminal case," indicates merely the form of proceeding. If this is true, then when the courts have spoken of a suit by the state to recover penalties for the violation of a statute as a "criminal case," they have clearly fallen into an inaccuracy.

In the case of Wisconsin v. Pelican Insurance Co. (127 U. S. 265), which we have already discussed, Mr. Justice Gray, doubtless appreciating the confusion (double meaning) resulting from the meaning of the term, "criminal case," refers throughout the decision to the plaintiff's cause of action as one "criminal in its nature." This method of treating the subject relieves it of the embarrassment produced by the ambiguity of the term, "criminal case." In short, if we consider that term as relating to the form of proceeding as distinguished from the cause upon which the proceeding is founded, we get a clearer view of the subject. The distinction drawn is a sound one, because we readily appreciate the distinction between the form in which a case is brought and the cause of action which constitutes the foundation of the suit. It is evident that the attention of the Court of Civil Appeals of Texas was not directed to this distinction when discussing the Waters-Pierce Oil Company case, nor was it necessary that it should be, in the light of the facts which were then before the court and concerning which a decision was sought. It is to be noted in passing that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company case, which went on writ of error to this Court, (177 U. S. 28), was decided by this Court in a brief opinion which did not in any wise touch upon the question here under discussion.

We submit that the value of the decision in the case of the State v. The Waters-Pierce Oil Company, by the Court of Civil Appeals of Texas, as constituting a precedent, must be limited to the one great question which was before the court and which was no doubt correctly decided. Mr. Chief Justice Fisher, in a separate opinion stated that, in view of the overwhelming weight of authority on the subject, he was not prepared at that time to assent to the view that the case was not a criminal case, although he said that he did not intend his statement to be considered as an express dissent from the view of the majority of the court. He evidently had in mind the unbroken line of authorities holding that the fact that the suit for penalties is civil in form, does not change the character of the cause of action, which is criminal in its nature. Like Judge Bradley in the Boyd case, and Judge Sanborn in the Shapleigh case, he looked upon the term, "criminal case" as including that upon which the cause of action itself is founded.

In further argument on this point, we desire to call the attention of the Court to the term, "criminal case" as used in the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which declares that no person shall be compelled in a "criminal case" to be a witness against himself. It is uniformly recognized that the phrase as used here is used in its most comprehensive sense, as indicating not merely the form but the substance of the action. We have already shown that the use of this phrase in the Texas Constitution, in prescribing the jurisdiction of courts, relates to the form of the proceeding only; the same expression used in the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution refers to both form and substance. There is no conflict here with respect to the use of the term. Definite objects were in view. The phrase, as used in the Constitution of Texas, regarded merely the form of the proceeding, since nothing further was necessary in determining the jurisdiction of the different courts of the state; but in the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, in view of the fact that the same injustice would be done the defendant if he should be required to be a witness against himself in a civil proceeding based upon a criminal cause of action that would be inflicted upon him if he should be prosecuted by indictment or information, the phrase was employed in such a sense that it serves as a shield to any person charged with the violation of a penal law, irrespective of the method or form adopted or employed to enforce such law.

That offenses should be subject to the law of limitation is universally recognized in the legislation of every state in the Federal Union. And so important is the protection of limitation that the universal rule appears to be that the defendant accused of an offense is not even required to set up specifically the bar of the statute; in other words, the prosecution for an offense cannot be sucessfully maintained after the lapse of the statutory time for its institution. In this cause, in which under the Anti-Trust Act of May 25, 1899, the penalty for each violation of the Act is any sum not less than $200.00 nor more than $5,000.00 per day, and in which the jury for the alleged violation of the act imposed penalties upon plaintiff-in-error at the rate of $1,500.00 per day for a period of 1033 days, the value of the limitation to this plaintiff-in-error cannot be overestimated. If the State of Texas, in its prosecution under the above act is subject to no limitation, then it can wait any indefinite period of time until penalties have accumulated to such an extent that their enforcement will wipe out every vestige of property owned by any defendant. We have already pointed out that this case, though civil in form, by virtue of the fact that the cause of action upon which it is predicated is criminal in its nature, must be held to come within the meaning of the terms of the statute of limitation prescribed by Article 219, of the Code of Criminal Procedure, above quoted. If it be contended that the terms of that statute do not literally embrace this case, we submit that since in construing the statute of limitation as well as other statutes, the primary rule of construction is to ascertain the legislative intent, there can be no reasonable doubt that Article 219, was intended to apply to this class of cases as well as to cases prosecuted by proceedings distinctly criminal in form. We apprehend that the court will find much less difficulty in bringing this case within the application of the above statute of limitation than was experienced by the courts in deciding that the English Statute of James I., prescribing periods of limitation, applied to and included the action of assumpsit. In referring to the Statute of James I. and its construction by the courts, Mr. Wood, in section 16, of his scholarly work on Limitations observes:

> "Although there is no express mention of the action of assumpsit which was at the period of its enactment the most important of all actions, yet, as it was clear that this omission was unintentional, it was construed as embracing that action by fair intendment, and as coming within the reason of the statutes, and also coming under the head of trespass on the case."

We further apprehend that the court will find less difficulty in bringing this case within the application of Article 219 of the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure than did this court in the cases of ex parte Lange (18 Wallace, 163), wherein it is held that the provision of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States that no person shall be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb includes all criminal cases whether felonies or misdemeanors and whether punishable by death, confinement in the penitentiary or pecuniary fines. The ground upon which this Court based its interpretation of the Fifth Amendment is clearly indicated in the following extract from the opinion in that case:

> "It is very clearly the spirit of the instrument to prevent a second punishment under judicial proceedings for the same crime, so far as the common law gave protection."

If the Court in this case shall look to the spirit of the law as it did in the Lange case, and as it did the English Courts in construing the statute of James I., it would seem that there can be no doubt that even if difficulty should be found in including this case within the literal language of Article 219 of the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure, it must be true that the case falls within the true purpose, intent and spirit of that article. We submit, however, that there can be no reasonable doubt that this case properly comes within the language of the above statute of limitation, when the same is properly interpreted.

If it be insisted that the form of a proceeding is to be held final in determining whether or not the action is subject to the bar of the statute of limitation, it would leave every defendant at the complete mercy of the prosecutor, who, by choosing the form of his action, civil or criminal, makes himself wholly master of the situation. Such a conclusion violates every sense and spirit of fairness and justice, and is contrary to every principle of equality before the law, and of uniform application of the law. Every citizen of this country, however little he may know of the intricacies of the administration of government, however little he may know of the technicalities of law, has a pretty clear conception in his mind of what is meant by the saying "equal rights to all and special privileges to none." That phrase to him sums up his conception of justice fairly and equally administered—not according to the caprice, the good-will or prejudice of some executive officer, but according to recognized and established rules of law under which he feels himself safe in the assurance that whatever he may do to bring himself in contact with the machinery of the law, that machinery will operate against him no differently that it does against another under the same facts and circumstances.

Conceding that a large discretion is left to the legislature in classifying persons and things for the purpose of regulation and control, it is at the same time too clear for controversy that any classification so made must be reasonable and rest upon substantial differences if it would be sustained. Time and time again this tribunal has set the seal of its disapproval and condemnation upon arbitrary distinctions in legislation. Out of the many cases which may be cited in support of this proposition, we refer particularly to the case of the G. C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Ellis (165 U. S. 150), in which this Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Brewer, says:

> "It is apparent that the mere fact of classification is not sufficient to relieve a statute from the reach of the equality clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and that in all cases it must appear not only that a classification has been made, but also that it is one based upon some reasonable ground —some difference which bears a just and proper relation to the attempted classification—and is not a mere arbitrary selection.

Let us suppose two wrongs, each statutory offenses, mala prohibita, and each punishable by a pecuniary fine of, say, $100.00, imposed in the one case at the end of a prosecution criminal in form, and based upon an indictment or information. and imposed in the other case at the end of a prosecution civil in form, to recover penalties for the violation of statute. It is perfectly apparent that the object of each proceeding is precisely the same; each is designed and instituted by the government to punish a public wrong, and each falls within the class of misdemeanors. But one of these proceedings, by reason of its form, is barred in two years, while the other, if it is contended that the statute of limitation does not apply, being an action civil in form, is never barred. Will anyone argue that this is the equal protection of the law of which we so proudly boast? If it is, then the Fourteenth Amendment is a sham and mockery, in that it sacrifices substance to form. But the Fourteenth Amendment is not a mockery for it furnishes a guarantee against just such injustice and inequality as this, and such is the meaning of Chief Justice Fuller when in ex parte converse (137 U. S. 624), he emphatically declared:

> "We repeat, as has so often been said before, that the Fourteenth Amendment undoubtedly forbids any arbitrary deprivation of life, liberty or property, and in the administration of criminal justice, requires that no different or higher punishment shall be imposed on one than is imposed on all for like offenses."

In the supposititious case above, it is seen that the legislature has deemed the pecuniary fine $100.00 as an adequate penalty for the wrong done to the public. To make the injustice and inequality even more glaring, let us suppose that the statute, as it would be competent for the State to enact, should provide that the forbidden act may be punished, either through a civil suit to recover the penalty, or by a criminal prosecution, to inflict the penalty. Will anyone contend that if one person prosecuted in a criminal proceeding for such offense should be entitled to the bar of the statute of limitation of two years, and if the other prosecuted in a proceeding civil in form should not be entitled to the benefit of the same limitation, that there could be a more monstrous and shocking case of the unequal protection of the laws than this? Does it make any difference, either in principle or in substance, if the two offenses are for different acts when the legislature has decided that they are of equal gravity, that the public has been equally wronged, and that the same punishment shall be inflicted in the civil as in the criminal proceeding? The answer would seem obvious unless the guaranty of equal protection is limited solely to form and does not extend to the substance of things.

The operation of inequality in this case is to cause the infliction upon this plaintiff-in-error of a very much higher punishment than is imposed upon other persons for offenses of the same or greater gravity, though the legislature has declared that the same or a higher punishment shall not be inflicted upon the violators of other laws for each offense than is imposed for each offense in this case. In substance and in fact, a person subject to penalties at the rate of say, $200 or $5,000 per day for an unlimited period of time, is liable to much more serious punishment than is another person guilty of violating a law which denounces the same penalty, but who is not subject to prosecution for any time prior to two years before the commencement of the prosecution.

(b.) BAR OF STATUTE OF LIMITATION UNDER ARTICLE 3354, REVISED CIVIL STATUTES OF TEXAS.

Plaintiff-in-error further specifically excepted to the petition in this cause in so far as it was sought thereby to recover fines or penalties by reason of any act or thing alleged to have been done or committed prior to the 22nd day of September, 1904, in alleged violation of the Anti-Trust Act of May 25, 1899, for the reason that since the original petition herein was not filed until the 22nd day of September, 1906, it appears from the face of the pleadings that plaintiff's cause of action, if any it ever had, as to such fines and penalties accrued more than two years before the filing of this suit; and was, therefore, barred by the statute of limitation of two years, as prescribed in Article 3354 of the Revised Civil Statutes of the State of Texas, which this plaintiff-in-error invoked by way of exception to defeat a recovery of such fines and penalties. This exception of plaintiff-in-error was like the former one, overruled by the trial court, and such ruling sustained by the appellate court ,all over the exception and objection of this plaintiff-in-error.

Continuing our argument upon this proposition, that the denial of the application of the statutes of limitation in this case constitutes a denial of the equal protection of the laws, and by reason thereof this plaintiff-in-error is deprived of its property without due process of law, we further point out other statutes of limitation, as provided by the Texas Legislature, in so far as the same seem to have bearing upon the facts in this case.

We contend that if plaintiff's cause of action was not barred by Article 219 of the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure, as urged above, it was barred by this section of the Texas Code, to-wit: Article 3354 of the Revised Civil Statutes of Texas.

Article 3354 of the Revised Civil Statutes of the State of Texas reads as follows:

> "There shall be commenced and prosecuted within two years after the cause of action shall have accrued, and not afterward, all actions or suits in court of the following description:
>
> 1. * * * * * *.
> 2. * * * * * *.
> 3. * * * * * *.
> 4. Actions for debt where the indebtedness is not evidenced by a contract in writing.
> 5. * * * * * *.
> 6. * * * * * *.
> 7. * * * * * *."

The first question to be determined in discussing the proposition under the above quoted statute is whether the suit herein brought by the State can be regarded as an action of debt falling within the meaning and term of the above statute which provides that no action for debt shall be brought save within two years after the accrual thereof, when such indebtedness is not evidenced by a contract in writing.

The authorities upon this subject appear to be perfectly clear.

In the case of Stockwell v. U. S. (13 Wallace, 531), the United States brought an action of debt against Stockwell to recover double the value of certain importations of shingles, alleged to have been illegally made and received and concealed or bought by the defendant with the knowledge that the shingles had been illegally imported into the United States. There was absolutely no contract relation between the government and the defendant, and the amount sought to be recovered was strictly, and in every sense, in the nature of a penalty. The question raised in that case was whether a civil action of debt would lie at the suit of the United States to recover the penalties incurred under the Act of Congress which defendant was charged with violating, and one of the errors assigned in this Court was, that the trial court erred in holding that such an action might be maintained. In refusing to sustain this assignment of error, this Court said:

> "The first error assigned is, that a civil action of debt will not lie at the suit of the United States to recover the forfeitures or penalties incurred under this Act of Congress, and that the court below erred in holding that such an action might be maintained. It is not contended that an action of debt will not lie to recover duties if the defendant be the owner or importer of the goods imported, for it is conceded that, by the act of importing, an obligation to pay the duties is incurred. The obligation springs out of the statutes which impose duties nor is it doubted that when a statute gives to a private person a right to recover a penalty for a violation of law, he may maintain an action of debt, but it is insisted that when the government proceeds for a penalty based on an offense against the law, it must be by indictment or by information. No authority has been adduced in support of this position, and it is believed that none exists. It cannot be that whether an action of debt is maintainable or not depends upon the question: Who is the plaintiff? Debt lies whenever a sum certain is due to the plaintiff, a sum which can be readily reduced to a certainty—a sum requiring no future valuation to settle the amount. It is not necessarily founded upon contract. It is immaterial in what manner the obligation was incurred or by what it is evidenced, if the sum owing is capable of being definitely ascertained. The Act of 1823 fixed the amount of the liability at double the value of the goods received, concealed or purchased, and the only party injured by the illegal acts which subject the proprietors to the liability is the United States. It would seem, therefore, that whether the liability incurred is to be regarded as a penalty, or as liquidated damages for an injury done to the United States, it is a debt, and as such it may be recoverable in a civil action."

In Davidson v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (3 Willson's Cases, p. 216), plaintiff sued to recover a penalty of $500.00 against the defendant for an overcharge on freight. The Court of Civil Appeals, speaking through Judge White, reviewed the authorities on this point and announced the following result:

> "This doctrine establishes that at common law the action to recover a penalty or forfeiture is an action of debt, and the same rules and principles should be held to apply under our liberal system; and though we have abolished the common law forms of action, we may still properly call this an action of debt. We are clearly of the opinion that this is an action of debt, which debt is not evidenced by a contract in writing, and that the statute of limitation of two years is a bar to it."

In Rockwell v. Ohio (11 Ohio, 130), the State sued to recover a penalty from a bank cashier under a statute which prescribed that if such cashier should fail to endorse bills issued by the bank under certain circumstances, he should forfeit and pay a fine of not less than $5.00 nor more than $50.00 for each such bill refused to be endorsed by him, to be recovered before any court having jurisdiction, in the name of the State of Ohio, for the use of the person aggrieved. The action having been brought in the form of an action of debt, the objection was made that debt was not maintainable for a recovery of penalties. In overruling this contention, the Supreme Court of Ohio held that debt was the proper remedy in the case, notwithstanding even that the penalty was uncertain, to the extent that it rested in the discretion of the court to inflict a fine in any sum within the minimum of $5.00 and maximum of $50.00 for each offense.

Many additional authorities might be cited from the books and from the decisions to support the proposition that an action of debt lies for the recovery of statutory penalties, either by an individual or by the State, as the case may be, but such additional authority would seem to be wholly unnecessary in the face of the universal recognition which is accorded this rule.

Having then shown that the cause of action of the State of Texas, if any it has, if it is of a civil nature, properly comes within the statutes above quoted, prescribing the period of two years within which actions for debt shall be commenced and prosecuted when the same do not arise out of contract, the only other question which it seems necessary to discuss is: Is this statute applicable when the State appears as plaintiff?

We recognize the fact that in the State of Texas, as in most other States, the doctrine, well-known at common law, that time does not run against the government, prevails. The question we have to face, however, is: Is this doctrine of unlimited application? That it is not, we think is clear from the following quotation from Section 97 of Buswell on Limitation:

> "The maxim 'nullum tempus occurrit regi' is said to be founded upon the legal fiction that the king is always busied for the public good and, therefore, has no leisure to assert his right within the time limited to his subjects. The sound reason for it, however, rests in the public policy of preserving public rights, revenues and property from injury and loss by the negligence of public officials. And the prerogative right of the King of England in relation to acts of limitation is in fact nothing more than a reservation or exception introduced for the public benefit, and so exists equally in favor of all government. But independently of any doctrine founded upon the notion of prerogative, statutes of limitation are to be applied according to the established rules of construction. Where the government is not expressly or by necessary implication included, it ought to be clear from the nature of the mischiefs to be redressed or the language of the act, that the government was intended to be included in the operation of the statute before a court of law will be authorized so to interpret it. Upon this ground it is held that the general words of a statute should not be taken to include the government or affect its rights unless such construction be indisputable."

This admirable statement of the reason upon which the doctrine is founded does not need any elaboration by way of argument, and it is only necessary that we make application of the reasons therein given to the case hereunder discussion. As shown by the learned writer of the above, the foundation of the doctrine is the preservation of the public rights, revenue and property. It necessarily follows that if a case arises in which the exercise of the sovereignty of the State is necessary, and the State wishes to assert its prerogative in some manner purely governmental, or in which the property of the State is in controversy, or in which an officer of the State has misappropriated the funds or property of the State, and the State wishes to recover judgment for the amount, or in which there has been a trespass committed upon State property, or in which a contract has been made to pay the State money and the State seeks to enforce such contract—in any and all of these cases and cases of like character—there can be no doubt that the statute of limitation does not bar the right of the State to sue.

A number of cases have been decided by the appellate court of Texas in which those courts have held that the State is not barred. But a careful examination of these cases leads us to make the assertion that in every case in Texas in which the decision has been to this effect, the facts showed either that the State was seeking to assert its governmental power in some matter relating to its sovereignty, or was seeking to recover land belonging to it, or was seeking to recover money from some perso.. who had misappropriated its funds or was under contract obligation to pay the State. Not a single case decided in Texas can be found in which it is held that a suit for penalties for violating the law comes within the doctrine that time does not run against the State.

Referring again to the foundation upon which the doctrine rests, as announced by Mr. Buswell, it seems manifest that a suit to recover penalties for violating a statute is not embraced within the reason. When we consider the further statement above quoted that the State is not to be held included within such statutes of limitation unless it is expressly mentioned, or the mischiefs to be remedied are of such a nature that the State must necessarily be included, additional light is thrown upon the subject.

Undoubtedly, when the only interests which the State possesses is to enforce its penal laws in the light of the fact that all crimes against the State are subject to the bar of limitation except the one single crime of murder, a suit to recover penalties, though civil in form for a cause of action criminal in its character, seems clearly within the mischiefs to be remedied within the statute of limitation. This statute seems to be so entirely clear in its application to the case at bar, as not to require amplification of statement. Why the hundreds of offenses defined in the penal code, as well as a large number of offenses since created by statute, should be barred by limitation, and yet the one single offense with which this plaintiff-in-error stands charged should not be, is beyond comprehension. That offense rests upon the same basis as all other offenses, an alleged wrong done to the public, and the same reason applies to this as to all other cases. As evidence that the spirit of the maxim that time does not run against the king does not embrace penal actions, we refer to the fact that as long ago as the 31st year of Elizabeth the Parliament of Great Britain, from whose system of law we have borrowed this maxim, enacted a distinct statute, making all penal actions subject to the statute of limitation, ordinary actions being barred within two years and a qui tam action being barred within one year. A copy of this statute will be found in a note to the case of State v. Moore (19 Meigs. [Tenn.] 476). Certainly, if England three hundred and fifty years ago definitely recognized that this maxim has no application to penal actions, there can be no justification in law or in reason for the courts of this country to apply the maxim to such actions in this present day.

(c.) BAR OF LIMITATION UNDER ARTICLE 3358.

The above article reads as follows:

> "Every action, other than for the recovery of real estate, for which no limitation is otherwise prescribed, shall be brought within four years next after the right to bring the same shall have accrued, and not afterward."

As before stated, plaintiff's petition was filed September 22,

1906. To said petition plaintiff-in-error specially excepted and pleaded the above statute if the foregoing statute, to-wit: Article 3354 of the Revised Civil Statutes of Texas, and Article 219 of the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure, should be held not to apply; which said exception of plaintiff-in-error was overruled, over its exception and objection.

In spite of the fact that by the above section a period of limitation is distinctly provided for every cause of action for which some special period of limitation is not otherwise expressly provided, the benefit of this statute was denied plaintiff-in-error. It is not necessary to repeat the argument already made with reference to the bar of limitation being applicable to suits of this sort when brought by the State. All that we have already said upon this point applies with full force to the proposition herein submitted. As indicating the spirit in which the courts apply such statutes, the following quotation from the case of Buswell v. Robinson (33 N. J. Law, 273), is so strikingly in point that we include it herein as specially bearing upon our contention that the statute above quoted applies, even if no other applies. Says the Supreme Court of New Jersey, in the Buswell case:

> "Courts are very reluctant to hold a person may be subjected to a suit for a penalty for an indefinite time. Such indefinite liability is unjust and should not be so held unless the imperfections or the deficiencies of the law imperatively require it."

The broadest and most liberal construction has been given to the above Act by the courts of Texas in numerous decisions. So it has been held to apply to an action for the recision of a contract consummated by fraud (Cooper v. Lee, 75 Texas, 114; 12 S. W. 483; Evan v. Goggan, 23 S.W. 854), to a suit brought to correct a misdescription in a decree of partition (Tevis v. Armstrong, 71 Texas, 59; 9 S. W. 134), to a suit to avoid a deed for fraud, (Ry. Co. v. Titterington 84 Texas, 218; 19 S. W. 472), and in Blount v. Bleker, 35 S. W. 863 (Tex.), it was held the provisions of this article were applicable to equitable as well as legal actions for which no other provision had been made.

We submit that in view of the fact that the obvious intent of the Legislature of Texas is to provide a period of limitation for every cause of action, civil or criminal, as is indicated by the above section cited with respect to criminal actions and by Article 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which provides for the limitation in bar of criminal actions in all cases except murder, that in denying this plaintiff-in-error the application of either one or the other of such statutes of limitation—in holding that no limitation exists with respect to suits of this character—but that the same may be brought at any time, even long after the defendant has ceased to do business and has perhaps entirely removed from the jurisdiction of the State (for such must be the logical result of such interpretation) this plaintiff-in-error is singled out from among all other alleged offenders and thereby is denied the equal protection of the laws.

X.

THE APPOINTMENT OF A RECEIVER AND TRANSFER TO HIM OF THE PROPERTY OF PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR PENDING PROCEEDINGS BY WAY OF APPEAL WAS WHOLLY WITHOUT AUTHORITY AND DEPRIVED PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR OF ITS PROPERTY WITHOUT DUE PROCESS OF LAW AND DENIED IT THE EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS.

Judgment in the trial court in this cause was rendered in favor of plaintiff, the State of Texas, on June 1st, 1907. On the same day, to-wit, June 1st, 1907, the State of Texas filed in the District Court of Travis County, Texas, an application for a receiver, which said application recited the rendition of the aforesaid judgment and alleged that a suit was then pending in the State of Missouri wherein said State of Missouri was plaintiff and this plaintiff-in-error defendant, for the purpose of forfeiting the charter of this plaintiff-in-error, and further alleging that the penalties to be recovered under the aforesaid judgment could not be collected outside the State of Texas, and that the property of plaintiff-in-error situate in said State of Texas was inadequate to pay the judgment, and that the great bulk of said property was of a personal nature and movable and capable of being carried beyond the limits of the State of Texas, and if so removed said State of Texas would have no means of collecting the aforesaid judgment. Said application further alleged that under and by virtue of an act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, approved April 11, 1907, said State of Texas had a lien upon all of said property of plaintiff-in-error to secure payment of the aforesaid judgment; that by virtue of said judgment plaintiff-in-error had no further right to do business in the State of Texas, and that to preserve and protect the rights of the State of Texas the business of plaintiff-in-error must be conducted and carried on, at least temporarily, and be kept a going concern in said State; wherefore it was prayed in said application that the court appoint a receiver to take charge of all the property and assets belonging to said plaintiff-in-error and situate within the State of Texas and enjoin the removal of any portion of said property or assets from the State of Texas. In accordance with the prayer in the aforesaid application, the Court, on June 1, 1907, made an order granting a temporary injunction as prayed for.

To the above application plaintiff-in-error made answer filed June 10, 1907, and on the same date said Court made an order making the aforesaid temporary injunction permanent, and on June 13 appointed a receiver according to the prayer in the aforesaid application.

Plaintiff-in-error in the main case duly filed its motion for a new trial which said motion was by the Court overruled and refused by order and judgment entered on the 7th day of June, 1907, to which said plaintiff-in-error then and there, in open court, duly excepted and gave notice of appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas. And on the 7th day of June, 1907, plaintiff-in-error duly filed its appeal bond for the purpose of superseding any proceedings under the aforesaid judgment, said bond being duly executed by plaintiff-in-error, as principal and the American Surety Company of New York, as surety. Objections being raised to said appeal bond because of the fact that said surety was a foreign corporation, plaintiff-in-error, on the 15th day of June, 1907, tendered another supersedeas appeal bond on the main judgment, with the American Surety Company of New York and John H. Kirby, a citizen and resident of Texas, as sureties thereon.

When the above appeal bond filed by plaintiff-in-error was accepted and approved on June 15, 1907, superseding thereby the judgment recovered against plaintiff-in-error by the State of Texas on June 1, 1907, we submit that the appointment of the receiver by said court and all orders and proceedings in connnection therewith, were thereby vacated and, pending said appeal, set aside.

We further submit that it is the settled practice in the State of Texas as well as other States to look to the petition alone for all the necessary facts upon which to predicate a judgment, and that where the judgment goes beyond the petition and undertakes to decide issues which are not raised, and to make orders upon matters not alleged, the action of the court is not merely irregular, but is wholly void as being in excess of the jurisdiction of the court in the particular case.

No prayer for the appointment of a receiver appearing in the petition of the State of Texas in the original suit, we contend that, in entertaining the aforesaid application of the State of Texas and appointing a receiver thereon, the court acted wholly without its jurisdiction.

As is said by the well-known Texas authority, Judge Townes, in his work on Pleading (pp. 23 and 24), in defining the word "jurisdiction," in which he speaks of it as "potential" and "active."

> "The active jurisdiction cannot go beyond the potential and it may be much less extensive. Thus, each district court in the State of Texas has potential jurisdiction over all questions involving titles to land situated in the State, but no one of these courts can, of its own motion, deter> mine any abstract proposition of law affecting any such title. Its power lies in abeyance waiting action by some party in interest by which he shall invoke its exercise in his behalf. But upon such application by him, this power goes into actual operation as to the particular tract of land subject to it. If, however, the party should own another tract of land which was also being trespassed upon in the same manner as the first, invoking that jurisdiction as to the first, would in nowise affect the second; as to it, potential jurisdiction would continue to lie dormant until by some appropriate means the exercise of this power should be requested as to it."

The above rule announced is so generally recognized and accepted that citation of authorities thereon would seem superfluous, and we hardly think that it will be questioned that when the judgment in a cause goes beyond the petition and undertakes to decide issues not raised therein, plaintiff or defendant in such cause may well complain, if he is affected by such judgment, that he is deprived of his property without due process of law.

The amended petition in this cause, on which the State of Texas went to trial, was filed April 29, 1907, eighteen days after the passage of the Act of April 11, 1907, under and by virtue of which the State of Texas claims its lien and the right to have a receiver appointed. Reference to that petition will show that in no portion of it is any mention made of a lien, and the sole prayer of relief is limited to the judgment rendered in the cause, to-wit: cancelling the permit issued to this plaintiff-in-error on the 31st day of May, 1900, and an injunction restraining it from doing business in the State of Texas, and that said State have judgment for the sum of $5,239,000.00 penalties. The application for the appointment of a receiver was filed in the form of a strictly personal action after the trial of said cause and recites the judgment which was rendered against this plaintiff-in-error. We submit that under Article 1337 of the Revised Statutes of Texas which provides that "only one final judgment shall be rendered in any case except where it is otherwise specially provided by law," that it was not permissible for the State of Texas in the same cause, after failing to set up its claim to a lien upon the property of plaintiff-in-error in the petition on which it went to trial, by a new motion filed after the verdict and judgment therein, to inject this new issue into the case.

If it should be contended that when the State did not see fit to set up its lien upon the property of plaintiff-in-error it did not thereby waive its statutory lien, but would have the right in some subsequent proceeding based upon the judgment to assert such lien and ask for its foreclosure, we submit in answer to such contention that, under the settled rules of practice in the State of Texas and everywhere, it would be necessary for the State to file a new suit by petition answering all the requirements of law and brought to some subsequent regular term of court with a proper prayer or citation for foreclosure of the lien and with a proper description of the property so that the judgment affecting the same might be effective.

The cases of May v. Taylor (22 Tex. 348); Bledsoe v. Wills (22 Tex. 650); and McConkey v. Henderson (24 Tex. 212), conclusively settle the proposition that it is beyond the power of the court, even where a lien is set up in the pleading and the verdict of the jury does not find in favor of the lien, to cure the omission in the judgment. We submit that these decisions are conclusive in supporting our contention. For, if the verdict of a jury omitting a finding in favor of a lien expressly set up in the pleading cannot be cured by the court in its judgment, the conclusion seems irresistible that much less has the court such power when no mention of the lien is found in the pleading and equally none in the verdict of the jury.

What is then the nature and purpose of appointing a receiver in any case? Mr. Pomeroy, in his work on Equity Jurisprudence, Sec. 1330, and again in his more recent work, Equitable Remedies, Sec. 62, declares:

> "A receiver is a person standing indifferent between the parties appointed by the court as a quasi-officer or representative of the court, to hold, manage, control and deal with the property which is the subject matter of or involved in the controversy under the direction of the court during the continuance of the litigation."

In Sec. 118 of his work on Equitable Remedies, he further declares:

> "Unless authorized by statute, there is no such thing as an action being distinctively for the mere appointment of a receiver; to justify the appointment, it is essential that some proper final relief in equity be asked for in the bill which will justify the court in proceeding with the case."

Relying upon the above from this learned and acknowledged authority on Equity Jurisprudence, we submit that the appointment of a receiver is a provisional or ancillary remedy in aid of a pending suit; and, therefore, that in this case if the State of Texas thought that the appointment of a receiver was necessary to protect its claim to a lien upon the property of plaintiff-in-error, after it had failed to set up such lien and have the same adjudicated in the original suit, it was necessary to institute a new suit asking for such appropriate final relief with respect to the property, and make the application for a receiver as an incident to such suit.

Upon this point Mr. Pomeroy, in his Equitable Remedies, Sec. 71, declares:

> "The appointment of a receiver being made merely to assist in the ultimate disposition of the property in controversy, a receiver will not ordinarily be appointed unless there is a suit pending concerning the subject matter in regard to which the receiver is sought."

The only exceptions mentioned in connection with this proposition are the usual ones of receivers appointed for the estates of lunatics and infants, as authorized by the various guardianship statutes.

The instances mentioned in Sections 106 and 110 of Pomeroy's Equitable Remedies, where a receiver may be appointed to assist in the collection of a judgment will, in every case, be found to rest upon the general rule that, before a judgment creditor is permitted to resort to this form of supplemental proceeding, he must have had execution issued on his judgment and the same returned unsatisfied which, of course, presupposes the right to an execution and the failure to collect the judgment through this legal process, so that these instances will furnish no support to the contention that the legislature intended to sanction the appointment of a receiver after judgment in such cases as this, and we submit that the sole basis for any such claim rests upon the lien which is attempted to be created by Section 1 of the Act of April 11, 1907. Since there is nothing in that statute expressly providing that a receiver may be appointed after judgment has been rendered in the case without any mention of the lien being made in the petition upon which the State goes to trial, we submit that it is a clear violation of law and of the express provisions of Article 1337 of the Revised Statutes of Texas, above referred to, to permit the application for the appointment of a receiver to be made in the same case.

It will hardly be contended that the paper filed by the State and entitled "Application for a Receiver" can be dignified by the appellation "Petition." An examination of that motion or application will disclose that it is lacking in nearly all of the essentials of a petition; that it was not intended as a new or independent suit, and that it wholly fails to contain any prayer for final relief. The whole theory upon which the paper is based is the idea that a receiver is desired as a means of aiding in the collection of a judgment, supplemented in the fourth paragraph thereof with the idea that the interests of the State require that the business of plaintiff-in-error should be conducted and carried on and kept as a going concern in the State of Texas—a most novel suggestion, unless construed to mean that the value of the property as a means of satisfying the judgment would be enhanced by selling it as a going concern.

Since the State of Texas was not entitled to the appointment of a receiver to aid in the collection of its judgment until after an execution thereon had been issued and returned unsatisfied, independent of the lien claimed upon the property of plaintiff-in-error under the Act of April 11, 1907, it would necessarily seem to follow that, treating the application as a supplementary proceeding, it was wholly insufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the court because it was filed on the same day that judgment was rendered and before any execution could issue upon the judgment, to say nothing of the same being returned unsatisfied. Since the paper so filed was insufficiently based upon any claim of a lien on the property of plaintiff-in-error and in that it lacked the essentials of an independent suit and asked and sought for no final relief, it must necessarily follow that it was insufficient to invoke the jurisdiction of the court. We, therefore, submit that all orders made by the court based upon this application were made wholly without jurisdiction and were wholly void. And since, by reason of such orders, the property of this plaintiff-in-error was taken from it and placed in the hands of a receiver so appointed, we submit that the same constituted a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, and that it deprived plaintiff-in-error of its property without due process of law.

As above pointed out, notice of appeal was entered on June 7, 1907, and the right of this plaintiff-in-error to file its supersedeas bond under the law of Texas could not expire, within the shortest period, until June 27, 1907. We submit that when the court refused to postpone action upon the application for a receiver until plaintiff-in-error should have a reasonable time in which to file its supersedeas bond, it was an abuse of the discretion of the court to appoint such receiver before such time had elapsed for filing an appeal bond under the law. It will not be contended that the appointment of a receiver is, as a general rule, anything other than discretionary. This discretion is not an arbitrary or absolute one, not the result of caprice or prejudice, but is to be a sound and judicial discretion. It should take into account all the circumstances of a cause and should be exercised for the sole purpose of promoting the ends of justice and protecting the rights of all the parties interested in the controversy and in the subject matter, and should be invariably based upon the fact that there is no other adequate remedy or means of accomplishing the desired objects of the judicial proceeding.

It may, perhaps, be contended that the appointment of a receiver in this case was an appropriate means of preventing plaintiff-in-error from continuing to carry on its business, and to this we reply that the State of Texas did not have the power to prevent plaintiff-in-error from using its property in carrying on an interstate business, and that the judgment in this cause rendered did not and could not operate as a forfeiture or confiscation of the property of plaintiff-in-error as contraband.

In whatever light this application for the appointment of a receiver may be viewed, it seems impossible to escape the conclusion that the supersedeas bond in appeal in the main cause was duly filed by this plaintiff-in-error and accepted by the court; it had the effect of superseding all orders made in connection with that suit or having reference to any property involved therein, and such orders should have been immediately vacated. The effect of a supersedeas bond upon a judgment of dissolution as against a corporation is fully discussed in the case of Ry. Co. v. Jackson (85 Texas, 605), to which we invite special attention.

In concluding the argument upon the proposition that the filing and acceptance of the appeal bond in the main case superseded all further action in that case until the appeal therein was decided, we desire to call the particular attention of the court to the instructive opinion of Mr. Chief Justice Beatty in the case of Havemeyer v. Superior Court (84 Calif. 327; 24 Pac. 121, l. c. 134, 135). In that case a judgment of forfeiture was rendered against the American Sugar Refinery Company, a California corporation, upon conviction of having become a party to a trust, etc., and immediately after judgment entered an application was filed for appointment of a receiver under the California statute. Pending hearing upon that application, the defendant corporation filed its appeal bond in the main case; and, thereupon, contended that said appeal superseded and stayed any further action on the part of the trial court and deprived it of jurisdiction in the appointment of a receiver. This contention was overruled by the trial court and a receiver appointed who took charge of the property. The cause came before the Supreme Court of California on a writ of prohibition, and in discussing the above contention, and the effect of an appeal in the main case upon the subsequent appointment of a receiver, the court says:

"But it is held in the face of the statute (referring to the opinion of the trial court), that a stay was not possible, and this again upon the plea of necessity in order to prevent an apprehended abuse. We do not think the reason suggested is sufficient to override the law. The allowance of an appeal in such cases implies the right of the corporation to question the validity of a judgment of forfeiture until it has been affirmed here, and it is not correct to say that a stay of proceedings would operate a rehabilitation of a dissolved corporation, when the sole object of the appeal is to determine the question whether there has been a valid judgment of dissolution. But evidently the respondent was unwilling to stand upon the proposition that a stay was not possible. Waiving that and assuming that the judgment has been stayed, he concludes that the power to appoint a receiver is nevertheless suspended because the order of appointment is not embraced in the judgment, and is not a proceeding upon the judgment. It is true that the order of appointment is not embraced in the judgment, but that is not the test. An execution is not embraced in the judgment, but an appeal duly perfected stays execution. In truth, it is not correct to say that a judgment or matters embraced in a judgment are stayed by the appeal, and the statute does not say so. What it says is, that a proceeding upon the judgment and matters embraced therein are stayed by the perfecting of an appeal; that is to say, the execution—the enforcement—of the judgment is suspended. Now, here it is conceded that no receiver of the corporation could be appointed until after judgment, and that the only purpose of his appointment is to carry the judgment into effect by taking away the property of the corporation and scattering it and dividing it. How, then, is it possible that this is not a proceeding upon the judgment? According to the argument, the things to be done by the receiver constitute the only substantial and effective punishment which it is in the power of the State to inflict; the rest is a mere trifle. But it is, nevertheless, held that this ruinous penalty which follows the judgment and but for the judgment could never be inflicted, is not a proceeding upon the judgment, and, therefore, is not stayed by the appeal; and this conclusion is rested upon the authority of rulings which, it is said, have often been made by our courts. Undoubtedly it has often been held that the appointment of a receiver is merely ancillary and undoubtedly his appointment often is merely ancillary; that is to say, he is appointed before judgment for the purpose of protecting, pending the litigation, property which is the subject of the litigation, but sometimes he is appointed after judgment for the purpose of carrying the judgment into effect, in which case his appointment and his proceedings thereunder, are not merely ancillary. In the former case his functions are not necessarily suspended during the appeal, and neither is the power of the court to remove him or control him suspended by the appeal; but in the latter case—as for instance, where a receiver has been appointed to sell mortgaged premises under a decree of foreclosure—his proceedings are suspended by the appeal. * * *

We assume for every purpose of this decision that the judgment of forfeiture in this case was not only just but legal—correct not only in substance but in form—free from error. But it does not follow that all similar cases will be equally well decided. It is possible—the constitution and the laws assume the possibility—that some case may arise in which the judgment of forfeiture will not only be erroneous, but unjust, and that it will be reversed on appeal. But the rule applied in this case must also be applied in that case. If this judgment must be executed in the manner indicated, so must that. A receiver must be appointed. He must seize all the property. He must shut up the factories, discharge the employes, prevent the fulfillment of contracts, subject the corporation to every sort of loss and damage that can be inflicted by the stoppage of a great and complicated industry, having its ramifications throughout the business centers of the entire coast; and not only this; for, if he must go to this extent—if nothing the corporation or its stockholders can do will stop him—then nothing but the forbearance of the superior judge will prevent the completion of the process. For this injury caused by an erroneous judgment, a reversal on appeal affords no redress; for no security has been given by the undertaking of a surety or otherwise to indemnify the corporation or its stockholders. The sureties of the receiver merely undertake that he will faithfully execute the orders of the court; and according to the precedent in this case they are bound in a trifling amount. If the receiver obeys orders, they are exonerated; and if his orders contemplate the infliction of punishment by the indirect and partial destruction of property, the more completely are they exonerated, the greater the damage inflicted for which there is no redress. Unless it is to be assumed that such results as these comport with the justice and policy of a great State, the inevitable consequence of the doctrine contended for utterly condemn it. If, therefore, the State could demand the appointment of a receiver upon the ground and for the purposes stated, the appeal operated as a stay of such proceeding, and for that reason the appointment in this case would have been an excess of authority."

Comment upon the above would seem to be superfluous. We submit that the consequences of the doctrine invoked to sustain the appointment of a receiver in the case at bar are in and of themself sufficient to condemn the soundness of such a doctrine.

(a.) THE APPOINTMENT OF A RECEIVER OF PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR'S PROPERTY FOR THE PURPOSE OF DEPRIVING IT OF THE AGENCY FOR FURTHER OR CONTINUED VIOLATION OF THE ANTI-TRUST ACTS OF TEXAS WITHOUT EVIDENCE OF SUCH INTENDED VIOLATION, AND WITHOUT EVIDENCE THAT IT COULD NOT USE ITS PROPERTY IN COMPLIANCE OF LAW, CONSTITUTES A DEPRIVATION OF SAID PROPERTY OF PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR WITHOUT DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

On page 341 of the transcript in this cause, in the bill of exceptions of plaintiff-in-error, will be found the following, with reference to the hearing on the application of the State of Texas, for the appointment of a receiver; no evidence whatsoever was introduced, the court hearing nothing but argument of counsel:

"After reading the foregoing application, counsel for defendant (plaintiff-in-error) proceeded to argue its said general exception or demurrer to the said application for the appointment of a receiver and at the conclusion of such argument, when counsel for the state started to argue the same, the court announced that it was unnecessary for counsel for the state to make any argument and the court thereupon proceeded to announce his conclusions with respect to said application and defendant's objections thereto, and stated that the court would take judicial notice of the proceedings in the main case and of the rendition of the judgment against the defendant (plaintiff-in-error) for violating the Anti-Trust laws of the State as charged against it in plaintiff's said second amended original petition and that it had been found guilty of violating the said Anti-Trust Laws on each and every day from the 1st day of June, 1900, to the 29th day of April, 1907, and that its permit to do further business in the state had been forfeited and cancelled by reason of said violations; and that defendant had, since May 31, 1900, been a member of an agreement which had its very existence in Texas in violation of the Civil and Criminal Laws of Texas and that it had been and still is in possession of certain instrumentalities by means of which it, in violation of the public welfare and interests, intended to continue its violation of the law pending appeal from the judgment of conviction, and that the defendant would file its proper supersedeas appeal bond from said judgment of conviction but that, notwithstanding defendant's right to so file said supersedeas bond within the time provided by law, the court was of the opinion that the legislature had provided as a remedy or means of preventing defendant from the continued violation of the law that a receiver should be appointed to take charge of its property and business and deprive it of the instrumentalities by which it had so violated the law and would continue to violate the law; and because of such statute and the declared purpose of defendant (plaintiff-in-error), speaking through its general counsel, John D. Johnson, in newspaper interviews which had been brought to the attention of the court, in which said Johnson had discussed the effect of the aforesaid judgment of conviction against defendant (plaintiff-in-error) and had declared the purpose of defendant to appeal from said judgment of conviction and to continue to carry on its business in the same manner it had heretofore done, notwithstanding such judgment of conviction. And without any evidence being submitted to the court in connection with said application, the court thereupon announced that it would grant the said application and appoint a receiver as therein prayed for."

We submit that the action of the court as above set forth is so wholly arbitrary and without foundation in any principle of law or justice that it cannot be treated in any sense as a judicial determination of the right of this plaintiff-in-error, and that it is not entitled to respect in any tribunal. It is difficult to speak with moderation of a decree rendered as this one was; we submit that it was a mere arbitrary edict clothed in the form of a judicial sentence.

Says this Court in Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 274, speaking through Mr. Justice Field:

> "The doctrine invoked by counsel that where a court has once acquired jurisdiction it has a right to decide every question which arises in the cause and its judgment, however erroneous, cannot be collaterally assailed is undoubtedly correct as a general proposition, but like all general propositions, is subject to many qualifications in its application. All courts, even the highest, are more or less limited in their jurisdiction; they are limited to particular causes of actions such as civil or criminal; or to particular modes of administering relief, such as legal or equitable; or to transactions of a special character such as arise on navigable waters or relate to the testamentary disposition of estates; or to the use of particular processes in the enforcement of their judgments. Though the court may possess jurisdiction of a cause, of the subject-matter and of the parties, it is still limited in its mode of procedure and in the extent and character of its judgments. It must act judiciously in all things and cannot then transcend the power conferred by law. If, for instance, the action be upon a money demand, the court, notwithstanding its complete jurisdiction over the subject and parties, has no power to pass judgment of imprisonment in the penitentiary upon the defendant. If the action be for libel or personal tort, the court cannot order in the case a specific performance of a contract. If the action be for the possession of real property, the court is powerless to admit in the case the probate of a will. Instances of this kind show that the general doctrine stated by counsel is subject to many qualifications. The judgments mentioned, given in the cases supposed, would not be merely erroneous; they would be absolutely void, because the court in rendering them would transcend the limits of authority in those cases. See the language of Mr. Justice Miller to the same purport in the case of ex parte Lange, 18 Wallace, 163. So it was held by this court, in Bigelow v. Forrest, 9 Wallace, 351, that a judgment in a confiscation case condemning the fee of the property was void for the remainder after the termination of the life estate of the owner. To the objection that the decree was conclusive that the entire fee was confiscated, Mr. Justice Strong, speaking the unanimous opinion of the Court replied:

'Doubtless a decree of a court having jurisdiction to make the decree cannot be impeached collaterally but under the Act of Congress, the District Court had no power to order a sale which would confer upon the purchaser rights outlasting the life of French Forrest, (the owner). Had it done so, it would have transcended its jurisdiction.'

So a departure from the established modes of procedure will often render the judgment void, thus the sentence of a person charged with felony, upon conviction by the court, without the intervention of a jury, would be invalid for any purpose. The decree of a court of equity upon oral allegations without written pleadings would be an idle act of no force beyond that of an advisory proceeding of the chancellor, and the reason is that courts are not authorized to exert their power in that way.

The doctrine invoked by counsel is only correct when the court proceeds after acquiring jurisdiction of the cause according to the established modes governing the class to which the case belongs and does not transcend in the extent or character of its judgment the law which is applicable to it."

In Hovey v. Elliott (167 U. S. 409), this Court, in discussing the power of a court to punish for contempt, when the defendant is given no opportunity to be heard in his own behalf, speaking through Mr. Justice White, says:

"The fundamental conception of a court of justice is condemnation only after hearing. To say that courts have inherent power to deny all right to defend an action and to render decrees without any hearing whatever is in the nature of things to convert the court exercising such an authority into an instrument of wrong and oppression and, hence, to strip it of that attribute of justice upon which the exercise of judicial power necessarily depends."

We have no desire to argue to any great extent the proposition above laid down, deeming it unnecessary in the light of the authorities above quoted to say anything more than is contained in that portion of the bill of exceptions above quoted, describing the action of the court in the appointment of this receiver. Not one solitary bit of evidence was adduced tending even remotely to show that this plaintiff-in-error intended to violate the Anti-Trust Laws of the State of Texas in any way, shape or form, pending its appeal upon the judgment rendered against it; not a single bit of evidence was offered to show that the property of this plaintiff-in-error could not be used in the State of Texas, except in violation of such Anti-Trust Acts, nothing but the unsupported declaration—if it may be dignified by such a name—of a newspaper alleging that the general counsel of this plaintiff-in-error had declared that the company would continue business in the same way, was before the court and upon this it based its order. If this be equity, we submit that it is equity of a sort wholly new and strange. If this be due process of law, then is the Fourteenth Amendment a hollow mockery and a sham.

XI.

THE TEXAS ACT OF APRIL 11, 1907, IS NULL AND VOID.

1. IN SO FAR AS IT ATTEMPTS TO CREATE A LIEN UPON THE PROPERTY OF PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR FOR ACTS COMMITTED BEFORE SAID ACT TOOK EFFECT.

2. IN SO FAR AS UNDER IT THE RIGHT TO APPOINT A RECEIVER IS LIMITED TO SUITS AGAINST CORPORATIONS ONLY.

3. IN SO FAR AS IT ATTEMPTS TO CREATE A LIEN UPON THE PROPERTY OF PLAINTIFF-IN-ERROR,

SAID LIEN BEING CREATED, NOT BY THE TERMS OF THE ACT BASED ALONE UPON THE COMMISSION OF THE OFFENSE BUT BEING LEFT TO BE CREATED BY THE ACTION OF THE PROSECUTING OFFICER IN FILING SUIT TO RECOVER PRESCRIBED PENALTIES— THE SAME BEING THEREBY AN UNWARRANTED DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER TO AN EXECUTIVE OFFICER.

In so far as it is sought to apply the terms of the Act of April 11, 1907, to this cause and by virtue thereof to assert and enforce a lien upon the property of this plaintiff-in-error, we submit that the Act is within the prohibition of Section 10 of Article 1 of the Constitution of the United States which expressly denies to any state the right to pass an ex post facto law. We submit that the act is not only retrospective and retroactive in its operation in so far as it seeks to authorize the appointment of a receiver to take charge and possession of the property of this plaintiff-in-error in aid of the judgment rendered against it in the trial of this cause, but that it has the express effect of inflicting an additional punishment upon this plaintiff-in-error and of increasing the penalties prescribed under the previous laws to-wit, the Anti-Trust Acts of 1899 and 1903, and that for this reason said act, in so far as it applies to this suit, is wholly unconstitutional and void. We further submit that said Act of April 11, 1907, under which the court acted in appointing said receiver is unconstitutional and void in so far as it authorizes the appointment of a receiver in a suit brought to recover a personal judgment in which no lien upon the property of the defendant in that suit (plaintiff-in-error herein) was ever asserted or adjudicated, and the action of the court in the appointment of a receiver in such cause was consequently within the prohibition of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States which denies the right of any state to deprive a person of property without due process of law, and further prohibits the state from denying a person the equal protection of the laws.

We submit further, that the said Act of April 11, 1903, is in violation of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, in that it confers a special privilege upon the State, as a litigant in its own courts, in the matter of collecting a personal juudgment recovered by the State, and thereby denies to this plaintiff-in-error the equal protection of the law, the necessary result of which is to deprive plaintiff-in-error of its property without due process of law.

The original suit of the State of Texas against this plaintiff-in-error was filed September 22, 1906. The Act above referred to and by virtue of which the receiver was appointed, was passed and went into effect April 11, 1907.

It would seem unnecessary to repeat or make special reference to the argument and authorities heretofore submitted to the court, in connection with other assignments of error, in support of the proposition that the Anti-Trust Acts of 1899 and 1903, for the alleged violation of which this plaintiff-in-error stands convicted, were statutes which undertook to define offenses and to prescribe punishments for purely public wrongs. We consequently assume that it will not be denied that this is essentially a prosecution for the enforcement of the penal laws of the State of Texas; and we, therefore, insist that every principle of law which enters into the definition or punishment of crime, every presumption in favor of a defendant charged with crime, in short, every rule of the criminal law designed to protect a defendant from arbitrary and unwarranted deprivation of life, liberty or property must he held to apply to this proceeding. We, therefore, invoke the express protection of the ex post facto clause of the Federal Constitution with respect to any act of the courts of Texas by virtue of which this plaintiff-in-error is made amenable to the Act of April 11, 1907.

In view of the fact that neither the Anti-Trust Acts nor other laws of the State of Texas prior to the passage of the Act of April 11, 1907, either provided for or authorized the appointment of a receiver for the property of any person standing charged with the commission of a penal offense, and especially of a corporation charged with violating either or both of these Anti-Trust Acts; that no statute existed by virtue of which a lien was created upon the property of such person or corporation as an incident to the alleged violation of any law, or as an incident to the institution of any suit to enforce the law or to punish for an infringement thereof—in the light of these facts, we submit most earnestly that the creation of such lien and the appointment of a receiver increases the punishment of an alleged past offense and that the application of the act, therefore, to this cause, results in making this plaintiff-in-error amenable to an act distinctly ex post facto, thereby invading and infringing its constitutional rights.

We do not wish to burden the court with any lengthy citation of authorities or argument upon the interpretation of the ex post facto clause of the Federal Constitution, and we shall endeavor to confine our authorities and argument essentially to the point here under discussion.

The interpretation of the ex post facto clause in the Federal Constitution, as given in Calder v. Bull (3 Dallas, 388), has never been qualified, and we submit that the two features of lien and receivership, provided for by the Act of April 11, 1907, are essentially an increase of the penalties provided for in the Anti-Trust Acts of 1899 and 1903, and in consequence clearly fall within the second and third definition of an ex post facto law as laid down in Calder v. Bull:

> "An ex post facto law is one which aggravates the crime, makes it greater than when it was committed, changes the punishment and inflicts greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed."

In the later and leading case of Cummings v. Missouri (71 U. S. 277), this provision of the Federal Constitution again came up before this court and was fully and carefully discussed. From the opinion in that case, we desire to make the following extracts as bearing directly upon our arguments herein. After referring to the period of excitement which existed in the State of Missouri during and immediately following the close of the Civil War, when the Missouri Constitution was adopted, the provisions whereof were then before this court for consideration, the court uses this language:

"It was against the excited action of the states under such influences as these that the framers of the Federal Constitution intended to guard. In Fletcher v. Peck (6 Cranch, 137), Chief Justice Marshall, speaking of such action uses this language:

'Whatever respect might have been felt for the State sovereignty, it is not to be disguised that the framers of the constitution viewed with some apprehension the violent acts which might grow out of the feelings of the moment; and that the people of the United States in adopting that instrument, have manifested a determination to shield themselves and their property from the effect of those sudden and strong passions to which men are exposed. The restrictions on the legislative powers of the State are obviously founded in this sentiment; and the constitution of the United States contains what may be deemed a bill of rights for the people of each State.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The constitution (continues the court in discussing Cummings v. Missouri), deals with substance, not shadows. Its inhibition is levelled at the thing, not the name; it intended that the rights of the citizen should be secure against deprivation for past conduct by legislative enactment under any form, however disguised. If the inhibition can be evaded by the form of the enactment, its insertion in the fundamental law was a vain and futile proceeding."

The language of the learned court in the above case, the facts under which that case arose and was presented to this Court, bear a very strong and striking analogy to the case at bar. With all due respect and with no design to introduce into this argument anything not shown by the record, we submit that in view of the well-known fact that prior to and during the time that this case was on trial in the courts of Texas, that State and its people were in the midst of an agitation directed at practically everything bearing the name of "corporation" and especially of "trust," and that the excited passions of the people of the State—whether right or wrong, is not for us to say—were levelled particularly at the Standard Oil Company and any person or corporation connected therewith. It is a fact as shown by the record, that in the midst of all this excitement and feeling between the time when this suit was begun against this plaintiff-in-error in the courts of the State of Texas, a suit based almost entirely upon the charge that a union or combination existed between plaintiff-in-error and the aforesaid Standard Oil Company, at the time when nearly every newspaper in said State was spreading broadcast among the people the assertion that the said Standard Oil Company owned a majority of the stock of this plaintiff-in-error, at a time when the State of Texas was divided into two great opposing camps over a contest respecting the election of a United States Senator and in which contest this suit and the allegations of the State in its petition therein played a prominent role—during this time and before this suit had been concluded in the trial court, and while the same was pending—the legislature of the State of Texas met and passed the Act of April 11, 1907. In the light of these facts we contend that the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in the great case of Cummings v. Missouri, is particularly applicable to the case at bar, and that the sentiment which moved the court in that case, under the facts presented to it, to seek even jealously to protect the rights of the citizen when the same appeared to have been infringed under the stress of undue excitement, must equally animate this Court in reviewing this case, and especially in passing upon the validity of this act.

We come now to a consideration of the second clause of what Mr. Justice Marshall terms a bill of rights for the people of each State. The clause which prohibits the passage of an ex post facto law. By an ex post facto law is meant one which imposes a punishment for an act which was not punishable at the time it was committed or imposes additional punishment to that which was prescribed at the time of the commission of the act; or changes the rules of evidence by which less or different testimony is made sufficient to convict than was required at the time of the commission of the act. We hardly think that it will be contended that the foregoing is anything but a fair statement of the meaning of the term ex post facto law, as the same has been interpreted in the many cases both

State and Federal, in which its meaning has been the subject of consideration.

In Fletcher v. Peck (6 Cranch, 137), Chief Justice Marshall defines an ex post facto law to be one:

> "which renders an act punishable in a manner in which it was not punishable when it was committed."

"Such a law," says this eminent jurist, "may inflict penalties upon the person or may inflict pecuniary penalties which swell the public treasury. The legislature is then prohibited from passing a law by which a man's estate or any part of it shall be seized for a crime which was not declared by some previous law to render him liable to that punishment."

This case of Fletcher v. Peck furnishes a striking example of the fluctuation of public sentiment. In that case the people of the South found in the Constitution of the United States, in the limitations therein imposed upon the powers of the separate States, a protection against oppressive and unjust laws, even as in Cummings v. Missouri that same Constitution was invoked to protect against the hasty and unwise and oppressive act of a State in the excitement following the close of the Civil War. It must seem strange, then, especially to this court, to find the same people who invoked the federal protection against ex post facto laws in Fletcher v. Peck, protesting against the application of the very principles in that case invoked when they are applied to the hasty, ill-considered and prejudiced legislation of these modern times, when such legislation is challenged because in violation of the fundamental principles under which this government was organized, and which, time without number, have been fully declared in the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, prior even to the admission of the State of Texas into the Federal Union. We are urged to make this observation in view of the contention strenuously made by the State in the hearing of this cause below that, since the year 1889, the State of Texas had been enacting laws on the subject of trusts, making each act an enlargement of its predecessor and all evidencing a fixed and continued purpose to control corporations within the State.

We have no desire nor are we called upon to question the power of the legislature of any State to pass laws for the suppression of trusts and combinations, and for the regulation of corporations in order to prevent such evils, but we do contend that all such laws, no matter how salutary and good their purpose may be, must conform to fixed and settled constitutional rules and principles. With reference to the particular act here under consideration, we submit that, under its terms and in the effect which has been given to it in this case, it clearly violates the long settled constitutional provision against the enactment of an ex post facto law. And we further deny the right of the State of Texas by this act to create a lien upon the property of plaintiff-in-error for past offenses or to base the right to appoint a receiver upon the assertion of any such lien. In this, as well as in the act of the court authorizing the seizure of this plaintiff-in-error's property through actual appointment of a receiver, we submit that the provision of the Federal Constitution has been distinctly violated, and this plaintiff-in-error has thereby been unconstitutionally deprived of its property without due process of law.

To illustrate further the application of this law, let us assume that three persons compose a firm and are operating in the oil business in the State of Texas and that three other persons have formed a corporation and are engaged in the same business, and that this firm and this corporation enter into a combination in violation of the anti-trust laws of the State of Texas. Reference to the act in question will show conclusively that the co-partnership does not fall within the terms of the act, but that the corporation does; that a lien may be asserted upon the property of the latter, dating from the institution of the suit against it and a receiver appointed of its property to enable the State to collect the penalties imposed against it, while such a proceeding is wholly without law or authority in the case of the co-partnership. Reference to the act of April 11, 1907, would show that this illustration is correct since nothing in the act refers to anything except "foreign or domestic corporations." The act itself is entitled:

"An act relating to fines, penalties and forfeitures due or to become due to the State of Texas by foreign or domestic corporations to provide for the securing and enforcement of payment thereof; to fix liens upon the property of such corporations to secure payment thereof; to provide for the survival of actions and causes of action in cases of a dissolution or forfeiture of charters or cancellation of permits of such corporations; to provide for the appointment of receivers, fixing venues, providing that this act shall be cumulative of all other laws in force in this State and declaring an emergency."

Elsewhere in this brief (appendix), will be found the full text of the act. We quote the title as above merely to support our contention that the act relates only to corporations and that it distinctly provides for the creation of a lien upon the property of corporations, and corporations only.

The proposition that the seizure of the property of this plaintiff-in-error or the encumbering it with a lien according to the terms of the act of April 11, 1907, does add and add substantially to the punishment provided for the violation of the Anti-Trust Acts of 1899 and 1903, and changes the law providing for such punishment as the same existed at the time of the commission of the acts, which it is alleged constituted an offense—this proposition would seem to be almost too self-evident to require elaboration by way of argument or authority.

Remembering that under the terms of the act under discussion the lien therein asserted is for all practical purposes created at a moment when a suit is filed against a defendant corporation by the State whether the State succeeds in the suit or not, let us examine for a moment the evil effects which will of necessity follow the creation of such a lien in support of our contention that such lien is an additional punishment as against this plaintiff-in-error.

Let us suppose that in this case the courts of the State of Texas had limited the right of the State to recover penalties to a period of two years at $50.00 per day—under a decision that plaintiff-in-error was not amenable to the act of 1899 on account of the bar of the statute of limitations, thereby reducing the maximum which the State could possibly recover to $36,500.00. Now the suit filed against plaintiff-in-error, as the petition therein was originally framed, called for the infliction of penalties aggregating more than $5,000,000.00. In the light of this, can anyone doubt that by the act of filing the suit the credit of this plaintiff-in-error as a merchant—for strictly speaking that is what he was—would be seriously injured and impaired, if not wholly destroyed, since the act of filing the suit against it created this enormous lien upon all its property then or thereafter brought into the State of Texas.

We submit that it is elementary law that a statute which subjects, in criminal prosecutions, for the same offense, one person to a greater or a different punishment than others, or punishes one and not the other, is in violation of the provision in the United States Constitution which prohibits any State from denying to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law. (Pace v. Alabama, 106 U. S. 585; Niagara Fire Insurance Co. v. Cornell, 110 Fed. Rep. 817.)

In this connection, we desire also to submit that, under the rule of strict construction of penal statutes and remembering that the Anti-Trust Acts under which it is sought to punish this plaintiff-in-error are penal, the encumbering of its property by a lien with all the incidents attaching to such encumbrance by way of impairment and destruction of its credit and inability to convey its property freely can be treated as nothing else than the punishment of this plaintiff-in-error before it has been found guilty of any offense. This feature of the case appears so obvious to us that it would seem to require but little discussion. The principle which may be invoked as against this proposition by analogy from the rule of lis pendens or the statutory lien which may arise in the bringing of civil suits can have no application here, for, as we have constantly shown, this is a penal action, a suit for the recovery of a penalty, a suit brought to protect a public right and to redress a public wrong, and whatever be its form, we insist that the defendant therein is entitled to all the protection established by the rules of criminal law? In view of this, we earnestly contend that any law or the action of any court which deprives the defendant in a criminal suit of his property or his liberty before the suit results in a verdict of guilty against him, and a judgment properly entered thereon, is such a glaring violation of due process of law, of the law of the land, which hears before it condemns and punishes, that this alone would be sufficient to justify any court in declaring this act wholly unconstitutional and void. We admit that it is a well-known principle in criminal law and a practice constantly followed to deprive a person of his liberty even before judgment of guilt, and this, perhaps, too, might be extended to a sequestration of his property—but alone and for the express purpose of compelling his appearance in the trial of the cause. No such purpose as this is expressed in the act in question.

In that the appointment of the receiver under the order of the court actually takes the property of plaintiff-in-error from its management and control, we submit that not only is it deprived of the value residing in the use of that property while in the hands of the receiver but that the damage which must necessarily follow to an established business—a business more or less technical in its character, requiring expert and skilled and experienced management, by placing it in the hands of a receiver who cannot be presumed to possess the necessary skill and ability to manage such business in the manner in which its owners managed it—we submit that this is sufficient to show that the punishment of this plaintiff-in-error is materially and substantially increased. In this connection it must also be remembered with respect to the appointment of such receiver that when such receiver is appointed at the suit of the state, and takes charge of the property, administers and manages it as best he can pending the litigation, and then defendant is finally acquitted of the charge presented against it in such suit, even though defendant's business which is now returned to it by the receiver in charge may be found seriously impaired—if not wholly destroyed—no adequate remedy exists to recover any loss so suffered, as against the state.

The suggestion that the appointment of a receiver is an additional remedy for the suppression of trusts and may be therefore justified upon the ground that with respect to "remedies," the provisions of the Federal Constitution prohibiting ex post facto laws do not apply, fails to take into account the elementary rule that it is the substance of the act and not the name which must control and that what cannot be done directly cannot be done indirectly. If this act is treated as purely a remedial measure so far as its form is concerned this court can not close its eyes to the effect which this so called remedial statute must produce upon the property of plaintiff-in-error. The above contention is adequately and strongly answered in the opinion of this court in Cummings v. Missouri.

> "The Constitution deals with substances, not shadows. Its inhibition is levelled at the thing, not the name. It is intended that the rights of the citizen should be secured against deprivation for past conduct by legislative action under any form, however disguised. If the inhibition can be avoided by the form of the enactment, its insertion in the fundamental law was a vain and futile proceeding."

In concluding this branch of our argument, we cannot refrain from saying one word more upon the proposition that in a civil action for the enforcement of a penalty the principle for which we are contending should be applied and to refer in connection therewith to the case of Wilson v. O. & M. R. R. Co. (64 Ill., 542; 16 Am. Rep., 565). In that case the statute imposed a penalty of $50.00 for certain offenses. A subsequent act amended the former so as to authorize a penalty not exceeding $100.00 and contained a proviso that the second act should not apply to proceedings pending under the first act, except so far as to change the amount of the penalty. It was held that the first act was repealed by the second but that the proviso of the latter was unconstitutional as an ex post facto law and that therefore the prosecutions pending under the first act were defeated by the passage of the second.

The case of Havemeyer v. Superior Court, (84 California 327; 24 Pac. 121), which we have fully discussed above, is in many respects decisive of the propositions raised here with respect to the illegality of the appointment of a receiver. The Havemeyer case furnishes an exceptionally strong analogy in that the corporation, defendant in that case, and against whom judgment of forefeiture was rendered (upon the strength of which judgment the receiver was appointed) was a corporation of the State of California, and consequently no question could arise as to the authority of the state court in pronouncing a decree of dissolution. In denying the right of the trial court to appoint a receiver of the property of the corporation after judgment of forfeiture entered against it and holding that the power of the trial court with respect to the property of the corporation wholly ceased when the defendant in the original suit filed its appeal bond from the judgment of forfeiture, the Supreme Court of California in its learned and comprehensive opinion, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Beatty, says, with reference to the contention that the appointment of the receiver in such case is an additional punishment:

> "He (referring to the opinion of the trial judge) asks if it is possible that this controversy between the state and a concern with millions of capital is limited to the imposition of a fine of $5,000.00 and the cancellation of a charter, the duplicate of which can be obtained while we are talking here; and he answers his own question as follows: 'I understand the great interest of the state is to break down the monopoly. To do that it seizes the means and utensils—the business— with which the monopoly has been proceeding; it scatters it; it divides it up; a receiver is appointed for that purpose; that is a part of the penalty; that is a part of the penalty provided by law, because they have forfeited their corporate rights—no other reason.' Translated into terms specifically applicable to the case before us, the meaning of this is that if a corporation, organized for the purpose of refining sugar, enters into a combination with other corporations through the medium of what is called a 'trust' for the purpose of limiting the production and keeping up the price of refined sugar, the courts will not only forfeit its charter and impose the utmost fine which the law prescribes for such offenses but they must go further and by the hands of a receiver seize into their possession all the property of the defunct corporation and especially a sugar refining plant, not for the purpose of preserving and protecting it and as speedily and economically as possible distributing it to those who are equitably entitled, viz: creditors and stockholders, but for the quite opposite purpose of shutting up and condemning it to rust and idleness until such time as it can be unfitted completely for the purpose to which it is best adapted by dividing it up and scattering it. We confess that this is to us a novel doctrine and one which does not upon any ground commend itself to our judgment. It may not be the rule in this state to construe penal legislation strictly, but even here when a court is asked to impose a penalty for infliction of a law the first inquiry is: What penalty does the law prescribe? The answer to this question is sought, not in labored construction of other statutes but in the express terms of the act defining the offense."

The above is but a small portion of a lengthy opinion of the court all of which is based upon the proposition that the appointment of the receiver to take charge of the property of a corporation whose dissolution has even been decreed, to say nothing of merely fining it and ousting it from the state, is distinctly and in every sense the imposition of a penalty.

We come now to the consideration of the proposition that the Texas Act of April 11th, 1907, in so far as under it the right to appoint a receiver is limited exclusively to suits against corporations, is unconstitutional and void in that it provides different penalties for the same offense when committed by different defendants and thereby is a denial of the equal portection of the laws. We submit that this element of the act in question constitutes an arbitrary and unwarranted differentiation between persons and imposes burdens upon one class where none are imposed upon another for doing precisely the same act in violation of the same law. Elsewhere in this argument we have pointed out that under the act a combination entered into between a co-partnership and a corporation, making both parties liable to the penalties under the Anti-Trust Act would, in the case of the corporation, subject it to the provisions of the Act of April 11th, 1907, and authorize the appointment of a receiver of its property pending an appeal; but not so in the case of the partnership equally guilty with the corporation. In the one case the lien is created upon the property of the corporation, a cloud upon the title to its property is created from the time the suit is filed but none of these burdens fall upon the co-partnership. We utterly fail to see that the fact that one is a corporation and the other is not, makes any substantial difference and we submit that any classification of this character, if indeed the legislature intended to make a classification, is wholly capricious and unwarranted by every rule of law. In this case we have a foreign corporation which as a matter of fact cannot be dissolved by the decree of any court of Texas, and which, even if its permit to do business in the state is canceled, still remains the owner of its property, and is still vested with all the right to carry on an interstate business or sell its property. That the creation of a lien or, perhaps more properly speaking, the claim of a lien, arising from filing suit against such firm corporation must constitute a serious impairment and a substantial injury to its ownership of its property cannot be questioned. And yet under the act under discussion the individual or the co-partnership is relieved from this burden and the corporation is made to bear it.

If the lien herein asserted were made to spring from the judgment of conviction it might well be claimed that the individual would stand bound for all of his property for its satisfaction while only the property of a corporation as such could be reached. But that is not the case here. The result here is to cloud the title to the property of the corporation even long before it is found guilty, to embarrass it in the conduct of its affairs and disable it in carrying on its business, to prevent it from creating liens upon its property for needed extensions, improvements and repairs and from borrowing money on its general credit or buy goods in the usual course of its business, because under this law all the property which the corporation has in the state or all the property which it may bring within the state after the suit against it is filed is impressed with this lien which takes into no account the right of the corporation to sell goods and pass the title thereto to the purchaser in due course of trade—the result of all this can be none other than the destruction of the business of the corporation from the moment the suit is filed, when the individual or the co-partnership who may be joint offenders with it and who may be equally sued as such are left free to continue their business unembarrassed and unhindered by such an encumbrance. We submit that such a law presents such a glaring inequality, one so patent and so far reaching in its unjust effect, that it requires no argument to show that it is a plain violation of the principle of the equal protection of the laws.

We assume in this connection that it will not be contended that a foreign corporation doing business within a state is not entitled to the protection of the Federal Constitution as herein invoked in the same degree as any person or domestic corporation.

We have already pointed out in connection with the discussion of the effect of the appeal in the main case herein in staying further proceedings by way of the appointment of a receiver, that the application of such law to a corporation chartered under the laws of the state, whose chartered existence could be destroyed by the court was illegal, and void in that such a law was a denial of the equal protection of the law, and that in such cases it had been uniformly held that an appeal from the judgment of dissolution under a supersedeas bond has the effect of holding the judgment in abeyance and continuing the corporation as a living entity until such judgment is affirmed. Such was the distinct holding of the court in the Havemeyer Case, supra, and such was the distinct holding of the court in Jackson v. Trunk Railway Company, 85 Texas, 605.

If the authorities are correct, the only other means of escaping the conclusion that such law is invalid is to insist that this statute cannot be applied to state corporations but is limited in its application solely to foreign corporations.

With respect to the question of classificaation herein involved, we respectfully refer the court to the learned opinion of Mr. Justice Brewer in the case of the G. C. & S. F. R. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150; 41 L. ed. 666. We might well be justified in quoting the entire opinion in that case since almost every word said therein has a distinct bearing upon the case at bar. We content ourselves merely with saying that in that case this Court distinctly held that corporations are persons within the provisions of the 14th Amendment and that a state has no more power to deny to them the equal protection of the law than it has to individual citizens. The state statute under examination in that case provided for the imposition of an attorney's fee not to exceed $10.00, in addition to costs, upon railway corporations omitting to pay certain claims within a certain time after presentation. This court finding that the act applied to no other corporations and to no individuals declared it unconstitutional as denying the railway companies the equal protection of the laws. And in discussing the question of classification therein raised, Mr. Justice Brewer declared that a classification, to relieve a statute from the charge of a denial of the equal protection of the law, must be one which is not made arbitrarily, but must be based upon some defense which in all circumstances bears a just and proper relation to the attempted classification. We take the liberty of inviting the particular attention of the Court to this case.

In concluding our argument on this point we submit that if the act in question contained no other phase, than the one herein pointed out, this alone is enough to condemn it. And when consideration is taken of the serious and far-reaching effect produced upon the business and property of this plaintiff-in-error by the application of a right based upon this statute, the viciousness of the act must seem even more apparent.

We further submit that the Act of April 11, 1907, is unconstitutional and void and in violation of Section 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution in that it does not provide for a fixed and uniform rule of law applicable to all persons alike, but is a delegation of the legislative power to an officer of the executive department to create or not to create a lien as in his wisdom he may see fit and thereby to discriminate between persons at will. Section 1 of the Act in question declares.

> "That the State of Texas shall have a lien on all such property from the date that suit shall be instituted by the Attorney-General or District or county attorney acting under his direction, in any court of competent jurisdiction within this state for the purpose of forfeiting the charter or cancelling the permit of such corporations or for such fines or penalties. The institution of such suit for such fine, penalties or forfeiture shall constitute notice of such lien."

The above language can admit of but one construction, to-wit, that under and by virtue of it the Attorney-General of the state has it within its power at all times to encumber the property of any corporation by filing a suit against it either to forfeit its charter or cancel its permit or merely to recover penalties, or both, whether such suit be founded upon facts which he may reasonably believe constitute a sufficient cause of action or not. If it be contended in answer to this that it must be presumed that the Attorney-General of the state will exercise the duties of his office lawfully and without prejudice, etc., we nevertheless submit that this is an unwarranted delegation of legislative power, and that even though it is admitted that the Attorney-General will act in good faith the "law of the land" does not contemplate that the property of a corporation shall be at all times subject to the imposition of a lien whether arbitrarily or mistakenly created without at least some redress to the corporation for damages which it may suffer thereby.

In the case of the Mayor of Baltimore v. Radecke (49 Md., 217; 33 Am. Rep., 239), a city ordinance prohibited any person from putting up a stationary steam engine without the consent of the mayor and council and provided for the revocation of such permit, and to compel the removal of such engines on six months' notice; it was held unreasonable and void in that it was an improper delegation of legislative authority. In commenting upon the power thus delegated to the mayor, the Supreme Court of Maryland says:

> "But it commits to the unrestrained will of a single public officer the power to notify every person who now employs a steam engine in the prosecution of any business in the City of Baltimore to cease to do so. And by providing compulsory fines for every days' disobedience of such notice and order of removal renders his power over the use of steam in that city practically absolute so that he may prohibit its use altogether, but if he should not choose to do this but only to act in particular cases, there is nothing in the ordinance to guide or control his action. It lays down no rules by which its impartial execution can be secured or partiality and oppression prevented. It is clear that giving and enforcing these notices may and quite likely will bring ruin to the business of those against whom they are directed. While others from whom they are withheld may be actually benefited by what is thus done to their neighbors. And when we remember that this action or non-action may proceed from enmity or prejudice, from partisan zeal or animosity, from favoritism and other improper influences and motives easy of concealment and difficult to be detected and exposed, it becomes unnecessary to suggest or to comment upon the injustice capable of being wrought under cover of such a power, for that becomes apparent to every one who gives to the subject a moment's consideration. In fact an ordinance which clothes a single individual with such power hardly falls within the domain of law, and we are constrained to pronounce it inoperative and void."

We have quoted the above not only for the purpose of showing the effect of the delegation of such power to an executive officer but even more for the purpose of showing that the courts will not hesitate to take into consideration the evil effects which may be produced by the arbitrary exercise of such power, even in the face of a presumption that public officers will execute the duties of their office bona fide and without prejudice.

The cases might be multiplied in which ordinances and statutes of this character have been held null and void, not only upon the ground that they denied the equal protection of the laws, but that they were unreasonable and arbitrary and in violation of the principle that legislative power cannot be delegated to either department of the government. As was said by this court in the leading case of Yick Wo. v. Hopkins (118 U. S. 366):

> "The guaranty of equal protection of the laws is a pledge of the protection of equal laws."

In Barbier v. Connolly, (113 U. S. 27), this court in construing this provision of the Fourteenth Amendment declared that

> "It was undoubtedly intended not only that there should be no arbitrary deprivation of life or liberty or arbitrary spoliation of property but that equal protection and security should be given to all under like circumstances in the enjoyment of their personal and civil rights; that all persons should be equally entitled to pursue their happiness and to acquire and enjoy property; that they should have like access to the courts of the country for the protection of their persons and property or prevention and redress of wrong and the enforcement of contracts, that no impediment should be imposed upon the pursuits of anyone except as applied to the same pursuits of others under like circumstances; and that no greater burdens should be laid upon one than are laid upon others in the same calling and condition."

In concluding this brief and argument, we cannot refrain, in the light of all the facts in this case as exhibited by the record, to invite the attention and thoughtful consideration of the court to the words of Mr. Justice Matthews, speaking for this court in Yick Wo. v. Hopkins, (118 U. S. 356):

> "When we consider the nature and theory of our institutions of government, the principles upon which they are supposed to rest and review the history of their development, we are constrained to conclude that they do not mean to leave room for the play and action of purely personal and arbitrary power."

The above words seem, to us at least, to have a particular signification when applied to this case. The first official act of this nation proclaimed the theory upon which all government is founded in words which have ever since been the star of hope to other nations of the world:

> "We hold these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

While it may be true, as has been said by this Court on several occasions, that this Declaration, the fundamental principles, therein contained, may not have all the force of organic law or be made the basis of judicial decisions as to the limitations to be imposed upon rights and duties, we must not forget that in this Declaration rests the spirit of the organic law of this nation and the letter of the Constitution must always be construed in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence. That duty rests imperatively and unceasingly upon the Federal Courts of this land, and more especially upon this court.

We have endeavored in this argument, oft-times at the cost of no little self-restraint, to be temperate in our language and whenever we have attacked the laws of the State of Texas and their application to plaintiff-in-error herein, we have endeavored to do so, constantly remembering the position to which defendant-in-error, in this case, is entitled by reason of the fact that it is one of the States of this Union. But with all due deference to the dignity and position occupied by defendant-in-error, we assert, that in our opinion, few cases have ever been presented to this Court exhibiting such a glaring denial of constitutional rights as is presented by the case at bar. If the theological doctrine of vicarious punishment has become a principle of our law, then, indeed, is the judgment below correct and should be sustained. But if this doctrine does not find place in our law, then are the proceedings and the judgment below worthy of naught but condemnation.

Respectfully submitted.

H. S. PRIEST,
of Counsel.

APPENDIX.

ACT OF APRIL 11, 1903.

An act relating to fines, penalties and forfeitures due or to become due to the State of Texas by foreign or domestic corporations; to provide for the securing and enforcement of payment thereof; to fix liens upon the property of such corporation to secure payment thereof; to provide for the survival of actions, and causes of action in case of the dissolution or forfeiture of charters or cancellations of permits of such corporations; to provide for the appointment of receivers, fixing venue, providing that this act shall be cumulative of all other laws in force in this State, and declaring an emergency.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Texas:

Section 1. Whenever any corporation created under the laws of this State, or any foreign corporation authorized to do business in this State, shall violate any law of this State, including any law against trusts, monopolies and conspiracies, or combinations, or contracts in restraint of trade, for the violation of which fines or penalties or forfeitures are provided, all property of such corporation within the State at the time of such violation, or which may thereafter come within this State, shall, by reason of such violation, become liable for such fines or penalties and all costs of suit and of collection, and the State of Texas shall have a lien on all such property from the date that suit shall be instituted by the Attorney-General or District or County Attorney acting under his direction in any court of competent jurisdiction within this State for the purpose of forfeiting the charter or canceling the permit of such corporations, or for such fines or penalties. The institution of such suit for such fine, penalties or forfeiture shall constitute notice of such lien. Where any such law has heretofore been violated, or shall be violated before the taking effect of this act, and a cause of action exists for such fine, penalties or forfeiture, or shall come into existence before the taking effect of this act, and suit shall be filed in such case, the State shall have a lien to secure the payment of such fine, penalties and costs from the time this act shall take effect on all property of such corporation within this State or which shall thereafter come or be brought within the State.
